Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is the point. My distinguished friend says if there is any act of a judge which would constitute misconduct within the meaning of that provision of the Constitution, he now would be glad to enumerate it. In other words, he wants it to be so that a judge can be removed for any act which is violative of the good-behavior provision of the Constitution. The way to make that certain is to leave the good-behavior provision in the Constitution exactly as it is and to make provision for removal if he violates it.

May I call attention again to the fact that the distinguished gentleman from New York has just stated that if he knew there were any other things which would constitute misbehavior within the meaning of that provision of the Constitution, he now would include it. The way to be sure we include it is not to enumerate them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the committee substitute do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

The amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota to the committee amendment: In section 1, line 15, after the word "court", to strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following words: "the Senate shall designate four of its Members to serve on such court."

THE SENATE'S VOICE IN REMOVAL OF JUDGES IS THE VOICE OF THE STATES AND THE PEOPLE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to call attention to what this bill is actually doing. This bill is changing the entire procedure in the matter of court tenure. It proposes to take from the Senate all voice in the removal of Federal judges.

Judges of district courts at the present time are appointed with the consent of the Senate, and section 3 of article I of the Constitution says "the Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments."

This means that at the present time the Senate has a voice in the appointment and a voice in the removal of any Federal judge. It has "the sole power to try all impeachments." If the proposed removals should be impeachment proceedings, if they had the dignity of impeachment proceedings, undoubtedly, the trial would have to be by the Senate.

You must hold one of two things, either charges are serious enough to impeach a judge, or they are too trivial to go through that procedure. If they are too trivial, then why should the power of the Senate to have a voice in the removal or nonremoval of the judge be curbed?

A removal from office is a removal whether you call it an impeachment, an ouster, or something else. By any name, it is a check on judicial tenure.

I do not know what the sentiment of this body may be. Perhaps we are not concerned with upholding the power and dignity of the Senate, but every argument in the development of the American Government with respect to the power of the Senate or the right of each State to have two Senators, is at stake here so far as the protection of the people or the protection of the judiciary is concerned. [Applause.]

If you say to the Senate that it shall have no voice in the removal of judges, there is no possibility of this bill being accepted by the Senate, because it strikes directly at what the Senate may or may not do at any time in preserving the integrity and independence of the judiciary.

You may vote this amendment down; it is probably unworkable to have a removal court consist of three judges and four Senators; but as surely as this bill goes to the Senate I look for the Senate to reassert its right to have a voice in the matter to tenure of judges in the United States. [Applause.] And for the sake of the rights of the people and the Union, which was made possible by the compromise which gave each State two Senators, I hope it does.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee will vote down the amendment of my distinguished friend, and I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURDICK to the committee amendment: Section 1, line 7, after the word "shall", insert the word "immediately."

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing serious about this amendment at all. The only purpose in offering this amendment is to get a chance to say just a few words in favor of the bill itself.

The way the rules of this House are organized there is no chance for anyone to discuss these bills unless he becomes a member of the committee. As everyone knows, I am a member of no committee except this Committee of the Whole House, and if we stayed here all night, I was determined that I would offer an amendment so that I could be heard on the bill. I want the people of this country to know how difficult it is to express yourself in the Congress of the United States. Some men have spoken four or five times on this bill who have indicated they do not know anything about it at all. [Laughter.] Let me say that there never has been and there never will be a prosecution of any Federal judge in this country under article III, section 1 of the Constitution that has been read here this afternoon, for bad behavior unless we set up the machinery for it. Every judge who has ever been tried and every judge who has been found guilty has been found guilty of one of these charges enumerated in article II, section 4 of an act amounting to treason, bribery, or other high crimes or misdemeanors. No judge has ever even been tried for misbehavior, and as one who has practiced in the Federal courts for a great number of years I know of a hundred different things that Federal judges are guilty of that make them unfit to sit on the bench, and none of these come under the provisions of treason, bribery, or high crimes or misdemeanors.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. No. Everybody has been yielding to the gentleman for the last 4 hours, and we have not received any further information. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I did not make this motion for the purpose of inserting the word "immediately." I do not care what you do with it. I want to be heard in favor of this bill, and unless this Congress sets up machinery by which you can try judges whose conduct is bad but not amounting to treason, bribery, or other high crimes or misdemeanors, they will never be tried. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the substitute amendment and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I want to have 2 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I modify that request by having debate close in 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the substitute amendment and all amendments thereto close in 2 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I have asked these 2 minutes in order to tell the gentleman from North Dakota——

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. No; not now.

Mr. BURDICK. Then I want as much time as the gentleman has.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this minute or two to tell my courteous friend, the gentleman from North Dakota, that the Senate of the United States has determined that any conduct on the part of a judge which brings into disrepute his office as a judge is bad behavior. So there has been established a yardstick as to what constitutes behavior that is not good behavior on the part of a Federal judge. The Court of Impeachment has settled quite definitely that question. The accepted definition as announced by former Chief Justice Taft, and quoted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], by the rule of precedent has become fixed and definite. Under the procedure contemplated by this bill no standard is provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. MILLER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that sections 2, 3, and 4 of the original bill be stricken therefrom.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Attorney General, by himself or by counsel designated by him, or of such counsel as may be designated by the House of Representatives, to institute on behalf of the United States, and to represent the United States in, a civil action in such court to determine the right of such judge to remain in office. In any such action, the United States shall have all the rights and duties of a plaintiff in a civil action in the Federal courts and the judge shall have all the rights and duties of a defendant in such an action. All matters of procedure in any such action shall be governed by rules prescribed by the Supreme Court, but the trial shall be without a jury.

SEC. 3. If the court determines that the behavior of the judge has been other than good behavior within the meaning of that term as used in section 1 of article III of the Constitution, the judgment of the Court shall be that the judge is thereupon removed from office, but no other penalty shall be imposed by the Court. No appeal shall lie from the judgment of the Court.

SEC. 4. This Act shall apply to all judges of courts of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories and possessions, who hold their offices during good behavior, except the judges of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the judges of the circuit courts of appeal, and the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2271, and pursuant to House Resolution 227, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 221, nays 125, not voting 85, as follows:

Mr. HAMILTON changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I voted by mistake for the gentleman from New York, Mr. MERRITT, when his name was called. I should like to have that correction made.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right of object, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon during the debate under the 5-minute rule there was some discussion between the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] and myself as to what had transpired during the general debate, with particular reference to a statement made by the gentleman from Arkansas that some Members had referred to the committee amendment during the general debate, at which time I stated I knew of no Member who referred particularly to the substitute amendment offered by the committee to the bill. If the Members of the House are to revise and extend their remarks, and any Member should, in the revision of his remarks, make reference to that substitute amendment, of course that would put me in a ridiculous position. If, on the other hand, the RECORD indicates I was in error I should be glad to apologize to the gentleman from Arkansas. I still think I am right in the matter. I shall not object, with the understanding that any remarks made prior to the statement I made on the floor should not contain any reference to the substitute amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I understand the workability of that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is proper to state that the Chair cannot undertake to censor any remarks that may have been made. The gentleman must object or not object to the request.

Is there objection?

Mr. BOILEAU. Further reserving the right to object, I shall not object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is proper to state that the statement made in explanation by the gentleman from Wisconsin will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. BOILEAU. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker; but in the event something should appear in the RECORD which would make it appear that I was wrong in my statement it would be necessary for me to make a further statement, and I would have to check up on the original transcript, which I would certainly do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 251

Resolved, That MARY T. NORTON, of New Jersey, be, and she is hereby, elected chairman of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Labor.

The resolution was agreed to.

MEMBER OF COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 252

Resolved, That GRAHAM A. BARDEN, of North Carolina, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Labor.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the majority leader about the program for tomorrow. Of course, it is Calendar Wednesday, but I understand there will be an effort made to bring up a matter from the Committee on Ways and Means. Is that correct?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound an inquiry to the gentleman from Texas. I understood the gentleman from Texas to say he intends to bring up a measure from the Ways and Means Committee tomorrow. Tomorrow is Calendar Wednesday, and the committees that have the call are entitled to the time, as I understand it, under the rules of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct; and anybody can object who desires to object. However, it is thought that the matter from the Ways and Means Committee will take but a short time, and then we will go on with the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it will have its day tomorrow.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have objected to everybody getting time to speak on Calendar Wednesday for the reason that it seems that the only chance we have to get up a bill for veterans' legislation we now have on the calendar is when our turn comes on Calendar Wednesday. The Committee on Ways and Means can call up their legislation at any time because it is privileged. They do not need to ask unanimous consent. I hope that the gentleman from Texas will let that measure go over until Thursday instead of trying to take it up on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from North Carolina is going to ask unanimous consent tomorrow to call up the bill, which is very necessary.

Mr. RANKIN. What subject does it deal with?

Mr. RAYBURN. It provides funds for the operation of the railroad retirement act, and should be passed before the 1st of July.

Mr. RANKIN. I serve notice on the gentleman from Texas now that I am going to object to the Ways and Means Committee taking up any time on Calendar Wednesday until after we get our veterans' bill considered. That measure can wait till Thursday.

Mr. SNELL. The calendar has been called twice. The gentleman has had more than usual opportunity to get his bill before the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from New York that we have called the calendar four times this session.

Mr. RANKIN. The Ways and Means Committee reports are privileged and can just as well be called up on Thursday as to be called up on Calendar Wednesday. I certainly shall object to the Ways and Means Committee taking up time on Calendar Wednesday until after we dispose of this widows, orphans, and gold star mothers' bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman think his bill would be advanced by objecting to this request? I may say to the gentleman that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has agreed to this and will call up his Indian bills after the Ways and Means Committee bill is disposed of.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand; but it takes up the time of the House. After bills from the Committee on Indian Affairs are disposed of the call goes to other committees. Every other bill that is taken up on Calendar Wednesday by unanimous consent just postpones by that much the time when we can get a vote on this gold star mothers' bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman from Mississippi knew that the Committee on Indian Affairs had 15 bills, all controversial, he probably would not object.

Mr. RANKIN. I know, too, however, that Indian bills sometimes pass in the House as rapidly as they do in the Senate, and we might get rid of all the bills from that committee tomorrow. I hope the gentleman from Texas will carry the matter over until Thursday.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC WORKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BY SECRETARY OF NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplementary report on the bill (H. R. 6547) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SACKS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is proper to state that under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is entitled to be recognized for 15 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois has informed the Chair that it is not his purpose to use all of that time.

Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for the purpose of permitting the Chair to entertain these unanimous-consent requests?

Mr. MASON. I yield for that purpose, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include some remarks which I made at the dedication of the new Marine Hospital at Memphis a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the life and character of Warren J. Duffey, late a Member of the House from the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an address delivered by my colleague the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES] in my district a few evenings ago in which she made many pertinent and kindly remarks relative to the subject of the payment of the war debts owed to the United States by foreign countries. I believe that her remarks on this subject deserve the careful reading of the Members of this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ALLEN of Delaware asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.]

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the life and character of a former Member of this House, the late Franklin W. Fort, of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a resolution passed by the Oklahoma State Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was unable to be present at the roll call on the passage of the railroad retirement bill, being unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SOIL CONSERVATION AND THE EVER-NORMAL GRANARY

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker and Members of Congress, I propose to use the time alloted to me, first, to discuss in general terms the so-called farm problem; and, second, to point out the major provisions of H. R. 3687, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1937, and comment briefly upon those provisions.

History records many attempts of man to ignore the unchangeable laws of God. Without exception each attempt has ended in disaster. History teaches, therefore, that mankind cannot ignore natural law and prosper.

In 1929 a Republican administration made a sincere attempt to solve the so-called farm problem by establishing a Federal Farm Board under the chairmanship of Alexander Legge. The intention of the Republican leaders was praiseworthy, the plan was unsound. In an address at that time to a group of Illinois farmers I said, "Congress has given the Federal Farm Board an impossible task to perform. It is bound to end in failure." It did end in failure. Many millions were spent, but little accomplished.

In 1933, when Secretary Wallace set out to bring about "the more abundant life" by destroying foodstuffs and curtailing production, he went contrary to natural law. He thought he could create wealth by destroying wealth. He attempted to feed the hungry by making foodstuffs scarce. It was an expensive experiment. It cost the Nation billions of dollars, yet to be paid, but did not solve the problem.

At that time I advocated the ever normal granary plan in speeches and newspaper articles. The following article, published in September 1934, expressed my views then; and I have had no reason to change them since:

WHICH—OVERPRODUCTION OR UNDERCONSUMPTION?

Times have changed. Twenty years ago every farmer, every farm adviser, and every farm expert were bending their energies, concentrating their thought, upon the problem of soil fertility. They advised rotation of crops. They studied the effect of limestone and phosphate upon the soil. They planned to capture nitrogen from the air and imprison it in the soil by growing clover and alfalfa. Their whole purpose was to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before, two bushels of corn grow where one bushel grew before. Our dairy, poultry, cattle, and hog experts devoted their energies toward breeding cows that would give twice the quantity of milk per cow; hens that would lay twice as many eggs per hen; cattle and hogs that would give more pounds of beefsteak and bacon per animal for the amount of feed consumed. The whole aim or object of farm life was to make foodstuffs plentiful, available to all, and thereby bring about prosperity and happiness for all.

But times have changed. Today, our farmers and our farm advisers seem intent upon making one blade of grass grow where two blades grew last year; 1 bushel of corn grow where 2 bushels of corn grew last year. Today, we deliberately plan to curtail milk production, pig production, beef production, to create a scarcity, to force higher prices, to bring back prosperity and happiness for all.

I am wondering about this new scheme of things. I am doubtful about the soundness of this scarcity plan. Most people are also wondering. I ask myself the question: With millions of people in need of food, starving, with millions of people in rags, is there a surplus of foodstuffs and cotton that must be destroyed? Should we plow under cotton, throw pigs into rivers, and destroy foodstuffs? Is the problem not one of underconsumption rather than one of overproduction, because the millions in want haven't the purchasing power to buy what they need and should have?

I am wondering today also why the Federal Government is spending millions of dollars out West to build dams, to impound water, to irrigate desert acres, to produce more crops, and at the same time the Federal Government is spending millions of dollars to keep out of production fertile Illinois acres. I confess I am confused. I am doubtful. I am wondering. I believe this deep, black, fertile Illinois soil was placed here to be made use of. I believe we are going contrary to common sense, and to nature, when we spend millions of dollars of taxpayers' money to make desert acres produce crops, and at the same time order fertile Illinois acres to grow weeds. Because I believe many of our Illinois farmers are wondering about these things, I want to tell an old, old story, a true story, one found in God's Holy Word, a story that has a direct bearing upon the farmer's problem today.

Many years ago in the land of Egypt the King was confronted with the problem of a real crop surplus. He didn't know what to do, so he called his Brain Trust in and held a consultation over the matter. One bright young professor, only 30 years old—Joseph, by name—suggested a plan that was approved by the King. So the King made Joseph a dictator over all the land and gave him full power over all crop production. Did Joseph order cotton plowed under? Did Joseph order cattle and pigs destroyed? He did not. What did Joseph do? He sent out word to all the farmers of Egypt to grow as much grain as they could, to make their fertile acres produce as much as possible, and he gave orders at the same time that all surplus crops should be bought from the farmers by the Government at a fair price. By doing this he pegged the price of corn and prevented prices of farm products from falling below a fair established price, and the farmers prospered and were happy.

You know the rest of the story; how the 7 fat years gave place to the 7 lean years. How chinch bugs, grasshoppers, and the drought brought about a scarcity, and famine was in the land. Then Joseph unsealed the cribs, opened the storehouses and granaries, and fed the people with the accumulated surplus. The Government even made a profit by selling to other nations who were also suffering from famine.

I wonder if the Egyptian plan, Joseph's plan, God's plan, as recorded in His Holy Word, was not set forth for the guidance and information of our Tugwells and Wallaces. I believe it was. I also feel that insofar as our Federal Government has followed this plan, it has done well. Pegging the price of corn at 45 cents was a good thing. Buying up wheat, cattle, hogs, and feeding the starving people with them was also a good thing. But the destruction of foodstuffs, the plowing under of cotton, the killing of millions of little pigs and brood sows about to farrow cannot be justified, even as an experiment. To my way of thinking it is nothing less than a national crime. As a boy I was taught that it was sinful to waste good food, to destroy anything needed by society. Wholesale destruction by the Government, with millions in need, can only be classed as sin on a large scale. Nothing good can come out of wanton, deliberate, ordered destruction of foodstuffs by any government that calls itself Christian. I am wondering if the gentlemen that ordered it, Tugwell & Co., consider themselves Christians.

I was criticized very severely by some of the farm leaders at that time for daring to find fault with Wallace's farm program. You will recall that September 1934 was before the "honeymoon was over." It gives me considerable satisfaction today to see that the ever-normal granary is now a part of the Wallace program for farm relief.

H. R. 3687, the Agricultural Act of 1937, now before the Committee on Agriculture, but not yet before the House, is a composite bill that covers the following major farm relief programs:

a. Soil conservation. (Good.)
b. The ever-normal granary. (Good.)
c. Restricted production. (Doubtful.)
d. Marketing quotas. (Doubtful.)

The soil-conservation program contained in the bill is designed, according to the language of the bill, "To conserve our national soil resources and prevent the wasteful use of soil fertility." This is in line with the program that Frank O. Lowden has advocated for many years. It is necessary in order to guard against a scarcity of food products in the future, with consequent high prices and necessity for large importations. I have labeled this section of the bill "Good."

The need for the ever-normal granary, provided for in this bill, has been brought home to the American people very forcibly the last few years by the unpredictable droughts, the devastating dust storms, and the grasshopper and chinch-bug plagues that have offset the puny, futile efforts of man to regulate production, and that made necessary the importation of $1,000,000,000 worth of farm products during the past year. Because of this, I have also labeled this section of the bill "Good."

The program of restricted production contained in the bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture power to determine the acreage that may be planted in each basic crop; to estimate the normal yield; to make allowance for a stated carryover; and, when necessary, to require the cooperating farmer to reduce the acreage allowed him for that crop, and divert it to other uses. This program is inconsistent when we consider the millions of dollars already spent, the millions of dollars now being spent, and the millions more just appropriated to be spent, for the purpose of placing in production vast stretches of desert acres, now idle, to compete with fertile acres already under cultivation. This is a plain case of one branch of the Government working at cross purposes with another branch; a case of "the right hand not knowing what the left hand doeth." Restricted reclamation of desert acres should go hand in hand with restricted production upon fertile acres. Until that is brought about I label this provision "doubtful."

The marketing quota provision, which is the only mandatory provision contained in the bill, states that the American farmer, whenever the total supply of any basic crop reaches a certain level above the established normal supply, shall be given a marketing quota by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that if he sells any more than the marketing quota assigned him, he will be required to pay a penalty upon the excess sold of 50 percent of the parity price. The bill provides that penalties are to be recovered by civil action brought in the name of the United States by the United States district attorney in each district.

These are the provisions of the section concerning excess-marketing penalties. These penalties are to be applied to all farmers, whether cooperators or not, and are mandatory and restrictive upon all alike.

The argument advanced for this mandatory requirement is the necessity for stabilizing the market price for all; and the claim is that this is the only possible method of doing so when surpluses exist. Until more light is shed upon this provision of the bill, I have labeled it also "doubtful."

And now Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist calling the attention of the Congress to the fact that the two outstanding good features of the bill, soil conservation and the ever-normal granary, comprise essentially the farm program long advocated by the Honorable Frank O. Lowden, the grand old man of Illinois. He knows more about the Nation's farm problem than any other man in the United States. He has given more study to the problem than any other man.

He has given more time to it than any other man. He was interested in and fully aware of this problem when most of our present Government farm experts were still wearing diapers. He would have solved our farm problem long ago if he had been given the opportunity.

As you know, Lowden was a candidate for the Presidency in 1920 and again in 1928. Both times he was the farmer's candidate, the farmer's champion. If the Republican Party had nominated Lowden for the Presidency either in 1920 or in 1928, he would have been elected. But the Republican leaders that were in control of the Elephant upon each of those occasions could not see that there was a serious farm problem, and so they turned thumbs down upon Lowden. The result was continued distress for the farmers of the Nation, and the defeat of the Republican Party in 1932.

The farm problem is not a partisan problem. It is a problem that needs the best thought of the leaders on both sides of the aisle. It is one that requires sane, sound, careful, farseeing action if it is to be properly and permanently solved. It affects the welfare of the city dweller as well as the farmer. It has been with us a long time awaiting a proper solution. It should be solved by this Congress.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I ask, Is Congress big enough and nonpartisan enough to solve the vexing farm problem? The answer is "yes", emphatically "yes"! The question is, however, Will we do it?

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, of Texas (at the request of Mr. THOMASON of Texas), on account of death in family.

To Mr. KVALE (at the request of Mr. BOILEAU), for 1 week, on account of illness.

To Mr. DEEN, for several days, on account of important business.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2709. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Resolution of the Tacoma Central Labor Council, Tacoma, Wash., H. S. McIlvaigh, secretary, pointing out that employees of municipalities ought in all logic be given the benefits of the Social Security Act, and therefore requesting that Members of Congress support an amendment to the Social Security Act blanketing under such act such employees for the benefit and protection thereby accorded; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2710. Also, resolution of the American Radio Telegraphists' Association, Local No. 6, Seattle, Wash., T. J. Van Ermen, secretary, stating that the pending Sheppard-Hill bill lays the basis for military dictatorship and industrial mobilization, and instead of removing the causes of war tends to increase the danger of war; insisting that such legislation will promote fascism under the excuse of war emergency, and therefore urging that Congress defeat the Sheppard-Hill bill, and thus protect our citizens and their civil liberties; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2711. Also, resolution of the American Radio Telegraphists' Association, Local No. 6, Seattle, Wash., T. J. Van Ermen, secretary, opposing Senate bill 1710 and House bill 5193, known as the Guffey-Bland bill, on the ground that though the railway workers can enforce their demands because of the organized status of the Railway Labor Act, disputes affecting maritime workers can now be satisfactorily settled under the National Labor Relations Act, and that the Guffey-Bland bill would have the effect of regimenting the unions of maritime workers and would be detrimental to their best interests; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

2712. Also, resolution of 1,000 citizens in mass meeting assembled in Tacoma, Wash., under the sponsorship of organized labor, pointing out that the uncontrovertible evidence has established the innocence of Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings as to the alleged offenses for which they were incarcerated in California prisons, and pointing out further they were the victims of a disgraceful frame-up, and their continued imprisonment is a reproach to our Nation, and therefore demanding that the President and Congress request Governor Merriam forthwith to pardon Mooney and Billings and thus help to wipe out the blot upon our national reputation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2713. Also, resolution of American Radio Telegraphists' Association, Local No. 6, Seattle, Wash., T. J. Van Ermen, secretary, insisting that the United States Chamber of Commerce and the United States Association of Manufacturers are seeking to emasculate the National Labor Relations Act, pointing out that such act is labor's magna carta and guarantees for the first time in history the right of the worker to bargain collectively, free from interference by the employer, and therefore requesting that Congress resist any attempt to amend the National Labor Relations Act; to the Committee on Labor.

2714. Also, resolution of American Radio Telegraphists' Association, Local No. 6, Seattle, Wash., T. J. Van Ermen, secretary, urging the amendment of the Social Security Act to include maritime workers so that these latter will participate in the benefits of the act, and urging the support of a measure which is shortly to be introduced by Representative VOORHIS, of California; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2715. By Mr. COLDEN: Assembly Joint Resolution No. 10, adopted by the Legislature of California, relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to designate Armistice Day as a holiday; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2716. Also, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 18, adopted by the Legislature of the State of California, relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to amend the Social Security Act so as to enable such States as may desire to do so to bring the employees of such States and the employees of its counties, cities, and other political subdivisions within the provisions of such act relating to old-age benefits; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2717. Also, resolution adopted by the Pacific Coast Garment Manufacturers, of Los Angeles and San Francisco, Calif., approving certain portions of House bill 7200, known as the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1937, and disapproving certain other portions of said bill; to the Committee on Labor.

2718. REPORT OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, transmitting the twenty-third annual report of the Board of Governors of that System, covering operations during the year 1936, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, and Mr. STEIWER conferees on the part of the Senate.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate on the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes, failed to reach a final and definite agreement, and a report to that effect was made to the House. I submit on behalf of the conferees on the part of the Senate the conference report on that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6551) to create a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have come to no agreement.

HUGO L. BLACK,
ROYAL S. COPELAND,
DAVID I. WALSH,
WM. E. BORAH,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM P. CONNERY, JR.,
MARY T. NORTON,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
RICHARD J. WELCH,
FRED A. HARTLEY, JR.,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, after that report was made to the House the question was submitted to the House with respect to certain matters as to which there was substantial accord between the House and the Senate. The House has sent over to us an engrossed amendment to the original bill, House bill 6551. It is my intention in a moment to move that the Senate concur in that amendment with an amendment. Before making the motion, however, I wish to explain exactly what the result will be should it be agreed to.

The Senate will recall that there was a disagreement between the two Houses as to the length of time for which the Civilian Conservation Corps should be continued. The Senate voted to make it a permanent institution. The House, on the other hand, voted to extend it for 2 years. On full discussion between the conferees, the conclusion was reached that it was impossible to get the House to agree to making it a permanent institution. We therefore substantially reached an agreement, which was submitted to the House and is contained in the amendment which has been adopted by the House, to continue the Civilian Conservation Corps for a period of 3 years. For that reason, if the Senate shall concur in the House amendment, the corps will be continued for a period of 3 years.

The Senate bill contained a provision for civil service. The House bill did not contain such a provision; in fact, the House voted against the civil-service provision in the beginning of the consideration of the measure. They again voted against the inclusion of civil service in the engrossed amendment which is dated June 21, 1937. The result is that if we concur in the amendment of the House there will be no provision for civil service during the period of 3 years for which the Civilian Conservation Corps will be continued. As one of those who supported the idea of civil service in the beginning, and joined in insisting upon it in conference, I am of the opinion that it is wholly useless to attempt to reach an agreement with the House concerning the Senate provision for civil service.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that if the House amendment is adopted the Civilian Conservation Corps will be continued for only 3 years, the civil-service question is not nearly so important as it would have been if the corps were to be made permanent.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator fully. I may say I have talked with the Senator from Idaho, who is a member of the conference committee, about this, and I have also talked with other members of the conference committee. That is one of the reasons why it is my intention to make a motion to concur in the amendment of the House.

With reference to the other amendments which were placed on the bill by the Senate, one at the instance of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], I will state that the amendment suggested by the House substantially carries out the idea which was favored by the Senator from Utah.

There is only one thing left in the bill which it is impossible for us to accept. It is for that reason I am going to move to accept the amendment of the House with an amendment which I shall submit in a moment.

It will be recalled that when the bill was before the Senate a question arose as to limiting the pay of enrollees. We did provide a limitation of pay of enrollees within certain defined boundaries. In adopting the amendment, however, the House provided:

> That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month, except for not more than 10 percent, who may be designated as leaders and who shall receive not more than $36 a month: Provided further, That not to exceed 6 percent shall receive $45 as leader.

The amendment, therefore, as it comes to us provides $36 pay for some leaders and $45 pay for other leaders. In my judgment, it would be impossible to determine exactly which should prevail, the $45 wage or the $36 wage. Evidently what was intended was that the bill should provide for not more than 10 percent of enrollees to be designated as assistant leaders and that they should receive not more than $36 a month, and that not more than 6 percent of enrollees might be designated as leaders who should receive not more than $45 per month. That is the way it is operated now.

I send to the desk an amendment to correct the matter, and I shall move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair suggest to the Senator that the conference report should first be agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. That is true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now open to action by the Senate.

The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendment of the Senate to House bill 6551, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
UNITED STATES,
June 21, 1937.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes, and concur therein, with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment to insert:

"That there is hereby established the Civilian Conservation Corps, hereinafter called the Corps, for the purpose of providing employment, as well as vocational training, for youthful citizens of the United States who are unemployed and in need of employment, and to a limited extent as hereinafter set out, for war veterans and Indians, through the performance of useful public work in connection with the conservation and development of the natural resources of the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions: Provided, That at least 10 hours each week may be devoted to general educational and vocational training: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall continue for the period of 3 years after July 1, 1937, and no longer.

"SEC. 2. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint a Director at a salary of $10,000 per annum. The Director shall have complete and final authority in the functioning of the Corps, including the allotment of funds to cooperating Federal departments and agencies, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the President in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 3. In order to carry out the purpose of this act, the Director is authorized to provide for the employment of the Corps and its facilities on works of public interest or utility for the protection, restoration, regeneration, improvement, development, utilization, maintenance, or enjoyment of the natural resources of lands and waters, and the products thereof, including forests, fish, and wildlife on lands or interest in lands (including historical or archeological sites), belonging to, or under the jurisdiction or control of, the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions, and the several States: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, authorize the Director to undertake projects on lands belonging to or under the jurisdiction or control of counties, and municipalities, and on lands in private ownership, but only for the purpose of doing thereon such kinds of cooperative work as are or may be provided for by acts of Congress, including the prevention and control of forest fires, forest tree pests and diseases, soil erosion, and floods: Provided further, That no projects shall be undertaken on lands or interests in lands, other than those belonging to or under the jurisdiction or control of the United States, unless adequate provisions are made by the cooperating agencies for the maintenance, operation, and utilization of such projects after completion.

"SEC. 4. There are hereby transferred to the Corps all enrolled personnel records papers, property, funds, and obligations of the Emergency Conservation Work established under the act of March 31, 1933 (48 Stat. 22), as amended; and the Corps shall take over the institution of the camp exchange heretofore established and maintained, under supervision of the War Department, in connection with and aiding in administration of Civilian Conservation Corps work camps conducted under the authority of said act as amended: Provided, That such camp exchange shall not sell to persons not connected with the operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

"SEC. 5. The Director and, under his supervision, the heads of other Federal departments or agencies cooperating in the work of the Corps, are authorized within the limit of the allotments of funds therefor, to appoint such civilian personnel as may be deemed necessary for the efficient and economical discharge of the functions of the Corps without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations.

"SEC. 6. The President may order Reserve officers of the Army and officers of the Naval and Marine Reserves and warrant officers of the Coast Guard to active duty with the Corps under the provisions of section 37a of the National Defense Act and the act of February 28, 1925, respectively.

"SEC. 7. The Director is authorized to have enrolled not to exceed 300,000 men at any one time, of which not more than 30,000 may be war veterans: Provided, That in addition thereto camps or facilities may be established for not to exceed 10,000 additional Indian enrollees and 5,000 additional territorial and insular possession enrollees.

"SEC. 8. The enrollees in the Corps (other than war veterans, enrollees in the Territories and insular possessions, Indians, not to exceed one mess steward, three cooks, and one leader per each company) shall be unmarried male citizens of the United States between the ages of 17 and 23 years, both inclusive, and shall at the time of enrollment be unemployed and in need of employment: Provided, That the Director may exclude from enrollment such classes of persons as he may consider detrimental to the well-being or welfare of the Corps, except that no person shall be excluded on account of race, color, or creed: Provided further, That enrollments shall be for a period of not less than 6 months and reenrollments (except in the case of one mess steward, three cooks, and one leader, in each company, and war veterans) shall not exceed a total term of 2 years: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Director continuous service by the enrollee during his period of enrollment shall not be required in any case where the enrollee attends an educational institution of his choice during his leave of absence: Provided further, That the Director shall be authorized to issue certificates of proficiency and merit to enrollees under such rules and regulations as he may provide.

"SEC. 9. The compensation of enrollees shall be in accordance with schedules approved by the President, and enrollees with dependent member or members of their families shall be required, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Director, to make allotments of pay to such dependents. Other enrollees may make deposits of pay in amounts specified by the Director with the Chief of Finance, War Department, to be repaid in case of an emergency or upon completion of or release from enrollment and to receive the balance of their pay in cash monthly: Provided, That Indians may be excluded from these regulations: Provided further, That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month, except for not more than 10 percent who may be designated as leaders and who shall receive not more than $36 a month: Provided further, That not to exceed 6 percent shall receive $45 as leader.

"SEC. 10. Enrollees shall be provided, in addition to the monthly rates of pay, with such quarters, subsistence, and clothing, or commutation in lieu thereof, medical attention, hospitalization, and transportation as the Director may deem necessary: Provided, That burial, embalming, and transportation expenses of deceased enrolled members of the corps, regardless of the cause and place of death, shall be paid in accordance with regulations of the Employees' Compensation Commission: Provided further, That the provisions of the act of February 15, 1934 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 5, sec. 796), relating to disability or death compensation and benefits shall apply to the enrolled personnel of the corps.

"SEC. 11. The Chief of Finance, War Department, is hereby designated, empowered, and directed, until otherwise ordered by the President, to act as the fiscal agent of the Director in carrying out the provisions of this act: Provided, That funds allocated to Government agencies for obligation under this act may be expended in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the usual work of such agency, except as otherwise stipulated in this act: Provided further, That in incurring expenditures, the provisions of section 3709, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5), shall not apply to any purchase or service when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $300.

"SEC. 12. The President is hereby authorized to utilize the services and facilities of such departments or agencies of the Government as he may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 13. The Director and, under his supervision, the cooperating departments and agencies of the Federal Government are authorized to enter into such cooperative agreements with States and civil divisions as may be necessary for the purpose of utilizing the services and facilities thereof.

"SEC. 14. The Director may authorize the expenditure of such amounts as he may deem necessary for supplies, materials, and equipment for enrollees to be used in connection with their work, instruction, recreation, health, and welfare, and may also authorize expenditures for the transportation and subsistence of selected applicants for enrollment and of discharged enrollees while en route upon discharge to their homes.

"SEC. 15. That personal property as defined in the act of May 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 311), belonging to the Corps and declared surplus by the Director, shall be disposed of by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, in accordance with the provisions of said act: Provided, That unserviceable property in the custody of any department shall be disposed of under the regulations of that department.

"SEC. 16. The Director and, under his supervision, the heads of cooperating departments and agencies are authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay from the funds appropriated by Congress to carry out the provisions of this act any claim arising out of operations authorized by the act accruing after the effective date thereof on account of damage to or loss of property or on account of personal injury to persons not provided for by section 10 of this act, caused by the negligence of any enrollee or employee of the Corps while acting within the scope of his employment: Provided, That the amount allowed on account of personal injury shall be limited to necessary medical and hospital expenses: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to any claim on account of personal injury for which a remedy is provided by section 10 of this act: Provided further, That no claim shall be considered hereunder which is in excess of $500, or which is not presented in writing within 1 year from the date of accrual thereof: Provided further, That acceptance by any claimant of the amount allowed on account of his claim shall be deemed to be in full settlement thereof, and the action of the Director or of the head of a cooperating department or agency upon such claim so accepted by the claimant shall be conclusive.

"SEC. 17. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of this act: Provided, That no part of any such appropriation shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any camp exchange, save and except such camp exchanges as are established and operated, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Director, at such camps as may be designated by him, for real assistance and convenience to enrollees in supplying them and their supervising personnel on duty at any such camp with articles of ordinary use and consumption not furnished by the Government: Provided further, That the person in charge of any such camp exchange shall certify, monthly, that during the preceding calendar month such exchange was operated in compliance therewith.

"SEC. 18. This act, except as otherwise provided, shall take effect July 1, 1937."

Mr. BLACK. I now submit my amendment and move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House with the amendment which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the House amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5 of the amendment of the House of Representatives, in section 9, it is proposed to strike out the last proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month, except for not more than 10 percent who may be designated as leaders and who shall receive not more than $36 a month: Provided further, That not to exceed 6 percent shall receive $45 as leader.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided further, That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month except for not more than 10 percent who may be designated as assistant leaders and who shall receive not more than $36 per month: Provided further, That not to exceed an additional 6 percent of such enrollees who may be designated as leaders and may receive not more than $45 per month as such leaders.

So as to make section 9 of the amendment of the House read:

SEC. 9. The compensation of enrollees shall be in accordance with schedules approved by the President, and enrollees with dependent member or members of their families shall be required, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Director, to make allotments of pay to such dependents. Other enrollees may make deposits of pay in amounts specified by the Director with the Chief of Finance, War Department, to be repaid in case of an emergency or upon completion of or release from enrollment and to receive the balance of their pay in cash monthly: Provided, That Indians may be excluded from these regulations: Provided further, That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month except for not more than 10 percent, who may be designated as assistant leaders and who shall receive not more than $36 per month: Provided further, That not to exceed an additional 6 percent of such enrollees who may be designated as leaders and may receive not more than $45 per month as such leaders.

The amendment of Mr. BLACK to the amendment of the House was agreed to.

The amendment of the House, as amended, was agreed to.

H. R. 3809. A bill for the relief of H. E. Wingard (Rept. No. 808); and

H. R. 4623. A bill for the relief of C. O. Eastman (Rept. No. 809).

Mr. BROWN of Michigan, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 563. A bill for the relief of E. W. Garrison (Rept. No. 810);

H. R. 2482. A bill for the relief of Lonnie O. Ledford (Rept. No. 811); and

H. R. 3262. A bill for the relief of John H. Wykle (Rept. No. 812).

Mr. SMATHERS, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 2934. A bill for the relief of Raymond E. Payne and Anna R. Payne (Rept. No. 813); and

H. R. 5102. A bill for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Muzio (Rept. No. 814).

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 150) to provide for the appointment of a delegate to the Fifth World Congress of the Deaf, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 815) thereon.

HISTORICAL AND EDUCATIONAL MATERIAL OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORY CELEBRATION COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. From the Committee on the Library, I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 380) to provide for the publication and sale by the Northwest Territory Celebration Commission of certain historical and educational material, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787 and the settlement of the Northwest Territory", approved August 2, 1935, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. (a) The Commission is authorized to prepare, publish, and sell such historical and educational material pertaining to the Ordinance of 1787 and the settlement of the Northwest Territory as it deems advisable for the dissemination of information and the advancement of knowledge concerning such ordinance and settlement. Sums received from the sale of such published material are hereby authorized to be appropriated as a revolving fund for the continued publication and sale of such material.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to have printing, binding, photolithography, and other work done at establishments other than the Government Printing Office."

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

On June 22, 1937:

S. 102. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Antietam; and

S. 713. An act to provide an appropriation for the payment of claims of persons who suffered property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosion at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J., July 10, 1926.

On June 23, 1937:

S. 4. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the original Norfolk (Va.) land grant and the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the city of Norfolk, Va., as a borough;

S. 119. An act to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near Menominee, Mich.;

S. 187. An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States;

S. 1374. An act to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near Manistique, Mich.;

S. 1984. An act for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery;

S. 2242. An act to further amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the collection and editing of official papers of the Territories of the United States now in The National Archives", approved March 3, 1925, as amended;

S. 2439. An act to extend the time for purchase and distribution of surplus agricultural commodities for relief purposes and to continue the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation; and

S. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to provide that the United States extend to foreign governments invitations to participate in the International Congress of Architects to be held in the United States during the calendar year 1939, and to authorize an appropriation to assist in meeting the expenses of the session.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2699) for the relief of Max D. Ordmann; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 2700) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, extending the classified civil service, establishing a General Auditing Office and a Department of Welfare, and for other purposes; to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 2701) relating to certain lands within the boundaries of the Crow Reservation, Mont.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 2271) to provide for trials of and judgments upon the issue of good behavior in the case of certain Federal judges was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES—AMENDMENT

Mr. MOORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDRESSES BY SENATOR CONNALLY AT OPENING OF PAN AMERICAN EXPOSITION, DALLAS, TEX.

[Mr. HATCH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD two addresses delivered by Senator CONNALLY at the opening of the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition at Dallas, Tex., on June 12, 1937, which appear in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR REYNOLDS TO LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION OF NORTH AND SOUTH CAROLINA

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him on Sunday, June 20, 1930, at Asheville, N. C., before the Law Enforcement Officers' Association of North and South Carolina, which appears in the Appendix.]

MAXIMUM HOURS AND MINIMUM WAGES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BRIDGES

[Mr. MCNARY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator BRIDGES on the purposes and provisions of the so-called Black-Connery bill and his substitute therefor, which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT BY WILLIAM GREEN: LOW-COST HOUSING LEGISLATION

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement issued today by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, pertaining to delay in acting on the pending low-cost housing bill, which appears in the Appendix.]

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WAR DEPARTMENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6692) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, just before the Senate recessed last evening I offered an amendment to the pending War Department appropriation bill. For the benefit of Senators who were not present last evening when the amendment was stated I shall read it again:

On page 63, line 20, after the words "Officers' Training Corps", it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

"Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for or toward the support of any compulsory military course or military training in any civil school or college, or for the pay of any officer, enlisted man, or employee of any civil school or college which suspends, expels, or otherwise penalizes students who, because of conscientious convictions or because of religious beliefs, object to enrollment in a course in military training; but nothing herein shall be construed as applying to essentially military schools or colleges."

Mr. President, this is a modification of the amendment which I offered to the War Department appropriation bill last year. At that time I offered an amendment to provide that none of the funds should be used at institutions where there was a compulsory course in military training. This amendment applies only to those who have conscientious or religious objections to taking military training.

It seems to me there should be no objection to the amendment. The Congress itself, at the time of the World War, included in the draft bill a provision that conscientious or religious objectors should be exempted from bearing arms. The Constitution itself, of course, gives us the right to worship as we wish and to have any religious belief we desire.

Under the present situation there have been several cases where young men have been expelled from universities or colleges or high schools because they objected on religious grounds to military training. My amendment would prevent such expulsions. It would not affect the R. O. T. C. enrollment in any way, but would protect the rights of individual students who may have conscientious objections.

Several State institutions have suspended or expelled students who have had such objections. In 1931 three high-school boys, sons of Seventh-Day Adventists, were suspended from the Council Bluffs, Iowa, high school.

In 1932 two students, a Methodist and a Unitarian, were suspended from the University of Maryland.

In 1932 two students, Methodists, were suspended from the University of California at Los Angeles.

In 1933 seven students, of four or five different religious denominations, were suspended from the Ohio State University.

In 1934 a student, a Baptist, was suspended from the University of Missouri, and two students were suspended from the Kansas State College, a local court upholding the suspensions.

One student was suspended in 1935 from the University of West Virginia. In 1935 the high school at Bangor, Maine, suspended a 14-year-old boy because he did not want to take military training.

In 1936 in a case at Massachusetts Institute of Technology a boy was suspended, and in January 1937 at Ohio State University two students were suspended because they had conscientious scruples against taking military training.

Mr. President, my amendment would protect only young men of that type. The land-grant colleges, of course, have military training. There is nothing in the Morrill Act, which established the land-grant colleges, to authorize compulsory military training. It seems to me unfair to compel boys, especially those who have conscientious objections or religious scruples against military training, to take the military training course.

While I might speak at length in regard to the amendment I do not intend to do so, for I know Members of the Senate are anxious to complete consideration of the measure. So far as I know, at the present time in only three States have the land-grant colleges, supported by the Government of the United States, made their military course an elective one. Those three States are Wisconsin, where the State legislature a few years ago prohibited the compulsory features of military training in their land-grant college; the State of Minnesota, where the State board of regents prohibited the compulsory feature of military training; and the State of North Dakota, the legislature of which at the beginning of 1937 enacted a law prohibiting the compulsory feature of military training in our State institutions.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUFFY. Does not the Senator feel that it is better to have either the State legislature or the board of regents or the board of trustees of an educational institution pass on that matter, knowing their local situation, rather than for us to lay down an arbitrary rule?

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course that is a matter of opinion; but in the California case, which was taken into the courts, involving some young men who were expelled from one of the universities there, I desire to quote briefly from the opinion of the Supreme Court:

> The conscientious objector is relieved from the obligation to bear arms in obedience to no constitutional provision, express or implied, but because, and only because, it has accorded with the policy of Congress thus to relieve him. * * * The privilege of the native born conscientious objectors to avoid bearing arms comes not from the Constitution but from the acts of Congress. That body may grant or withhold the exemption as in its wisdom it sees fit.

That was the opinion of the Court in upholding the action of the State board in expelling some young men from the University of California. The Court held that the young men, if they entered the college, must comply with the course of study that was laid down in the college, and of course the State authorities said they must take military training in order to graduate. The Court held that the young men must take it in order to get their degrees.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. Does the Senator contend that there is anything in the Federal laws or regulations which compels a State board of regents or board of trustees to require military training?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; there is nothing of that kind in the law. I so stated; but it was held that way until recent years. I think until about 1930 it was generally contended that the land-grant colleges must have compulsory military training in order to get the benefits of the Morrill Act from the United States Government; but at that time there was an opinion by Attorney General Mitchell, which I put in the RECORD a year ago, holding that there was no compulsory feature in the Morrill Act.

Mr. President, I should like very much to have a record vote on this amendment. I believe it is only fair to protect the religious scruples of our young men who attend our colleges. I am not saying anything about the lack of religious scruples in a number of our young people; but there is some criticism along that line, and it is made, too, with regard to old people. But where people have religious scruples I believe they should be protected; and if their religious scruples are against military training, let Congress provide that no school shall have the benefit of the money appropriated in this bill for military training where the school authorities take the ground that they must expel boys who refuse or do not want to take the military training because of religious beliefs or conscientious objections.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator read from a decision of the Supreme Court. Was the Court there construing a State law or an act of Congress?

Mr. FRAZIER. It was construing the act of the State authorities, upholding their decision to expel these boys from college.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator recognize the right of State institutions to prescribe the manner in which they shall be conducted?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; of course.

Mr. CONNALLY. Suppose a State school requires military training to be taken by every one who attends it, would the Senator wish to disrupt that whole school because a young man had conscientious scruples about fighting?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not see that it would disrupt the whole school by any means.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think that would be the effect of the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from North Dakota said he wanted to withhold funds from any school which prescribes that its students shall take military training, or which makes military training compulsory.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the funds are to be withheld only in case the schools expel students for failure to take such training.

Mr. CONNALLY. The schools do not admit students if they will not take military training. If they do get in, though, and then do not abide by the rules of the college, under the Senator's amendment the school authorities could not expel them. The school authorities would have to keep the students and exempt them from military training.

I wonder if the Senator would exempt persons from paying taxes who have conscientious scruples against paying taxes.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is a far-fetched suggestion.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not far-fetched at all. We owe to the Government the duty of defending it with our bodies, if necessary, in time of war, and of defending it in time of peace by paying taxes.

Mr. FRAZIER. I called attention to the fact that the Congress itself had exempted conscientious objectors.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. Congress did, in the Draft Act, exempt conscientious objectors; and the authorities had more trouble in looking after them than they did with the Germans. As a matter of fact, Congress has been generous; but I am not going to vote for an amendment which undertakes to dictate to the States how they shall operate their educational institutions.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not think the Government had any particular trouble in looking after conscientious objectors. They were given what were termed "nonmilitary duties", such as washing dishes in the camps, or something of that kind.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. I note that the Senator's amendment reads:

> Or otherwise penalizes students who * * * object to enrollment in courses of military instructions.

I should suppose that if a student objected, and was not required to take one of these courses, the faculty or the board of regents might require that some substitute course be taken in order to get in the usual number of hours of study. Is that what the Senator means by penalizing a student?

Mr. FRAZIER. I referred to cases such as the one in Massachusetts, where a boy was expelled or threatened with expulsion, and the school authorities finally compromised by telling him that he could stay there and take the courses of study but could not get a diploma. That was what I particularly referred to.

Mr. DUFFY. It was not the idea of objecting to the student filling in those 2 hours a week, say, by some other study that might be prescribed?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no. That would not be penalizing him at all, as I see it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not interpret the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] in exactly the same way that the Senator from North Dakota does. I think his amendment, by the ordinary meaning of words and punctuation, has two parts. One of them prohibits the use of—

> Funds appropriated in this act * * * for or toward the support of any compulsory military course or military training in any civil school or college.

The other part of the amendment prohibits the use of such funds—

> For the pay of any officer, enlisted man, or employee at any civil school or college which suspends, expels, or otherwise penalizes students who, because of conscientious convictions or because of religious belief, object to enrollment in courses of military instructions.

As to the first part of the proposal, it, of course, would comprehend land-grant colleges, and it would completely nullify the provisions contained on pages 60 to 63 relating to the financing of citizens' military training camps and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, because the land-grant colleges are under condition to carry out the training for Reserve officers by virtue of the act of 1916 and the subsequent act of 1920.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. If the Senator from Vermont makes that technical point with regard to the language of the amendment, I shall be very glad to have him correct either the punctuation or the language. All I intended was to cover the case of schools or colleges where military training is compulsory, where officers or enlisted men are paid, and where students who refuse to take military training are suspended or expelled or otherwise penalized.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my impression is that the entire amendment would have to be rearranged and rewritten to do that. I have tried to imagine amending the amendment by striking out or changing a word or two and changing the punctuation to effectuate that object, and I cannot quite make it work. If, however, that were done, and we were dealing with an amendment which would bar the use of the money appropriated for the purpose of maintaining and carrying on the education of young men in land-grant colleges and other colleges that include in their curricula military training, then we should run into trouble with the words "otherwise penalizes"; for if the law of 1916 is to be carried out, then anybody who enters upon a course of study which includes military training, either by option or by compulsion, is penalized if he fails to carry on his work. In the event the amendment were amended as suggested by the Senator from North Dakota, it would have for its object control of the schools and colleges to such an extent that they must submit to a lack of discipline by the student. They must let the student, having either elected or come under the compulsion of the statute of the State, choose whenever he likes to take classes in military science or to stay away from them, to take part of the course and drop it, or to carry it through to completion while conforming to the requirements of the curriculum for a degree in the particular course in which military science is included. That, of course, is an absurd thing for Congress to undertake to do, and it ought not to be done in any event.

I am opposed to this amendment in any form in which it may be written, primarily because it violates an obligation between the United States and every State in the Union; secondarily because it violates a general policy in which I believe, that is, that the Federal Government should keep its hands off the regulation of education in each and every State of the Union. The matter of what courses shall be prescribed and what courses shall be elective is a matter entirely up to the school or university, save in a case where the State has bound itself to maintain a college which must have for its leading object military education.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand the Senator, he contends that the amendment violates an agreement or an understanding between the Government and the various States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to know just what the Senator means by that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will indicate it at this point. I call attention to section 3 of the act approved July 2, 1862—Twelfth Statutes, page 503—which is commonly called the first Morrill Act, and which reads as follows:

> Third. Any State which may take and claim the benefit of the provisions of this act shall provide, within 5 years, at least not less than one college, as described in the fourth section of this act, or the grant to such State shall cease; and said State shall be bound to pay to the United States the amount received of any lands previously sold and that the title to purchasers under the State shall be valid.

I call attention to the proviso to the grant of this land to the States to which reference is made in the section I have read, the section providing for the forfeiture for nonperformance of the conditions I am to read. In the original, section 4 read as follows:

> That all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid by the States to which the lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States or of the States, or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than 5 percent upon the par value of said stocks; and that the moneys so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished (except so far as may be provided in sec. 5 of this act), and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this act to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, and in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

That language has been confirmed on several different occasions since 1862. In 1883 it was reenacted, save for a change in the investment provision, the proviso reading in the act of 1883 as follows:

> Provided, That the moneys so invested or loaned shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished (except so far as may be provided in sec. 5 of this act), and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this act to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts in such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life.

I pause in the reading of the act to call attention to the provisions here. First, the condition of this grant is that the leading object of the college which shall be created by the State which accepts the grant shall be the instruction in military science; second, the grant is made in such manner that a certain discretion is given to the State with respect to the exercise of its control over education within its own borders. It reads, "In such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe." That is to say, Congress may not, and Congress cannot, without violation of this agreement between the Federal Government and the States, prescribe that the course or courses in that one college which was created by the State in order to enable it to receive this money from the Federal Government shall not be military science or shall not include military science. Congress cannot meddle with this subject without violating the grant that was made, and subjecting the State, if the State conforms to it, to the forfeiture expressed in the first quotation I made from the law.

On the interpretation of the words "leading object" I call attention to other acts of the Congress which I claim constitute a practical legislative interpretation of those words.

I refer next to the National Defense Act approved June 3, 1916.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator has quoted from the Morrill Act:

> The leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts.

There is nothing there which would make military training compulsory, as I take it. I do not think the Senator will make the statement that there is.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the words of a grant are such that they require the leading object of the expenditure of the money to be such as to include military training, who will question the fact that there follows an obligation? And if there is a penalty for nonperformance of that obligation, then who will undertake to say that the Congress can, with any honor or respect for the obligation created thereby, pass a law which would utterly flout, utterly defeat that leading object?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand, the act not only includes military training but it also includes agriculture and the mechanic arts. Is that correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. FRAZIER. Does the Senator know of any land-grant college where agriculture is required to be taught, and where there is a compulsory requirement for the teaching of mechanic arts?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes, indeed. I think any student who enrolls in the agricultural course of any college must conform to the requirements of the college in order to obtain his degree.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have a catalog of the North Dakota Agricultural College. which is a land-grant college. Various courses are set forth in this catalog in four or five different schools—the school of agriculture, the school of chemistry and technology, the school of home economics, the school of pharmacy, and the school of general education—and the only subject that is required in those courses is military training.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am astonished.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator may well be.

Mr. AUSTIN. Moreover, I am surprised.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator is undoubtedly familiar with his own land-grant college in Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I think so.

Mr. FRAZIER. I understand that the Senator is a trustee of the University of Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. And he has been for a number of years. I should like to ask if agriculture is required there—if the city boys and girls who go to the University of Vermont must take a course in agriculture in order to obtain a degree?

Mr. AUSTIN. No, Mr. President; that is not the use of the term "required." No course is required. That is one of the troubles with this amendment; it deals with a course of military training. That is not the way the matter is handled. As I understand the English language, it is not a course of military instruction. Military instruction is only one element of a course; and any university that I know of that has prescribed studies for its students in order to fulfill a course, and thereby obtain a degree, must have the power, untrammelled by the Federal Congress, to maintain sufficient discipline so that a student who does not come to classes may be suspended or expelled, if necessary, and, in any event, a student who does not keep up his ratings made be denied his degree. Military science is in no different relation than the other studies which enter into an agricultural course. They include, under the Morrill Act, languages, mathematics, the mechanic arts, and many of the subjects that enter into what is known as literary-scientific courses, or the courses that result in an A. B. degree in many of our colleges and universities.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator is becoming rather technical and is splitting hairs over the proposition. I cannot understand how, by any stretch of the imagination, the Senator can say that a course in agriculture does not mean something about agriculture and about farming.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think if the Senator is becoming technical it is because he is being asked technical questions, and the last question seems to me to be of a technical nature. A course in agriculture probably does have such subjects as agronomy and biology and many other special subjects which relate to tilling the soil, or relate to raising animals and other agricultural pursuits. I do not see, however, where this discussion is gaining us anything in the consideration of this amendment. I should like to proceed.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The only point I wished to make was that there was nothing compulsory about military training or the course in agriculture or mechanic arts. All that is provided is that the land-grant colleges are to teach those subjects but not as a compulsory proposition. In the case of the University of Vermont, I take it the young ladies who attend there are not required to take military training, or agricultural courses, either.

Mr. AUSTIN. A young lady is no different from a young man in that respect.

Mr. FRAZIER. No; of course not; and if the training is compulsory, it ought to apply to the girls as well as to the boys.

Mr. AUSTIN. A young lady who enters upon a course which involves military training will have to take military training, of course. She can do as she pleases about entering upon such a course.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator is evading the question again.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is nothing compulsory about a man or a woman entering upon a course of study that includes some military science. There is nothing compelling any boy or girl in this country to enter an institution which teaches military science. One who is a conscientious objector is just as free and has just as many rights as other citizens of this country with respect to his demand or his request upon his State for an education. But he cannot fairly have a representative come to the Congress of the United States and ask the Congress to say to the State which he calls upon for his education, "Congress, limit your appropriation of funds so that this institution in which I am seeking an education, and which my State provides for me, cannot possibly discipline me if I do not conform to its laws or to the laws of the State."

That is neither fair nor just. There is nothing right about it. If we have any vision at all as to what is right and what is wrong, I think we ought to say, when we read the statute which I am about to read, that the Congress of the United States has recognized the obligation of the States to maintain at least one institution in which a primary object shall be the teaching of military science.

I now read from the National Defense Act, approved June 3, 1916. This act provides for the establishment of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, concerning which the appropriations are made on pages 60, 61, 62, and 63 of the pending bill:

> The President is hereby authorized to establish and maintain in civil educational institutions a Reserve Officers' Training Corps, one or more units in number, which shall consist of a senior division organized at universities and colleges granting degrees, including State universities and those State institutions that are required to provide—> that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, * * *.

Mr. President, I pause in the reading to emphasize that Congress itself pointed to the Morrill Act and said that it required these colleges to provide military education.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall yield in a moment. I wish to read further:

> Donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading object shall be practical instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics, * * *.

I digress again to call attention to the fact that this is a legislative construction of the Morrill Act. There is a rearrangement of the words. There is a closer bringing together of the words "leading object" and "military tactics", so that now it reads:

Where the leading object shall be practical instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics—

I continue reading:

And at those essentially military schools not conferring academic degrees, especially designated by the Secretary of War as qualified, and a junior division organized at all other public and private educational institutions, and each division shall consist of units of the several arms, corps, or services in such number and such strength as the President may prescribe: Provided, That no such unit shall be established or maintained at any institution until an officer of the Regular Army shall have been detailed as professor of military science and tactics, nor—nor until such institution shall maintain under military instruction at least 100 physically fit male students, except that in the case of units other than Infantry, Cavalry, or Artillery the minimum number shall be 50: Provided further, That, except at State institutions described in this section, no unit shall be established or maintained in an educational institution until the authorities of the same agree to establish and maintain a 2-year elective or compulsory course of military training at a minimum for its physically fit male students, which course, when entered upon by any student, shall, as regards such student, be a prerequisite for graduation unless he is relieved of this obligation by regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The regulations of the Secretary of War, made under an authority contained in this act, included no. 13, reading as follows:

Land-grant institutions: The obligations to provide military instruction imposed on land-grant institutions by the act of July 2, 1862, are not altered by the National Defense Act as amended, nor by these regulations.

The War Department has given us their views about this matter, holding that the act creating this benefit and extending it to the several States carried with it a condition. It was a grant clogged with a condition. That condition was that the State should maintain at least one college in which the leading object would be the teaching of military science.

This is a trade between the Government of the United States and the government of the State of Vermont and with every other State in the Union. Note that it is not a trade between the United States and a land-grant college.

I think that the moral obligation and the legal obligation would be just the same if it were a trade between the United States and a college. In the Lynch case the Supreme Court held that a contract between the United States and a single citizen was of just as much obligation and solemnity as a contract between two individuals. So it would be if it were a contract with the University of Vermont and the State Agricultural College or with any of the other land-grant colleges. It is, however, a contract with the State and an obligation on the State. It is right in line with our system of government; it is in line with our theory that the Federal Government should be confined and limited in its operations to the things of national scope and national interest, and that all other powers are reserved to the several States and to the people thereof.

Particularly is it important for the welfare of this country that control over educational policies, control over what shall enter into the curricula of the different schools and colleges in a State should be kept in that State and not dictated from on high somewhere far away, from some place where men meeting together from all over this vast continent, representing different cross sections of the country, representing diverse and many interests, cannot possibly understand the genius of the people of a remote State, who certainly cannot understand it as well as can its own citizens, and who cannot be expected to provide as wisely as the citizens of the State may provide measures relating to education and relating to its own self-defense.

Every State in the Union was guaranteed by the trade between the States and the Federal Government the right to maintain an armed force for its own use, for its own defense. The militia was expressly provided for in the Constitution, and when Representative Morrill, afterwards Senator Morrill, was discussing his bill he referred to that fact. This country was then in imminent danger of war, and he discussed and urged the necessity of every State in the Union being able to raise up and educate an armed force of its own.

As we have progressed, and events have changed our social order, we find it necessary to create a more perfect Union than ever before, and this control over the armed forces of the several States has been merged, as it were, in the act of 1916, the National Defense Act, which gave the Federal Government a certain amount of influence upon military training in the several States, as I have pointed out. Therein it clearly implies an obligation upon the State to carry out its part; that is, the State which receives the money, clogged with the condition that it maintain at least one university in which the leading object would be the teaching of military science. That the State must do, and the State ought not to be crippled by an act of Congress which deprives it of the necessary money contained in this bill with which to carry on such education and training. No matter in what form this amendment might appear, it would always have for its objective the crippling of any State which undertook to maintain one college which had for one of its leading objects the teaching of military science; otherwise, there is no sense whatever to the proposal.

Mr. President, I am not speaking without authority on this subject. Some reference has already been made by the learned Senator who preceded me and who offered the pending amendment to the case of Hamilton against Regents, and others, a California case, reported in volume 293 of United States Reports at page 245, and even at the risk of wearying Senators, I am going to refer at length to this case, because it has an important bearing upon this discussion, a discussion which should not arise every time a military appropriation bill comes before the Senate, and yet this subject has now been discussed, I believe, at every single session of Congress since I have been a Member of the Senate.

The Court dealt there with the case of the expulsion of students because they would not conform to a rule of the Regents of the University of California which prescribed, as a part of the course they were taking, military training, and prescribed it by virtue of a statute creating the corporation called the Regents of the University of California, an agency of the State. This is what was required, according to the record at page 256.

September 15, 1931, pursuant to the provisions of the organic act and constitution, the regents promulgated the following order:

Every able-bodied student of the University of California who, at the time of his matriculation at the university, is under the age of 24 years and a citizen of the United States and who has not attained full academic standing as a junior student in the university and has not completed the course in military science and tactics offered to freshmen and sophomore students at the university, shall be and is hereby as a condition to his attendance as a student to enroll in and complete a course of not less than one and one-half units of instruction in military science and tactics each semester of his attendance until such time as he shall have received a total of six units of such instruction or shall have attained full academic standing as a junior student.

Mr. President, in the court below the exercise of this power was sustained. The Supreme Court of the United States, speaking of that holding, said at page 257:

The State court, without announcing an opinion, denied the petition for a writ of mandate. Appellants applied for a rehearing. The court, denying the application, handed down an opinion in which it held that article IX, section 9, reposes in the regents full powers of organization and government of the university subject to legislative control in respect of its endowments and funds; that by section 6 of the organic act, and article IX, section 9, military tactics is expressly required to be included among the subjects which shall be taught at the university, and that it is the duty of the regents to prescribe the nature and extent of the courses to be given and to determine what students shall be required to pursue them, and that the suspension of the petitioning students because of their refusal to pursue the compulsory courses in military training involved no violation of their rights under the Constitution of the United States.

Turning to page 258, we find this statement in the reasoning of the Court:

While, by acceptance of the benefits of the Morrill Act of 1862 and the creation of the university in order appropriately to comply with the terms of the grant, the State became bound to offer students in that university instruction in military tactics, it remains untrammeled by Federal enactment and is entirely free to determine for itself the branches of military training to be provided, the content of the instruction to be given, and the objectives to be attained. That State—as did each of the other States of the Union—for the proper discharge of its obligations as beneficiary of the grant made the course in military instruction compulsory upon students. Recently Wisconsin and Minnesota have made it elective. The question whether the State has bound itself to require students to take the training is not here involved. The validity of the challenged order does not depend upon the terms of the land grant.

I turn now to page 259 and read the following:

The War Department has not been empowered to determine or in any manner to prescribe the military instruction in these institutions. The furnishing of officers, men, and equipment conditioned upon the giving of courses and the imposing of discipline deemed appropriate, recommended, or approved by the Department does not support the suggestion that the training is not exclusively prescribed and given under the authority of the State. The States are interested in the safety of the United States, the strength of its military forces, and its readiness to defend them in war and against every attack of public enemies (Gilbert v. Minnesota, 254 U. S. 325, 328–329; State v. Holm, 139 Minn. 267, 273). Undoubtedly every State has authority to train its able-bodied male citizens of suitable age appropriately to develop fitness, should any such duty be laid upon them, to serve in the United States Army or in State militia (always liable to be called forth by Federal authority to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, or repel invasion; Constitution, art. I, par. 8, cls. 12, 15, and 16; Selective Draft Law Cases, 245 U. S. 366, 380–383; State v. Industrial Comm'n. 1925, 186 Wis. 1; 202 N. W. 191) or as members of local constabulary forces, or as officers needed effectively to police the State. And when made possible by the National Government, the State, in order more effectively to teach and train its citizens for these and like purposes, may avail itself of the services of officers and equipment belonging to the Military Establishment of the United States. So long as its action is within retained powers and not inconsistent with any exertion of the authority of the National Government, and transgresses no right safeguarded to the citizen by the Federal Constitution, the State is the sole judge of the means to be employed and the amount of training to be exacted for the effective accomplishment of these ends.

I pass now to page 261 and read further, this relating to a point discussed by the learned Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who seemed to claim some special privileges for men who hold special views with respect to religion or who have conscientious convictions that they ought not to engage in war. The Supreme Court referred to this matter in the following manner:

Appellants assert—unquestionably in good faith—that all war, preparation for war, and the training required by the university, are repugnant to the tenets and discipline of their church, to their religion, and to their consciences. The "privilege" of attending the university—

That word "privilege" is quoted in the text—

The "privilege" of attending the university as a student comes not from Federal sources but is given by the State. It is not within the asserted protection.

That is where the Court refers to protection given by the fourteenth amendment.

The only "immunity" claimed by these students is freedom from obligation to comply with the rule prescribing military training. But that "immunity" cannot be regarded as not within, or as distinguishable from, the "liberty" of which they claim to have been deprived by the enforcement of the regents' order. If the regents' order is not repugnant to the due-process clause, then it does not violate the privileges and immunities clause. Therefore we need only decide whether by state action the "liberty" of these students has been infringed.

I omit a portion and come to this statement on page 262:

California has not drafted or called them to attend the university. They are seeking education offered by the State and at the same time insisting that they be excluded from the prescribed course solely upon grounds of their religious beliefs and conscientious objections to war, preparation for war, and military education. Taken on the basis of the facts alleged in the petition, appellants' contentions amount to no more than an assertion that the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment as a safeguard of "liberty" confers the right to be students in the State university free from obligation to take military training as one of the conditions of attendance.

Viewed in the light of our decisions that proposition must at once be put aside as untenable.

Government, Federal, and State, each in its own sphere, owes a duty to the people within its jurisdiction to preserve itself in adequate strength to maintain peace and order and to assure the just enforcement of law. And every citizen owes the reciprocal duty, according to his capacity, to support and defend government against all enemies.

This case cites and quotes some other cases, pointing out that the obligation of the citizen to come to the defense of his country, to support the liberty which he claims, to conform to the provisions for the regulation of educational institutions in which he asks for, and receives so generously from his State, an education. Among other things the Court quotes from United States v. Schwimmer (279 U. S. 644) as follows:

Whatever tends to lessen the willingness of citizens to discharge their duty to bear arms in the country's defense detracts from the strength and safety of the Government.

The opinion of this Court quotes from petitioner's brief a statement to the effect that it is a "fixed principle of our Constitution, zealously guarded by our laws, that a citizen cannot be forced and need not bear arms in a war if he has conscientious religious scruples against doing so." And, referring to that part of the argument in behalf of the applicant, this Court said (p. 623): "This, if it means what it seems to say, is an astonishing statement. Of course, there is no such principle of the Constitution, fixed or otherwise. The conscientious objector is relieved from the obligation to bear arms in obedience to no constitutional provision, express or implied; but because, and only because, it has accorded with the policy of Congress thus to relieve him * * * The privilege of the native-born conscientious objector to avoid bearing arms comes not from the Constitution but from the acts of Congress. That body may grant or withhold the exemption as in its wisdom it sees fit; and if it be withheld, the native-born conscientious objector cannot successfully assert the privilege. No other conclusion is compatible with the well-nigh limitless extent of the war powers as above illustrated, which include, by necessary implication, the power, in the last extremity, to compel the armed service of any citizen in the land, without regard to his objections or his views in respect of the justice or morality of the particular war or of war in general.

I omit some of the opinion and call attention to the Maryland case to which reference was made by the learned Senator from North Dakota:

And see University of Maryland v. Coale (165 Md. 224; 167 Atl. 54), a case, similar to that now before us, decided against the contention of a student in the University of Maryland who, on conscientious grounds, objected to military training there required. His appeal to this Court was dismissed for the want of a substantial Federal question (290 U. S. 597).

Mr. President, it is significant that all the judges of the Supreme Court concurred in this opinion, and that the matter was of such grave import and far-reaching effect that two opinions were written. The one from which I have been quoting was written by Mr. Justice Butler. I am about to quote from one written by Mr. Justice Cardozo.

Following the reading of the opinion of the Court by Mr. Justice Butler, the action of the State court below was affirmed, which upheld the University of California in penalizing or disciplining certain students for not conforming to the rules of the university requiring them to take military science as a part of the course they had elected to pursue. Now I quote from Mr. Justice Cardozo, beginning at page 265:

Concurring in the opinion, I wish to say an extra word.

And I am skipping about, so as not to put in all of this opinion.

Accepting that premise, I cannot find in the respondents' ordinance an obstruction by the State to "the free exercise" of religion as the phrase was understood by the founders of the Nation, and by the generations that have followed.

And Mr. Justice Cardozo cites a case there. Omitting, again:

If they elect to resort to an institution for higher education maintained with the State's moneys, then and only then they are commanded to follow courses of instruction believed by the State to be vital to its welfare. This may be condemned by some as unwise or illiberal or unfair when there is violence to conscientious scruples, either religious or merely ethical. More must be shown to set the ordinance at naught. In controversies of this order courts do not concern themselves with matters of legislative policy, unrelated to privileges or liberties secured by the organic law. The first amendment, if it be read into the Fourteenth, makes invalid any State law "respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Instruction in military science is not instruction in the practice or tenets of a religion. Neither directly nor indirectly is Government establishing a State religion when it insists upon such training. Instruction in military science, unaccompanied here by any pledge of military service, is not an interference by the State with the free exercise of religion when the liberties of the Constitution are read in the light of a century and a half of history during days of peace and war.

Never in our history has the notion been accepted, or even, it is believed, advanced, that acts thus indirectly related to service in the camp or field are so tied to the practice of religion as to be exempt, in law or in morals, from regulation by the State. On the contrary, the very lawmakers who were willing to give release from warlike acts had no thought that they were doing anything inconsistent with the moral claims of an objector, still less with his constitutional immunities, in coupling the exemption with these collateral conditions.

That reference is to the fact that, when exempted, these conscientious objectors were bound to provide substitutes, either in money or in men, to take their places.

I continue the quotation:

Manifestly a different doctrine would carry us to lengths that have never yet been dreamed of. The conscientious objector, if his liberties were to be thus extended, might refuse to contribute taxes in furtherance of a war whether for attack or for defense, or in furtherance of any other end condemned by his conscience as irreligious or immoral. The right of private judgment has never yet been so exalted above the powers and the compulsion of the agencies of government. One who is a martyr to a principle—which may turn out in the end to be a delusion or an error—does not prove by his martyrdom that he has kept within the law.

Mr. President, this amendment is dangerously within the last paragraph of the opinion I have read—that is, the part which relates to the refusal to pay taxes to support war. The matter of raising taxes and making appropriations to sustain the military branch is a very important function of the Federal Government; and in acting upon this matter I think we should bring to bear upon it the same type of conscience that one individual may be called upon to bring to the question.

Suppose I were a conscientious objector; suppose I belonged to a certain religious organization that was opposed to war, and to preparation for war, and to teaching anyone to be efficient in the activities of war; ought I to refuse to pay taxes that are assessed against me? Ought I to get in the way of my Government when it makes efficient efforts to provide for the national defense? It comes down to that question right here. We ought not to engage, as a branch of the Congress of the United States, in a bit of propaganda that will promote the broadcasting of the idea of conscientious objectors, and of those who belong to an organization that is opposed to teaching military science.

As I conceive our duty here—and it bears upon whether we shall vote for or against this amendment—it is, first, to carry out that obligation; second, not to hinder and impede the States in the performance of their duty under that obligation; third, not to encourage and disseminate the theory of conscientious objectors.

I do not object to any man's holding such theories if he wants to; but I do object to his making use of the Federal Congress as a sounding board to propagate the idea in the land, especially in these days, when we must, if we are sensible, so prepare the United States of America that no other nation will dare to challenge us to war. That is the assurance of peace which we can give to the world. That would be our contribution to peace; whereas if we lie down meekly, if we undertake to tell the world that we are so opposed to preparations for national defense that we will not carry out our obligations, that we will hamstring the States in their performance of the obligation, then I say we are contributing in a great way to the cause of international disturbance, and exposing ourselves to attack.

Mr. President, I hope this may be the last time we shall have to consider an amendment of this character.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. FRAZIER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, unless the Senator from North Dakota desires to address the Senate at this time in response to the speech of the able Senator from Vermont, I should like the floor for a few moments on the amendment; but I will yield to the Senator if he wishes to reply.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator is about to speak on the amendment?

Mr. LEWIS. I purpose speaking on the amendment; yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Very well.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, my desire is to consider a phase of the question which I feel we are losing sight of, but which I regard as very important to the hour.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], in his very able discussion, closed with an observation along the line of that which it was my purpose to touch upon in the moment I shall occupy.

Eminent Senators on this floor have opposed the pending military appropriation bill sincerely and from the impulse of conscience, some on the ground of the weight of taxation, some upon the theory that the doctrine of military preparation incites to assault and awakens enemies to the country.

Mr. President, I cannot concur in any of these objections. I wish to say, however, that I respect very much the views, but more do I respect and esteem the sincerity of the distinguished senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], and his ally from North Dakota, the junior Senator [Mr. NYE], and commend as sincere others who occupy similar positions to those expressed by these able Senators in their addresses.

I prefer to bring to you suddenly, sir, if it is suddenly, a fact of which our country seems unconscious, or to which it seems indifferent. This Nation is in a great peril, as I see it. I behold America as it now stands upon the eve of a turbulence which can result in a conflict inwardly very similar to that which preceded the Civil War between the States. I invite attention to the fact that this very serious situation should be alarming to the public mind, and that the mind of the public should not be indifferent and sit in quiescence upon the theory that we will be exempt from all the results which follow similar occurrences and conditions arising in every other land of civilization.

There is not a State in our Union which just now is not threatened with what may be called a form of riotous confusion. Everywhere there seems to be conflict between what is called labor on the one hand and its employers on the other. Without entering in any wise whatever into the merits of the conflict, or touching in any wise upon the morals of the dispute, we cannot overlook the fact that it is such conditions as those which now confront us that brought on the early state of anarchy and revolution in Russia by which the army of that land was seized by the discontented, and likewise evoked upon Germany a situation where its local army was possessed by those who contended in their revolt that it was their right to overturn the State in order to take possession of the military instrumentalities.

Shall we overlook at this time and forget that it was in like manner that Italy yielded, bringing on a condition which has finally resulted in a tyranny and a form of despotism we shrink to mention? Shall we refuse to reflect that our affairs of state and industry may likewise become victims as was the case in Italy, Russia, and now in Spain?

Mr. President, conditions cannot remain as they now are. They bid too much danger, they threaten too much a severe result, whether we shall apply our observations to those from abroad in their attitude of mind toward us or to the industrial conditions here at home.

The Senator from Vermont very wisely, and in the most illuminating manner, alluded to the necessity of preparation and confessed an acknowledged situation which in itself is warning to anyone who seeks to assault us. We put forward our force of national defense as giving us the assurances of protection against the prospect of assault. There is no doubt what was meant by President Washington when in his famous message he gave the admonition, "In time of peace prepare for war." Our great progenitor did not mean that we should prepare for war upon any people, but that we should be prepared for any war upon us, whether it be brought about by assaults from without or by insurrections within. Therefore, such preparation as the bill before us is intended to assure and this proposed legislation to secure serves a double purpose which I beg to press upon the Senate as being wholly overlooked and, I fear, ignored.

Our country is being educated to the thought that we are expending vast sums of money unnecessarily, that we are doing so merely to build up an army or machinery for war. Those taking that position overlook two facts which I feel I must press upon the Senate. In the lands abroad there has been no disposition to serve or befriend us, apart from that of some form of reciprocity of trade, some benefit commercially where effort is made to obtain it from us. Then it is accompanied with a smile. After that, in every other feature of life from all the foreign nations we are met with a frown. This Nation must look justly to the truth that this America has not one real friend among European and Asiatic nations in all the world. Their attitude of mind is one of direct opposition, if not complete hatred. We may deplore the situation, but we cannot be unconscious that it is born either of rivalry of trade or their natural jealousy because of the permanence of our prosperous situation before the world.

Here within ourselves we are nearer to insurrection and apparently, sir, confronting an army of revolt in the largest numbers, whether from the employers or the employees becomes secondary. It is sufficient to note that if it be true that there is an element in politics which, for want of any other designation, goes by the name of "communism", that has for its design the seizing of the Army of America and possession of its property and different forms of sabotage to destroy the possessions of property and the independence of this country, now is the time fitting for such an undertaking, and it is making its advent and now dares lift its head and intrude itself in its audacious design as under the encouragement that our Army cannot be relied on to protect the Nation.

Are we a wise set of people to behold these designs and signs and attach no import to them? Are we to be indifferent and unconscious, indeed, sir, defiant of the fact that it was just exactly such circumstances by which other nations now in the throes of revolution, insurrection, riot, and disorder, came to their inheritance of destruction?

Do we do an injustice to invite the heads of our great Government to behold the aspect and to call attention to the fact that it is only by an army conscious of its duty to the Republic, zealous in its own patriotism, but secure in its compact organization that we are safe? As against the outside world, the very knowledge that we are so firmly entrenched warns them to beware and to keep away from an advance which threatens their destruction.

Whoever under the guise of any form of conflict, any form of disorder within our Nation, would wholly upset every form of order and overturn every form of law and justice, should be warned that they must beware; that there comes a point with all governments where, if government is to survive, it must assert itself as a government or it must melt, wither, and die in the contempt of civilization.

It is not sufficient to assume that a dispute may be called labor or capital or take any other form and, because of that name, excuse the invading of the realms of order and justice and perchance destroy the whole domestic security of the Republic.

Therefore, sir, I must insist that our honorable friends who are so conscientious, as represented by distinguished gentlemen who have addressed the Senate in opposition to the pending measure, be reminded that every opposition to a military force of defense here on this floor is an invitation to the lawless to assume that there is a division in this country as to the right of the country to defend itself, and as legislative opposition to its preparing for that necessary protection in its inward as well as outward defense and security.

Mr. President, therefore I wish to assert that we must, for a moment, consider the uses of these forces and educate the public. We are not expending millions of money merely because the privilege is afforded us. We are not building an army to parade itself in this place. We are not creating a force to assail anyone. We are doing that which we feel is an essential guardianship of America as against her foes without, but surely, sir, to provide that all those within, who may attempt disturbance and assault, will find the combined forces of the defense of their country, in the spirit of patriotism, protecting the Nation as the Republic and the United States of America.

Mr. President, let this be said as I conclude: The world can observe that there has been no party division among our honorable opponents on the other side of the aisle and on this as to the defense of the country, the protection of the Constitution, and the maintenance of the Republic. Therefore, since there is that spirit, let it be understood likewise they stand behind every effort which looks to the guardianship of the Republic, the protection of its citizens, and the maintenance of honest property.

We cannot go too far in encouraging assaults when they are unjustified without inviting that which is much more serious, a deliberate attack upon the Republic itself. Since we therefore have reached the stage where we point with great glory and delight to this conjunction of harmony on the part of all political parties, and, as against any threat of insurrection, they are a unit for the maintenance of peace and security, let us recall and appropriate to ourselves that great consolation expressed in King John, where Shakespeare puts in the mouth of Phillip of Falconbridge, when he returned from France to join the other princes in the common defense of his country, the words:

> Now these her princes are come home again,
> Come the three corners of the world in arms,
> And we shall shock them. Naught shall make us rue,
> If (America) to itself do rest but true.

I thank the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I believe in the general principles stated by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]; that is to say, in an adequate defense—in an adequate Navy and in an adequate Army. There will be differences of view as to what is adequate, but we should not in these times long debate that. But the first line of defense in any country is the character of the citizenship, the loyalty of the citizen to his government. There is not a large city in the United States today north of Mason and Dixon's line which does not have a very large number of youth being trained in disloyalty to the American Government. I say north of Mason and Dixon's line because my investigation shows that such does not prevail to any marked extent in the South. But throughout the large cities of the North there are night drilling and night teaching of hundreds, even thousands, of the young of this country in disloyalty to the American flag. Of course, when you speak to them about it, their leaders, the traitors who are at the head of the organizations, will tell you that there is no incompatibility between their loyalty to fascism and nazi-ism and loyalty to the American Government. They will tell you that they can be loyal to fascism and nazi-ism and still be true Americans. They will explain and philosophize and tell you that while they are spreading and teaching the things which would destroy our Government and uproot all our institutions, still they are faithful to our Government and our principles.

Everyone must know that that cannot be true, and it cannot be thought to be true by any man possessed of intellectual integrity.

The teachings which are being given these young people train them to disbelieve in our form of government and train them to believe in loyalty to a form of government which is at war with our system of government. That, Mr. President, is going on to a marked extent all over the country.

It is the same kind of duplicity, the same kind of deception, that is being practiced by fascism and naziism internationally now in the war against Spain. The Governments of Germany and of Italy are carrying on war against the Government of Spain, although the war is unavowed, and although they are professing almost every fortnight a desire to advance the cause of peace throughout the world. The guns and the men which massacred the people of Guernica were furnished by the German and the Italian Governments. The guns and the men in a large measure which took the capital of the Basques were furnished by the German and the Italian Governments. The war is being carried on, and would not be sustained, in all probability, a fortnight if it were not for the duplicitous and treacherous support which is being given by the German and the Italian Governments against the Spanish Government.

I call particular attention to their methods for the reason that we ought to realize nationally, here at home, and internationally, that the basic principle of fascism and naziism is deception, is duplicity, is professing to do what they are not doing, or professing the contrary of what they propose to do. So here in this country our youths are being poisoned with the doctrine which is at war with every principle upon which our institutions rest. And they will say to you that they are not teaching doctrines inimical to the principles of the American Government. It is simply their method of deception.

It recalls an incident which happened sometime ago. It will be remembered that the master of Germany a few months ago in a long, devious speech gave an account to the world, and to his own people incidentally, of his 4 years of arbitrary reign. According to the press dispatches, toward the close of his account he said that this reign was characterized by all the principles of a beautiful and perfect democracy. The press dispatches also said that the vast throng before him cheered as he used this strange hyperbole—and not one of them in the great audience could call his life his own.

As an evidence of his "beautiful and perfect democracy" which he advertised to the world, he had called his legislative body together for the first time in 4 years. He had called it together not for the purpose of establishing and enacting laws by which the people of Germany might be guided and under which their rights might be protected. He had called it together apparently to exhibit to the world to what utter and pitiful degradation the legislative body of Germany had been reduced under this "perfect and beautiful democracy." And when he was through with his speech he, in effect, said to his legislative body, "begone, until I suffer myself to be disturbed by your presence again."

In this "perfect and beautiful democracy" there is no law, only the will of the master; there is no liberty, there is no freedom, there is no security; intolerance is a creed and religious persecution a national policy. Men and women are hunted like wild beasts—guilty of no crime save race—and all this is advertised to the people of the world and being taught to our children here in this country as the most perfect form of a real democracy.

Mr. President, it is wise to make appropriations for our physical defense. It is wise to have an adequate Navy and an adequate Army. It is wise to have the physical appropriation for what might be another conflict. But it is wiser, it is more necessary, it is indispensable that we have that defense which arises out of the spiritual and moral devotion of the people to their country. Those forces and influences which would sap and undermine the character and the stamina, and the loyalty of the American people ought not to find any compromise or any palliation or excuse by anyone in this country.

No man can be loyal to American institutions or loyal to the American flag and believe in a single fundamental principle of fascism or nazi-ism. Those who preach it are disloyal regardless of what they may profess to the public. While preparing with battleships and machine guns, while filling the heavens with airplanes, let us keep the soul of American youth clean of those teachings and beliefs which are torturing millions in the Old World and writing history in the blood of women and children.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have today listened to a very illuminating discussion of this subject, but I am unwilling to have a single detail of the proposal of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] go unanswered. I want him to know, as he does know, but he will now be reassured, that what I say is said with great respect to him. I know his honesty of purpose and the purity of his thought, so I would not have him believe that what I say is in any sense a reflection upon him. But the question he has raised is a very delicate one, and whatever we do in the Senate regarding it will be misunderstood by many lofty-minded persons and will be criticized bitterly by many of the subversive groups of our country.

I do not need to say that I am in bitter opposition to the amendment, and I desire to outline briefly what I have to say regarding it.

The Senator proposes that there shall be a withdrawal of Federal aid of any description to any school or college, other than essentially military schools and colleges, which should undertake to suspend, expel, or otherwise penalize a student who, because of conscientious convictions or because of religious beliefs, objects to enrollment in a course in military training.

It is not alone from the standpoint of national defense that I object to the amendment, although that is sufficient ground. The lasting benefits to the individual students are worth much more than can be measured by mere words. I myself have a feeling as to my own son that the training he had in the R. O. T. C. at Syracuse University was worth more to him in many ways than all the other training he had in that fine institution.

This amendment will have the effect of materially changing section 40 of the National Defense Act, an act which I think most of us believe to be fundamentally sound in its present form. If enacted, the amendment would prevent Federal aid from being given to the military department of all the land-grant colleges in America. For the sake of the RECORD, Mr. President, I wish to include at this point the names of the 53 land-grant colleges. I do not need to remind Senators that each one is interested in the matter before us, because of the fact that in his State there is a land-grant college. Then, besides the R. O. T. C. units in land-grant colleges, there are some in high schools and professional schools. So we have altogether Reserve Officers' Training Corps training in about 275 institutions. In 101 of them the training is elective, but in 174 of these institutions it is required. I ask that the list found on page 14 of the Senate hearings on this bill may be included in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Without objection, the list will be printed in the RECORD.

The list referred to is as follows:

There are 53 land-grant colleges as follows:

First Corps Area: Connecticut State College, University of Maine, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Massachusetts State College, University of New Hampshire, Rhode Island State College, University of Vermont and Medical School.

Second Corps Area: University of Delaware, Rutgers University, Cornell University, University of Puerto Rico.

Third Corps Area: University of Maryland, Pennsylvania State College, Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Fourth Corps Area: Alabama Polytechnic Institute, University of Florida, University of Georgia, Louisiana State University, Mississippi State College, North Carolina State College, Clemson Agricultural College, University of Tennessee.

Fifth Corps Area: Purdue University, University of Kentucky, Ohio State University, West Virginia University.

Sixth Corps Area: University of Illinois, Michigan State College, University of Wisconsin (elective).

Seventh Corps Area: University of Arkansas, Iowa State College, Kansas State College, University of Minnesota (elective), Missouri School of Mines, University of Missouri, University of Nebraska, North Dakota Agricultural College, South Dakota State College.

Eighth Corps Area: University of Arizona, Colorado State College, New Mexico College of A. & M., Oklahoma A. & M. College, A. & M. College of Texas.

Ninth Corps Area: University of California (Berkeley), University of California (Los Angeles), University of Idaho, Montana State College, University of Nevada, Oregon State Agricultural College, Utah State Agricultural College, State College of Washington, University of Wyoming.

Hawaiian Department: University of Hawaii.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I had intended to consider the decision of the Supreme Court in the California case, which was so ably discussed this morning by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. To me it is most conclusive that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is unwise. If I had any doubt of that from the fact brought out by the Senator from Vermont this morning, the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Cardozo, joined in by Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Stone, the great liberals of the Court, would convince me that the position we are taking this morning in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is a sound one. However, I shall not go into that, as I had intended to do, because the Senator from Vermont has stated the case so much better than I could possibly do.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Vermont, in discussing the decision of the Court in the California case, neglected or at least omitted to read a certain extract from the opinion that bears particularly on this question. I refer to the statement that—

> The privilege of the native-born conscientious objector to avoid bearing arms comes not from the Constitution but from the acts of Congress.

That is all I am asking now, namely, that the Congress carry out what they have already done in the Universal Draft Act granting religious objectors exemption from bearing arms. All the amendment offered by me would do, if adopted, would be to exempt students in colleges which now have compulsory military training from taking military training if they had religious scruples against such training.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe that the Senator from North Dakota did not hear me when I read that part of the opinion. I do not wish to engage in a dispute, but my recollection is that I read that statement. My comment on it would be that, of course, the Congress may extend this leniency to a citizen for a consideration, as it has done. When it has excused a person who, for such a reason, asked to be excused from the defense of his country in time of war, it has exacted from such citizen an equivalent in some form, money or a substitute person to perform military service for him. The citizen may thus be excused; I have not questioned that. I raised the grave question of policy which has been so ably discussed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which I also discussed, and which is now being discussed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield again?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Vermont; I did not understand that he had read the particular statement from the decision of the Supreme Court to which I referred.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am much obliged to the Senators for their interruptions. I had not intended to say anything more about this decision, but the Supreme Court in the opinion of Mr. Justice Cardozo, in which he was joined by Mr. Justice Brandeis and Mr. Justice Stone, says:

> The first amendment, if it be read into the fourteenth, makes invalid any State law "respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Instruction in military science is not instruction in the practice or tenets of a religion. Neither directly nor indirectly is Government establishing a State religion when it insists upon such training. Instruction in military science, unaccompanied here by any pledge of military service, is not an interference by the State with the free exercise of religion when the liberties of the Constitution are read in the light of a century and a half of history during the days of peace and war.

I do not think the Senator from North Dakota can get any consolation from the opinion of the Court.

The effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota would be to take away from the States, the board of regents, curators, or other governing bodies of the institutions in question, and from the presidents or principals of schools and colleges, the administration and the right to determine, first, whether or not military training in their institutions of learning is to be elective or required, and, secondly, the right to discipline any individual student who desires to attend any such institution and yet does not desire to comply with its rules and regulation insofar as any military activities are concerned. In effect, the amendment places the administration of the college or school and the right to discipline the students therein in the hands of the individual student himself rather than retaining them in the hands of the administrative authority of the school, its governing body, or the State.

The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota would by force of Federal enactment compel the universities, colleges, and high schools of the country in which there is now required military training to make the course in military science strictly elective; it would take out of the hands of the governing body or administrative authority of a university or college which has a required course in military science as a prerequisite for a degree the right to discipline any student who differed in opinion or who refused to comply with the rules and regulations of the particular institution insofar as they pertain to military training. The Congress would indeed be going far afield if by Federal enactment it should attempt to tell governing bodies of institutions of learning of the Nation what they can or cannot do. This amendment says in effect that, no matter what the State authorities may determine, no matter what the governing body of the institution may or may not think, no matter what the president or principal of the school may say, there will be no required military courses in any State, except for the essentially military schools.

The Morrill Act of 1862, which made grants of land scrip which could be converted into money for the purpose of maintaining and establishing universities and colleges in every State of the Union, did so upon the condition that it should "support and maintain at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanical arts."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wonder if it has occurred to the Senator, while considering the condition he has just pointed out, that one effect of this amendment would be to transform that condition into an option, or, to put it in another way, it would have the effect of substituting for that condition the option of the student himself?

Mr. COPELAND. It would submit the condition to the will of the student and destroy the purpose of the act. As I view it, it would be just as logical for the Congress to legislate and dictate to the various States, universities, and colleges that in order to obtain a bachelor of science degree from an agricultural college the student should not be required to study the chemistry of soils, or that if he seeks a degree in mechanics he should not be required to take a course in physics as a prerequisite to such degree. Some universities require a compulsory course in English or in citizenship as a prerequisite for any degree. It would be just as logical for the Congress to legislate that these courses should not be required. It would be just as logical for the Congress to prescribe under the National Youth Administration, which is part of the Works Progress Administration, that no student in high school or college should receive any Federal aid under that act unless he did or did not take certain courses, which the governing bodies of the various colleges say are prerequisite for graduation, or that if he did not want to take a certain course he could take the discipline of his case into his own hands.

If this amendment should be written into law, it would arbitrarily take away from the several States every vestige of right to determine for themselves whether military science shall be required or elected. A more flagrant effort to set aside the expressed will of the people could not be imagined.

I am familiar with the fact that the legislature of the Senator's State of North Dakota has recently made elective the course in military science in the State institutions of that State. That is the privilege of the people of North Dakota. That is the prerogative of the people of the State of North Dakota acting through their legislative body. I have no fault to find with it. In a region where the issue, as to whether or not military training in the State colleges should be compulsory, was placed squarely up to the people of that State in the form of a direct referendum, the people of Oregon very wisely voted overwhelmingly in favor of the R. O. T. C. and demanded that military training be made compulsory.

It is clearly an issue for the States, the local governing bodies, and the heads of the institutions to decide, and not a case for the Congress to meddle into the affairs of the far-flung campuses of the country. It is for the authorities of the various institutions to judge what is or is not to be a balanced course of instruction and what shall or shall not be required of students. Surely it is not for the Congress of the United States to dictate through appropriation bills whether or not State schools and colleges shall teach English or military science or physics or mathematics or anything else. Surely those responsible for the conduct of our schools and colleges should be in a position to judge the curriculum and to prescribe the course of study rather than to have the Senate do so. If there is one thing the States have done very well indeed it is in the matter of education. So far as I am concerned, I do not wish to interfere or have the Federal Government interfere with what shall be done in the individual States in an educational way.

Furthermore, in publicly owned and controlled institutions, supported mainly by general taxation, a person ordinarily has no constitutional right to enter or to remain save upon the terms and conditions prescribed by the governing authorities, acting within the scope of their delegated powers. Attendance upon such a place is a privilege, not a right except in a most limited sense.

Once more let me say that I am not reflecting at all upon the Senator from North Dakota when I say this, but the fact is that others than the Senator, others less high-minded, less devoted to the flag, less devoted to the country, have made attacks upon certain activities of the Government and certain laws of the Government. These subversive elements in our country have turned their attacks upon the civilian components of the Army, which is the greatest proof that could be obtained of their insincerity in claiming to be the advocates of the cause of peace and democracy. It is remarkable that we do not find attacks made upon the military activities, those which are professional in a sense, but the attack is always made, not alone upon the floor of Congress but in the public press and in speeches elsewhere and in soap-box oratory, upon the civilian components of the Army. As I have said, this is the greatest proof that could be obtained of their insincerity in claiming to be advocates of the cause of peace and democracy. Without civilian reserve components, and particularly the R. O. T. C., we would have to maintain a standing army of at least several times the size of our present establishment, and at many times the cost.

I think it is a tribute to our country that we have in this bill an appropriation not for an Army of a million or 2,000,000, but an Army of only 165,000. This is not a war bill. This is not a bill providing appropriations for the purchase of implements of offensive warfare. This is a bill which has to do wholly with our national defense. I have taken pains to quiz Army officers who came before our committee asking for appropriations: "Why do you want the appropriation? Have you war in mind?" With one accord they have said, "No. We seek only a decent national defense."

Many of the European and Asiatic nations have compulsory military training for all male citizens; every young man, upon reaching military age, is required to serve for a period from 2 to 4 years in the army or navy, at the conclusion of which he becomes a reservist, available for service at the will of the government, war or no war.

In America, we shun that undemocratic policy. No person, in college or out, is compelled by the Federal Government to take military training or enter the military or naval service except after the Congress has declared a state of war. We seek to maintain a small standing Army, with a trained civilian reserve of reasonable strength; both of these are strictly volunteer so far as the Federal Government is concerned. Our main reliance in time of emergency is in our Organized Militia, by which we nowadays mean the National Guard and the Organized Reserves; it is the best insurance we could have against the militarism which the radical pacifists preach about despising.

Mr. President, I pray that this amendment may be overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am not going to undertake to answer all the arguments which have been offered, but I want to say a few words in defense of my amendment.

There is nothing in the Morrill Act or in the National Defense Act to require compulsory military training in a land-grant college or any other college, any more than there is a requirement for compulsory training in agriculture or the mechanical arts. Certainly no one will try to make the argument that a course in agriculture is made compulsory under the Morrill Act or any other act applying to our land-grant colleges. Such courses are admittedly elective. In the National Defense Act reference is made to colleges where a course in military training is either elective or compulsory.

Mr. President, my amendment would simply protect students at the universities and colleges which have compulsory military training against being thrown out of college because they have religious scruples against military training. It has been stated that if their right to object to military training were recognized they might object to paying taxes. It seems to me that is a very far-fetched argument. There is a special provision for the collection of taxes, and I have never heard anyone object to paying taxes because of any religious scruples, or anything of the kind; and if they did I am sure they would not get far with it. I am surprised that that argument should be made by anyone.

The eminent Senator from Vermont stated that we should be prepared, and that this was a part of our preparedness program. He stated that we should be prepared so that no other nation would dare to attack us.

Mr. President, that sounds rather strange to me, because while I will admit that we probably might be prepared so that no other one nation would dare to attack us; but in recent wars it has been customary for a group of nations to form an alliance and make war together; and if half a dozen or a dozen foreign nations should "gang-up" against the United States, it would be absolutely impossible for this country to arm so that such a group of nations could not successfully attack us. Of course, under the modern system of warfare, there is no such thing as adequate defense. It is absolutely impossible for any nation to prepare adequately to defend itself; and that fact has been demonstrated time after time by the modern methods of warfare.

The eminent Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who has charge of this bill, says that this is not a war bill, but a bill for defense. I call the attention of Members of the Senate to the fact that in the hearings on this bill before the House committee on page 138 there is given the increased expense for increase of the Army carried in this bill, and the increased expense is $5,681,329. Of course, that does not amount to much as compared with our total appropriations for war purposes, but it is for increase in the Army in this bill over what we have ever had before in peacetime; and this is one of the largest appropriations we have ever had in peacetime. We are spending this year a billion dollars for war purposes—not for defense, but for preparations for war—and we are appropriating another billion dollars for the coming year.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FRAZIER. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to reply very briefly, because there is a reply to the reference the Senator has made to the House hearings.

We decided here, in this very place, and the House agreed to it, that the standing Army of the United States should be 165,000. It so happened that it took a little time to bring the enrollment up to 165,000, so the appropriation was made for the number we had—one hundred and sixty-two or one hundred and sixty-three thousand. This appropriation is not for something new. The appropriations here are for an Army of the size which the Congress, after due consideration, established—165,000 men.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, of course the increase in the Army has been authorized by Congress. That is a part of the war propaganda; but it is something new to have 165,000 trained soldiers, because we never have had that number of soldiers in peacetime up until this present provision in the pending bill. We have not that number now.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from North Dakota himself was here when we enacted 2 years ago the law in which we fixed the size of the Army at 165,000 men.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, I appreciate that. I voted against it, just as a number of other Senators did; but it was put over as a part of the war propaganda. We have been spending more money in peacetimes since the World War than any other nation on the face of the earth has been spending for so-called preparedness, until during the last year or two some of the other nations have outstripped us. Why? Because the United States has been spending so much money, has been setting such an example of preparation for war, building battleships costing $50,000,000 apiece that one bomb will sink to the bottom of the ocean.

It is said that this bill is for defense. That is what was said about the Navy bill, too, that it was for defense. We do not need great battleships for defense. We do not need aircraft carriers for defense. We do not need this increase of the Army for defense, because there is no country that we know of, or that anyone else knows of, that is even thinking of attacking the United States at the present time.

Up on the 3,000 miles of border between Canada and the United States we have an undefended frontier, and have had it for 120 years. This is the one hundred and twentieth anniversary of the treaty with Canada under which there were to be no fortifications, no military armament, along that border. The one hundred and twentieth anniversary of that treaty is being celebrated all over the Nation this year, especially along the Canadian border.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I suppose Ethiopia felt moderately safe, too; did she not? No doubt the Ethiopians thought they had protection because nobody would attack them.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is a rather far-fetched question, too. A few years ago Ethiopia made a pretty good showing in a war against Italy, and Italy was trying to get even; that is all.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Is any part of the appropriation contained in this bill for the purpose of building fortifications between the United States and Canada?

Mr. FRAZIER. Not a cent of it. None is needed.

Mr. DAVIS. I should protest against it if that were the case.

Mr. FRAZIER. None is needed.

Mr. DAVIS. I agree with the Senator that none is needed.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. We all know the great interest of the Senator from North Dakota in appropriations for matters of national defense. I notice that the bill carries a considerable appropriation. Does not the Senator think we ought to be thinking about balancing the Budget? We cannot continue to spend more than we are taking in without coming face to face with the possibility of the collapse of our credit structure. As a gesture in that direction, does not the Senator think we ought to require the States along the seacoast, at any rate, to put up at least 40 percent of the money carried in this bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. FRAZIER. I think that is a very appropriate question; but when it comes to appropriations for war purposes, balancing the Budget does not count. Not even the 40 percent or the 25 percent that the States should put up has any bearing at all on our so-called adequate national defense appropriations.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. One of the interesting things about this bill is that when it came here, it came with figures which were given us by the Budget Bureau. So the official body having to do with balancing the Budget determined how much we should spend for the military bill; and that is the amount carried by the bill, except that it is a few thousand dollars less than the amount suggested by that body.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. FRAZIER. That is another interesting thing—to think that our Budget Bureau will approve appropriations of almost any amount for war purposes; but when it comes to something for relief, or for the Indians, or for agriculture, it is "contrary to the President's financial program", and cannot be approved.

That is the situation. It is rather strange that our Budget Bureau will go the limit—"the sky is the limit"—on war appropriations, appropriations for an increase in the Army, increase in the Navy, and the air forces. That is all right; yes, that is what we must have; but many other bills authorizing appropriations for the general welfare of the people are held to be contrary to the President's financial program, and must not be approved.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator regard it as singular that when the Congress of the United States in 1933, at a time of most profound national crisis, appropriated a sum of money for the purpose of reemployment, putting people back to work immediately, the first allocation which was made from that sum was nearly $400,000,000 for the purpose of building battleships and other naval craft, many of which have not yet been constructed? So far from having any effect on reemployment in 1933, a great deal of that construction has not yet been undertaken, and 2 years later plans had not even been drawn for some of it.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have thought that was very queer, but I did not intend to say anything about it. I appreciate the Senator's action in bringing it up, however.

In the United States today there are 174 colleges and schools, including all of the land-grant colleges in the United States except three, in which military training is compulsory. All I ask in this amendment is that the boys who have religious scruples against taking instruction in military tactics shall be exempted from such military training, and be allowed to take their courses in the colleges and get their degrees. That is all I am asking.

Mr. President, I shall not take any more time. If there is no further discussion, I should like to have a roll call on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. FRAZIER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pope
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Davis	Lee	Reynolds
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Robinson
Bankhead	Duffy	Lodge	Russell
Barkley	Ellender	Logan	Schwartz
Bilbo	Frazier	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Black	Gerry	Lundeen	Smathers
Borah	Gillette	McKellar	Smith
Bridges	Green	McNary	Steiwer
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, N. H.	Harrison	Moore	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Hatch	Murray	Townsend
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Truman
Capper	Herring	Nye	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hitchcock	Overton	Wagner
Chavez	Holt	Pepper	Wheeler
Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. FRAZIER. I again ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 63, line 20, after the words "Officers' Training Corps", to insert the following:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for or toward the support of any compulsory military course or military training in any civil school or college, or for the pay of any officer, enlisted man, or employee at any civil school or college which suspends, expels, or otherwise penalizes students who, because of conscientious convictions or because of religious belief, object to enrollment in courses of military instructions; but nothing herein shall be construed as applying to essentially military schools or colleges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHITE. I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I understand that on this question he is paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. If present, my colleague [Mr. HALE] would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] are detained from the Senate on important public business.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] are detained because of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL]. If my colleague were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "nay", and I understand that if present and voting the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] would vote "yea."

I also announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

I also announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is detained in a meeting of the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 55, as follows:

YEAS—15

Bulow	Frazier	Johnson, Colo.	Pope
Capper	Gillette	La Follette	Thomas, Utah
Clark	Hitchcock	Lundeen	Wheeler

So Mr. FRAZIER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I present one more amendment from the committee.

Yesterday the Senate agreed to a blanket amendment providing that wherever the word "Warfare" appeared in the phrase "the Chemical Warfare Service", the word "Warfare" should be omitted. I ask that that action may be reconsidered, with the exception of the title on page 45, in order that a more formal amendment may be offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 8, after the words "Chemical Warfare Service", and wherever they appear in the bill, it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "which shall hereafter be known as the Chemical Service."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, much as I regret it, I feel that I must oppose the amount recommended by the committee in the pending appropriation bill for the War Department.

I am for a reasonable expenditure for the needs of the Military Establishment, but the $600,000,000 carried by this bill is entirely too large. The Congress already has directly appropriated $528,000,000 for the Navy for the next fiscal year. These two measures mean a total of $1,123,000,000 for the Army and Navy for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. President, we cannot afford to ignore the rapidly increasing national debt and the ever-mounting Federal taxes.

This month the Treasury financed another issue of Federal securities, $800,000,000 in all. Of this total, $300,000,000 was for refinancing; the other half-billion dollars was added to the national debt.

By June 30 the national debt will have reached the stupendous total of thirty-six and one-quarter billions of dollars, by far the highest in our history. Thirty-six and a quarter billion dollars is just too much money for the mind to grasp. One of the things it means is that the American taxpayer has to raise practically $1,000,000,000 a year to pay interest on the total.

The worst of it is that the national debt continues to grow each year. The Treasury deficit this year will be between two and three billion dollars. Uncle Sam keeps on spending nearly twice as much as his income.

The time has come to quit borrowing for operating expenses. Congress must see to it that existing governmental expenditures are held within reasonable bounds, and provide only the amounts necessary to carry on. We must call a halt on this huge spending program.

It is my deliberate judgment, Mr. President, that this vast expenditure of one and one-eighth billion dollars in preparations for war is uncalled for. It is extravagant. It is unfair to the taxpayer. It will call for increased appropriations by other nations to "keep up with Uncle Sam" in the matter of war preparations. It is wicked, and in the larger sense criminal, for the United States to spend these immense sums.

We are now spending nearly four times as much in preparing for another war as we were spending just prior to our entry into the World War. We talk loudly of peace, and then prepare for war—not a war of defense, but a war of aggression—on a scale that causes at least one foreign nation to race madly into certain bankruptcy because its leaders tell their people they must arm to defend against the United States. You and I know this is not true, but they point to our more than a billion dollars a year for war, and believe it.

Mr. President, I yield to no one in my sincere desire to appropriate sufficient funds for adequate national defense; but these appropriations we are making are not for national defense. They are of a size that indicates preparation for making war in foreign lands.

Look at the record. In 1930 we appropriated some $838,000,000 for the Army and Navy. In 1931 we appropriated about the same amount; a little more in 1932; still more in 1933, though by this time relief funds were being poured into the Army and Navy by the hundreds of thousands of dollars. In 1934 the direct appropriation for the Navy was cut to $297,000,000; for the Army it was $408,000,000. The Navy drew heavily on funds intended to be expended for work relief.

In 1935 we apparently entered thoroughly into the world-wide armament race. The Army appropriation jumped to four hundred and eight-nine millions; the Navy appropriation to four hundred and thirty-six millions. Last year the Army appropriation was six hundred and eighteen millions, the Navy appropriation five hundred and twenty-nine millions. This year we have appropriated five hundred and twenty-eight millions for the Navy, and today are proposing another six hundred and ten millions for the Army.

Mr. President, I do not see how civilization is going to survive these preparations for wars, to say nothing of the wars themselves. Last year some 60 nations expended eleven thousand million dollars for so-called national defense. In the past 5 years, $32,000,000,000 have been spent on armaments. The United States has spent four and one-half billion dollars on its Army and Navy.

Now we are planning to expend another one and one-eighth billion dollars next year, at a time when the Budget is unbalanced, and every resource is being strained to carry the burdens of government.

Mr. President, I cannot allow this appropriation bill to pass without raising my voice in protest. I do not want our boys sent abroad again to fight another nation's wars. I will never vote to do that. It is my firm conviction that building up these extravagant war machines in this Nation will lead inevitably to another war abroad, and will again call our boys overseas.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reply to what the Senator from Kansas has just said. I am just as much for peace as he is.

I want the Senate to see how well the Department itself dealt with this problem. It asked the various divisions of the Army for their requests for this year. The figures, when they came in, amounted to approximately $590,000,000. The Secretary of War went over these figures with the Chief of Staff and the headquarters staff, and reduced the figures to $450,000,000. The Department itself cut off $140,000,000. Then these figures were submitted to the Bureau of the Budget. The Bureau of the Budget allowed $410,936,000. The bill, as we have it before us now, is under the Budget by a few thousand dollars.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator tell the Senate how the present bill compares with the bill of last year?

Mr. COPELAND. It appropriates more money than the bill of last year, and more money than the bill of the year preceding that.

Mr. CLARK. I ask the Senator, then, instead of comparing the figures with the estimates of the various departments and the estimates of the various bureaucrats in the departments and the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget, if he will compare the present bill with the Army appropriation bill of last year, and the one of the year before that, and the one of the year before that.

Mr. COPELAND. When we come to total figures this year, of course we shall have an increase over last year, on account of our liberal appropriation for flood control.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator also knows that the appropriation for military purposes is considerably in excess of that of last year.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. And the appropriation of last year was considerably in excess of the appropriation of the previous year.

Mr. COPELAND. It was.

Mr. CLARK. And the appropriation of the year before last was considerably in excess of the appropriation of the year before that. So, in times of profound peace, when there is expressed on every side a desire and necessity for economy, we go on, year after year and year after year, appropriating more money, squandering more money for the purpose of preparing for another war.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Missouri, I will say that the increase this year is found in the increased cost of subsistence for the Army, and increased cost of uniforms and equipment. So, Mr. President, as we have increasing prosperity and higher prices, we shall have to pay more for the maintenance of the same sized force.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator another question. What was the decrease in the military appropriation bill during the years of depression, when prices of uniforms and prices of subsistence and prices of foodstuffs were continually going down? When wheat was selling for two-bits a bushel out in Kansas, during the days of the Hoover depression, how much was the military appropriation bill reduced in amount?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot answer that question, because I was not in charge of the bill.

Mr. CLARK. No; but the Senator was a member of this great body at that time.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. POPE. The Senator stated that the amount of this appropriation bill exceeds the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget. Will the Senator state how much it exceeds the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstood me. The appropriation bill is under the Budget estimate.

Mr. POPE. How much under the Budget estimate?

Mr. COPELAND. Five or six thousand dollars. It is a very small amount, but we are under the Budget estimate.

Mr. POPE. Yesterday, when there was discussion with reference to certain items, I understood that they exceeded the estimate of the Budget Bureau. The amount appropriated for the National Guard, for instance, exceeded the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. COPELAND. That is true; but the committee was able to exercise economies in other quarters, so that the sum total of the Budget estimates that came to us was in excess of the appropriations contained in the bill.

Mr. POPE. Some five or six thousand dollars?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; it is a very small amount.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On pages 82 and 83 it is proposed to strike out section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation made by this act shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any post exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange within any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, save and except for real assistance and convenience to military personnel and civilians employed or serving at military posts and to retired enlisted naval personnel in supplying them with articles of small personal needs, not similar to those furnished by the Government: Provided, That the commanding officer of the post at which any such exchange is situated shall certify on the monthly report of the post exchange council that such exchange was, during the period covered by such report, operated in compliance with this section.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee if he is willing to accept the amendment and take it to conference.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in order that the amendment may be considered in conference, and deliberately considered, I am willing, for the committee, so far as I am concerned, to take it to conference. I do not make any apologies to the Senator as to the fate of the amendment in the conference, but at least it will be considered there on its merits.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In explanation of the amendment, I wish to say very briefly that when the military establishments were first installed, small post exchanges and canteens were provided. At that time the canteens sold small articles for personal use for the Military Establishment, such as soft drinks, cigarettes, and articles of similar character. The post exchanges, however, have developed until today they have become great department stores where everything is sold that the soldier personnel may wish to buy. If the personnel cannot purchase what they desire at a post exchange, orders are placed, and in that way whatever they may desire is purchased, including automobiles, radios, and what not. The amendment offered by me is intended to curb post-exchange activities and to limit somewhat the articles that may be sold in such canteens or post exchanges.

I ask that the amendment be adopted, if agreeable to the Senate, and that it may go to conference, so that the conferees may work out, if possible, some schedule of the articles that should be sold in the post exchanges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to refer to a proviso in the bill which is part of the amendment under the heading "United States Soldiers' Home", and I will say that at the conclusion of my remarks I will ask unanimous consent for reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was adopted with the idea in mind of moving to strike out that portion of the amendment which begins in line 13, on page 77, and which reads as follows:

Provided further, That effective July 1, 1937, the Board of Commissioners of the Home may prescribe the duties to be performed and fix the compensation to be paid for personal services rendered by hospital orderlies and member employees of the Home without regard to the provisions of the Classification Act, 1923, as amended, or any other law relating to payment for personal services.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that that amendment was rejected yesterday.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I apparently anticipated what the Senator from Washington might say, and yesterday the Senate struck out the language to which he has referred.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 845, being House Joint Resolution 375, which proposes to extend certain taxes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I was going to ask the Senator if he would consent to having the unfinished business temporarily laid aside, in order that I may ask the Senate to consider the railway employees retirement bill, about which, I think, there will be very little debate and, I am sure, no opposition?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course the Senator appreciates that the joint resolution provides for an extension of the so-called nuisance taxes, many of which will expire on the 30th of June. I am very much interested also in the Railroad Retirement Act, and I know that it should pass before a definite date. I understand that its provisions have been agreed upon, and from the information I have received it will not take over 30 minutes or so to pass the bill. I cannot imagine there will be any opposition to it. So, with the understanding that the joint resolution affecting the revenue may be proceeded with immediately following the disposition of the railroad retirement bill, I am willing to lay aside temporarily the joint resolution, and I hope the measure in which the Senator from New York is interested will be expedited just as much as possible.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator for his cooperation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what was the request made by the Senator from New York?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks that the unfinished business, the joint resolution providing for the extension of certain taxes, be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may consider House bill 7519.

Mr. McNARY. The request is that the unfinished business be laid aside merely temporarily?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

RETIREMENT OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider at this time Order of Business 812, which is House bill 7519. Except for a few changes in grammar, the House bill is practically identical with Senate bill 2395, which the Committee on Interstate Commerce has reported favorably, and which is now upon the Senate Calendar.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I understand that the bill which has passed the House, and which is now before the Senate, is identical in substance with the bill reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. And which was a compromise between conflicting groups?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7519) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I shall cooperate with the Senator from Mississippi by making as brief a statement as possible upon this bill. I am sure that all Senators, except those who became Members of the body during the present year, remember the subject matter of the bill. The first bill on the subject was passed in 1934, but was declared to be unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court by a decision of 5 to 4. In order to meet the objections raised by the United States Supreme Court, the Congress passed another act in 1935, which is now the law. The railroads began an action for the purpose of testing the constitutionality of the second act, and succeeded in securing an injunction in the district court here, enjoining the board from imposing the tax upon the railroads and the employees.

While this litigation was proceeding, I think it was the President of the United States who suggested to the contending parties that they make an effort to agree upon legislation which would protect the workers and at the same time obviate the necessity of further litigation and thereby eliminate the running of the gauntlet by the second law. I may say, however, that my personal view is that the second law is constitutional. So the two parties, the representatives of all the railroads, employing now about a million and a half men, met with the representatives of 21 unions, which represent 92 or 93 percent of all the workers upon the railroads of the country, and, after a prolonged series of conferences, they finally agreed upon the measure which is now before the Senate.

So I am authorized to say that the 21 unions—and there are no other unions in the railway industry—and all the representatives of the railroads of the country agreed upon the provisions of the pending bill. It was considered by the House, and after very short debate was passed with only one dissenting vote. There are very few changes made. This bill is really an amendment to the 1935 act, which I had the honor of introducing in the Senate. I may state briefly the changes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. WAGNER. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I have confidence in the Senator's judgment as a lawyer. Does the Senator believe, inasmuch as the Supreme Court of the United States has executed a volte-face and has lately handed down 11 decisions sustaining New Deal laws, that this bill would pass the test before that honorable tribunal?

Mr. WAGNER. I am very confident that it would, but, as a matter of fact, I may say to the distinguished Senator from Arizona that the railroads agreed with the representatives of the workers that if this measure were enacted they would not test its constitutionality, but accept it as law of the land.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from New York, who is as able a lawyer as is any Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, believed——

Mr. WAGNER. I wish that were so.

Mr. ASHURST. That the original law was constitutional?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. This next question may not be fair—and if it be unfair I shall withdraw it—does the Senator believe, assuming that the Supreme Court of the United States has not executed a volte-face, that this bill would be sustained?

Mr. WAGNER. That is a very difficult question. I am sure that under the recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court, particularly in the Social Security case, this proposed law would be declared to be constitutional.

Mr. ASHURST. Mark you, there is not even a remote suggestion of criticism on my part against that honorable body, the Supreme Court, for executing a volte-face and practicing inconsistency. I rejoice that the Court did it; they probably saved the country by so doing.

Mr. WAGNER. I think, of course, there is another very gratifying thing involved in this particular proposed legislation, and that is that the great railroads of the country and the representatives of the workers have gotten together and, by cooperation, have agreed upon a bill which is new in the railroad industry.

Mr. CLARK and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield first to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. In response to what the Senator from Arizona said, as a matter of fact is it not true that this bill is drawn with particular reference to the line laid down by the Supreme Court decision in the first railroad labor case?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. We are trying to avoid, and I am sure we have avoided, all the questions raised by the Supreme Court in that decision.

Mr. CLARK. While I am on my feet let me say, in consonance with what the Senator from New York has said, that I believe the procedure with regard to this bill is the most hopeful thing that has happened in the United States in a great many years with regard to the relationship between employer and employee. We have had the employers in a great industry of the United States and their employees sit down across a table and work out a scheme by which and under which they are able to come together and ask the Congress of the United States to enact a law for their larger mutual development, which, as I said, is one of the most hopeful things that has happened in the United States in a great many years.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree with the Senator, and I want them to be encouraged by Congress rather than discouraged.

Mr. CLARK. I am proud of the fact that a distinguished citizen of Missouri, Hon. Charles M. Hay, whom I am happy to call my personal friend, has borne so important a part in working out this epoch-making legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Undoubtedly the Supreme Court of the United States, in reversing itself in one or two cases and practicing inconsistency, was emulating the example set by the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I had never done anything else in public life I am glad that I have taught at least the Supreme Court not to persist in error when they perceive they are in error. If Senators, when they know they are in error, will not cling with too great a steadfastness to the error, but will reverse themselves, they will render even a nobler service than they are rendering now. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. If that is the case I am sure the Senator from Arizona will join with me and the rest of us in fighting the bill to pack the Supreme Court.

Mr. ASHURST. It would be unfair to the Senator from New York to prolong this colloquy, and I have no intention of doing so.

Mr. WAGNER. I think we have settled the controversy.

Mr. ASHURST. I cannot join the able Senator from Montana, and let me say that I regard him as one of the ablest lawyers in the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I cannot join with the Senator from Montana in opposing a reasonable bill that labor throughout the country has unanimously approved. On the one side are the laboring interests, the farmers, and the producers; on the other side the Liberty League and Wall Street. Choose which side you wish. I have made my choice.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I decline to yield further, I think we have gotten far afield and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will charge me with lacking cooperation.

I am going to point out only a few of the changes in the law of last year which are proposed by the bill now before the Senate. I think this bill embodies a great improvement of that act.

I suppose those of us familiar with the subject of pensions know that one of the leading authorities on that subject is Mr. Murray Latimer, a member of the Railway Retirement Board, who has made a life study of the subject. He told me that the bill which we are considering now is a generous measure judged in terms of all the measures of social insurance for workers throughout the entire world. That is a very broad statement, but he is willing to stand on it.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is not that condition to which the Senator just referred the final culmination of the relationship between labor and the railroad officials around the table practicing collective bargaining for years and years?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and that is the reason why I made the statement I did. Of course, someone can always find objections to any pension bill. There are always some seeking to get under the coverage; and we sympathize with their efforts, no doubt. But in all these cases we have to consider the cost, we have to consider the question of a pleasant relationship between employer and employee, and, finally, we have to consider the matter of justice for all concerned. Here and there individuals may find fault with the bill, but I really think it is one of the finest pension bills ever considered. It has certain advantages over the present act.

In the first place, the coverage is extended expressly to railroad labor organizations, railroad associations, traffic associations, and is made more clearly applicable to subsidiaries of railroad companies such as refrigerator storage and other facilities. In other words, it covers a greater number of employees, not only those directly in the railroad business but those associated with it, and in that regard it is more liberal than the present act.

Secondly, coverage is extended by the express provision, which is absent from the present act, that periods of absence from work because of sickness shall be counted in estimating the period of service upon which the amount of retirement benefits are to be based. The Board has had some difficulty in interpreting the present law and determining, when a man was sick for a period of time, whether he during his absence retained the relationship of employee to employer. The pending bill will clarify that difficulty.

Another extension of coverage is that retirement for disability with benefits, even without 30 years of service, may be taken advantage of at the age of 60 instead of 65. That represents a reduction of 5 years. In return for this benefit the general retirement age after 30 years of service is raised from 50 to 60, and I think that is a very fair provision.

Let me state what else the bill now before us provides which last year's act did not provide. There are 47 out of about 50,000 workers who have long ago retired from service and are receiving pensions from the railroads for whom they worked for a long number of years. These are men of 70 years of age and over. They are now receiving a pension from the railroads. Under the act of last year that pension was cut out. We did not provide for that pension and that raised a very serious question. Now we transfer those funds and the 47 pensioners will now become pensioners of the national system and will be paid by the Railway Retirement Board the pensions which they were being paid previously by the railroads. If there are any employees now receiving a pension who receive more than $120 a month they are not transferred, but the railroads of the country have made an agreement, in the conference of which we are speaking, that they will continue until death to pay these benefits to those employees. These are benefits which heretofore were not provided for in the act of last year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have had a number of inquiries regarding this point and I wish the Senator would discuss it briefly for the RECORD. Were there substantial collections under the old law, and what becomes of those funds if there were such collections?

Mr. WAGNER. The collections were restrained by the courts.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And none was made?

Mr. WAGNER. There was a small amount collected and that will be taken care of in the tax bill which will follow this measure. It has nothing to do with the pending measure.

Under the second Railway Retirement Act, all years of service before the passage of the act could be counted in calculating the benefits. Under the amendments to the act in the bill now before us, the period before the passage of the act of August 1929 can be counted only if the employee was in service on that date.

Some objection has been raised to this provision by a very small group representing not more than 4,000 out of 1,500,000. Let us analyze the situation.

Here is an example: A young man might have worked for a railroad 15 or 20 years, and then have severed his connection with it altogether and gone to other employment. As a matter of fact, the case I am now relating is a case which actually came before the Board. He read that this bill would give him credit for all prior service if he should be reemployed by the railroad; so he returns to the railroad to be employed for a day, leave it, go back to his own employment, and then apply for this pension. His original employment took place at a time when a law of this kind was not under consideration; and if we were to provide for all such cases, of course the younger men who are now employed on the railroads would have to bear a large part of that burden, and the Retirement Board has estimated that the total capitalized value of the annual payments necessary to meet such cases would amount to a half billion dollars—and that for men who really have no rights at all.

I think it is unfair to ask the younger men in the service to carry that burden by yearly contributions into the fund totaling half a billion dollars in the aggregate, for men who had absolutely severed their relationship with the railroads. If such men wish to begin participating in a pension system, they may reenter the service. Many of them are men around 40 years of age. They would still easily have 20 to 25 years service. They may thus begin a period of service which will eventuate, when they are 65 years of age, in their receiving a pension.

Mr. WHITE and Mr. WHEELER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield first to the Senator from Maine, who first rose.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as I understand, the men to whom the Senator refers as leaving the service are men who left voluntarily in large part because they saw better opportunities elsewhere.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Their retirement was voluntary.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true. If we could stand the burden, I should be delighted to help those men; but most of them severed their connection with the railroads some years ago, and severed it completely.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. But what about the workers who have been laid off during the depression, employees who may not have been furloughed, so as clearly to come under the act? Notwithstanding the fact that they have been laid off during the past 5 years, and have not worked since they were laid off or furloughed, many of these men have served for a considerable length of time, and yet do not come under this pension bill.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. WHEELER. From my State I have had at least 1,500 communications calling attention to the fact that some employees are not being treated as fairly as they ought to be under this measure.

Mr. WAGNER. I know their grievance, and I sympathize with their situation; but a pension system must start somewhere. We cannot provide a pension system for an industry, or for a large class of persons, and then go back to men who years ago worked for the same employer, and say, "Because you have had that service, although you have made no contribution, we are going to give you a portion of the pension provided under this system."

Frankly, the younger men in the system complain that they would have to carry over all a burden of half a billion dollars which they think, if any one is to carry, the Government ought to carry. If there is any distress among these older workers, I am quite willing that the Government shall make some provision for them; but such a provision would not logically come in a bill of this kind, and it would upset the entire arrangement and agreements that have been made, and the financial consideration that has been given this legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I correctly understand the Senator, in any case where a railroad employee had voluntarily severed his relation with the company in order to accept other employment, no matter how long he had been out of the railroad service, if he came back into the service for only a week——

Mr. WAGNER. An hour; there is a case where a man worked for 2 hours.

Mr. BARKLEY. He would then revive all the rights he would have enjoyed if he had been continuously in the service?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. That situation cannot be reconciled with a pension system such as this. What will happen, of course, will be that the railroads will not carry this terrific burden, either, so they will refuse to reemploy such men; whereas, if we do not have this provision, since most of these are still young men, they will be reemployed, and then will begin the service which ultimately will entitle them to a pension. I think it is really helping these men, therefore, to deny them credit for time of prior service.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, at the outset I desire to say that I feel that probably the railroad brotherhoods and the railroads themselves have attempted to work out the best possible bill. However, there is no question in my mind but what injustices have been done, particularly with reference to the employees upon the Milwaukee Railroad, which runs through my State and through the rest of the Northwest. I intend to offer an amendment, and I am doing it at the request of the men who are employed or have worked for the Milwaukee Railroad and who feel that they have been discriminated against in this measure.

I appreciate the fact that this amendatory bill is a compromise measure between the class I railroads and railroad employees, and I understand that they have come to an agreement whereby the class I railroads claim that they will not contest the constitutionality of the measure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield; yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Assuming that the bill as presented here represents a contract or agreement between the railroads and their employees, what effect would result from materially changing the contract into which they have entered? Would the adoption of an amendment such as has been discussed alter the relationship between the railways and their employees? Would the railroads be bound by it if their arrangement should be changed? Would the employees be bound by it?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator, in answer to that question——

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas was looking at me. Did he wish to have me answer the question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I was looking at the Senator from New York only because of the contrast between his appearance and that of the Senator from Montana. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I appreciate that the Senator from New York is a much better-looking man.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator from Montana let me answer that question, or would the Senator from Montana himself prefer to answer it? I should like very much to answer it.

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to answer it, because I do not think I will give the answer that the Senator from New York would make.

Mr. WAGNER. I speak with authority upon that subject.

Mr. WHEELER. No agreement which could be entered into between the railroads and the brotherhoods would be binding upon the Congress of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true; but wait just one moment. The Congress could not bind the railroads and the brotherhoods to a contract by the passage of legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course not.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course that is elementary law. I fully understand that the Senator realizes that. My point is this: I am not sure, but I believe I shall have to look at the Senator from New York again if I am to get the answer that I anticipate.

Mr. WHEELER. The answer that the Senator wants.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I would not say the answer that I want. I would say the answer that, as a lawyer, I believe would be the correct answer.

If two persons enter into a contract, and a legislative body is asked to validate that contract by giving it the form of law, and the legislative body, instead of validating the contract entered into, changes the contract, it seems to me either party to it might very well say, "That is not what we were willing to do, and that is not what we agreed to do. Now we will contest its constitutionality. We will fight it if we do not like it"; and the implication arises from the statement of the Senator from New York that at least one of the groups who entered into the contract, and who joined in the preparation of the bill, is unwilling that this change shall be made.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand that. Let me say to the Senator that no matter what agreement the class I railroads entered into with the railroad brotherhoods, that would not prevent any stockholder of the class I railroads from contesting this law.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is entirely true.

Mr. WHEELER. Not only that, but the railroad presidents, the railroad lobby, or the American Railway Association here in Washington, could not bind the stockholders of the railroads of the country. They represent only the class I railroads, as I understand. This bill not only affects the class I railroads but it affects the small railroads of the country which have not participated in the agreement. So there is nothing to this talk about their entering into an agreement, and our changing the agreement, because there cannot be any contract between private parties or groups which will bind Congress.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Passing by the question of the binding character of the agreement, I think we were all given to understand that there was such an agreement between the railroad executives on the one part and the 21 unions making up the labor organizations of the railroads on the other part.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to me perfectly clear that if there is a departure in substance from the legislation upon which those parties agreed, we are either giving an excuse or extending an invitation to contest the validity of the legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is true; but when Senators talk about a binding agreement, there cannot be any agreement which will bind Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator.

Of course, nothing I have said is to be interpreted as indicating an opinion that any private parties, organizations, or others can bind Congress touching a matter of legislation. That also is elementary.

The point I make is that the justification for this legislation is that it represents an accord between the parties especially interested, and an understanding that they will both observe it and both assist in its execution. It follows that if we change the contract contrary to the will of either or both, we relieve them from the undertaking to observe and enforce the statute.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the class I railroads have a moral obligation not to contest the constitutionality of the law; but any stockholder can contest its constitutionality. Not only that, but a stockholder of a class of railroads not represented in the formulation of the agreement, as well as such class railroad itself may contest the constitutionality. So as a matter of practical effect the so-called agreement into which they enter is not worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think that conclusion follows. We all know that the right of a stockholder to sue the officers of a corporation for an alleged breach of their trust and failure to perform their duties, is a very different thing from having the corporation itself undertake not to bring such a suit.

Mr. WHEELER. A stockholder can say, "You are paying out money"——

Mr. ROBINSON. "Which you have no right to pay out."

Mr. WHEELER. "Which you have no right to pay out." They can say the law is unconstitutional and that consequently they are paying out money unnecessarily, for the law is unconstitutional.

I do not think this measure is unconstitutional, and I think it will be upheld. I do not care to go into that, and would not have mentioned that point if the Senator had not called attention to the fact that that would disrupt it.

I appreciate the fact that the railroads and the railroad brotherhoods have entered into this agreement, but I do desire to call attention to the fact that a large portion of the men who work on the Milwaukee Railroad in my State not only have written to me and sent telegrams to me, but when I was out there recently they came to see me in droves about it. I do not want to disturb the legislation, but I do, as a matter of record, desire to offer some amendments.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. We have talked about the railroad executives and about the members of the railroad brotherhoods. I think it is also fair to say that the members of the committee who participated in the deliberations when this proposed legislation was framed ought to be considered in connection with efforts to change it. There were provisions in the proposed legislation which I did not like. Probably my opposition to those particular provisions would have been impotent anyway; nevertheless, I joined with other members in the committee, after listening to the representatives of the parties, in a unanimous report on the bill to this body.

I just have the feeling—and I say this with great respect—that members of the committee should not undertake to change the proposed legislation to which we all gave our assent in the understanding that we had worked out a compromise satisfactory to the principal parties in interest, and satisfactory to the members of the Senate committee.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana allow me to interrupt?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I have been chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce twice, and I also know something of the difficulty that always ensues when there is a bill affecting employer and employee, I desire to bear testimony to the fact that the atmosphere which surrounded the hearings and the report on the pending bill was most helpful, there was a spirit of give and take, of good comradeship. I think every member of the committee was gratified at the atmosphere that surrounded the report of the employees through their representatives and the action of the 21 A–1 railroads.

I predict that the bill as it now stands will become the model for all other agreements, in that not only is it mutually agreed to, but it is perfectly fair to both sides.

I think where a situation such as this occurs, with the unanimous support of the members of the committee, and with the support of the executives and the employees, we ought to let the measure have a fair chance to be worked out, because of the very facts I have stated.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I agree with the statement of the Senator. I said to the men in my State that it was exceedingly difficult to handle a matter of this kind because their own representative here in Washington had agreed with the railroads with reference to this bill. I wish to point out, however, because of the situation to which attention has been called, some of the things which the men feel are unjust to them.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the Senator to offer an amendment, or has one been offered?

Mr. WHEELER. I am just about to offer the amendment, and will submit it.

Mr. McNARY. Then the Senator particularly desires to make a statement on behalf of the employees of the railroads?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the adoption of certain amendments which I should like to submit to the Senate would correct and make of the bill a far more equitable and liberal measure. Railroad men from all over this Nation have informed me that there is a danger, under section 1 (d) of the Senate bill, as to whether or not there exists an employment relationship if these men were furloughed at the time of the enactment date, August 29, 1935.

Another objection registered to the Senate bill was as to section 2 (a), which apparently denied one receiving benefits under the act the right to engage in other gainful employment. Representatives of the brotherhoods have informed me this morning that these two objections have been overcome by the House bill, which we are now considering.

I wish to offer an amendment to section 3, subsection (b), subdivision (1), by striking out, on page 10, in line 7, the words "shall be", all of lines 8 and 9, and the part of line 10 ending with the word "service."

This amendment would strike from the bill the requirement that to obtain prior-service annuity the employee must have been an employee on the enactment date; and if he was not then employed, an employee's annuity would be based only on service rendered after December 1936. This would permit those whose employment relationship on August 29, 1935, had been voluntarily or involuntarily severed to obtain benefit of their prior service.

I submit the amendment without further statement.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that those who are interested in the proposed legislation in the first place assert that the adoption of the amendment would dislocate their entire costs, and would eventually add to the capital cost half a billion dollars, and they feel they could not require the railroads to live up to an agreement which these 21 unions made with them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, would the amendment take care of the situation of employees who happened to be working for railroads which did not have transient systems?

Mr. WHEELER. No. The next amendment which I intend to offer will take care of that. The amendment I am now offering takes care, for instance, of a switchman who was laid off on account of the depression, who was not furloughed, but was laid off in such manner that he cannot satisfactorily establish the necessary employee-employer relationship.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Who was "fired."

Mr. WHEELER. The worker may have served 20 years, he may have served 25 years, and was then laid off. He has not been able to get back, but if he does get back into the employment, he may not have had a thing to do in the meantime. This would take care of him by giving him a pension determined by service rendered prior to as well as subsequent to the enactment date. A man who has followed railroad service for 25 or 30 years is not ordinarily good for anything else; I mean that it is not easy for him to find other employment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it not a fact that the date which has been fixed in the bill is a date when the number of employees on the railroads, due to the depression, was at a very low figure, taking the average over a period of years, so that those who were discharged during the depression are those who would be the sufferers, under the bill as it is now drawn?

Mr. WHEELER. That is my understanding. I am willing to submit the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 3, subsection (b), subdivision (1), by striking out on page 10 in line 7 the words "shall be", all of lines 8 and 9, and the part of line 10 ending with the word "service."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in section 6. The amendment which I wish to offer to section 6 merely eliminates the requirement in the bill that a person to be eligible to an annuity shall have been an employee on or after the enactment date, as to former employees, who on March 1, 1937, were 70 years of age or over, and who are not being pensioned under the company pension plan or who have relinquished all rights to such pension. This simply places all workers on an equal footing whether they are now under the company pension plans or have been denied their pensions under such plans or have been employed on railroads having no pension plans. This is limited in its application to those who are 70 years of age or over on March 1, 1937, for the reason that the company pensions taken over up to that time are generally not granted before age 70. This amendment, however, does not affect the taking over of all pensions being paid under company plans up to a maximum limit of $120 per month.

I might make the purposes and objectives of the amendment more clear by a specific case. In Montana, the Northern Pacific, the Great Northern, and the C., B. & Q. all have pension systems, the present beneficiaries of which will be transferred under this amendatory retirement act. The Milwaukee Railroad has no pension system, and an employee of that railroad who has retired will receive no annuities under this bill, because his employer, like the Southern Pacific Railroad, failed to establish a pension system for their employees. The retired Milwaukee employee is just as deserving of consideration as the one who worked for another railroad who had established a pension system for its workers.

With that explanation of the amendment I send it to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 6 on page 18, in line 6 after the period it is proposed to insert the following:

An individual who shall not be eligible to a pension under this section or shall relinquish all rights thereto and on March 1, 1937, was 70 years of age or over, shall be eligible, subject to other conditions of this act, to an annuity based upon service prior to the enactment date, without having been an employee on or after the enactment date.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, of course that involves the same question as the previous amendment did, except that it applies to another group. It would provide a pension for one who is not now employed by a railroad, but who has had prior service. It would add tremendously to the cost, Mr. Latimer has assured me, and it would entirely upset the proposed plan.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that the present beneficiaries on the Northern Pacific, the Great Northern, and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy would be transferred under this amendatory retirement act—that is, all those who have retired on those roads would come in because those railroads have a pension plan. But on the Milwaukee Railroad, employees who have retired and who are over 70 years of age will get no pension under this plan.

I submit the amendment for the Senate's approval.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to add only one word. I appreciate the fact that this is a great step toward a permanent and enduring pension plan in the United States for the railroad men. I very much hope that notwithstanding the fact that some of these men have been eliminated, that when the plan gets under operation we can amend it at some subsequent time to take care of some of those people who have been eliminated, and who feel, as I feel, that they are entitled to come under the terms of the measure.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Board has assured me, and I am sure the Senator knows the personnel of that Board, that they will investigate all of these questions, and if there are any injustices which they can discover, they will bring them to the Congress for action next year.

Mr. WHEELER. I am very glad to get that statement from the Senator from New York, and I hope that the Board will do so, because there is a general feeling in my State and some other States that there are some injustices in the bill at the present time which should be rectified. I have informed those interested that I feel that under the circumstances the railroad brotherhoods had done everything they could to get a start, but workers and others wanted the amendment presented with the idea that the subject should be considered by the Senate, and that at some later date, at least, these apparent defects can be corrected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to take only a moment of the Senate's time to call attention to the proposed legislation, and to an act effective in the same field of action which is now on the statute books, as a wholesome and reassuring example to other industries and those engaged in industrial disputes in the United States.

Some 11 or 12 years ago, after the Transportation Act had been on the statute books for some years, under which there was set up the Railroad Labor Board which turned out to be unsatisfactory, an effort was made to repeal that part of the Transportation Act, and to enact a law creating the Board of Mediation.

The late Senator Howell, of Nebraska, was the author of the bill in the Senate, and I had the honor to be the author of the bill in the other body. There was a terrific fight in the other branch of the Congress over the proposed legislation. It failed. During the interim between the adjournment of Congress and the next session, the railroad executives and the railroad labor employees, through their organizations, got together and worked out a measure which was unanimously enacted at the following session of the Congress. That was in 1926, 11 years ago; and that has been one of the most successfully operated and administered laws ever passed by Congress to adjust labor disputes. There has not been a major controversy among the railroad employees from that day to this.

Two or three years ago Congress passed a pension act which was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. Then we passed another one which the district court likewise declared unconstitutional, but which did not reach the Supreme Court. In the meantime the same railroad organizations, the 21 standard brotherhoods, representing more than one million and a half employees, and the executives of all the class I railroads of the United States, have gotten together and agreed upon this pension bill, which, while it may not be perfect, and probably will be subject to amendment in the future, is the most successful effort at real collective bargaining, not only from an industrial standpoint but from a legislative standpoint, that has ever come before the Houses of Congress.

I mention these two instances as wholesome and encouraging examples of what can happen when employers and employees themselves sit down around a table and try to iron out their differences. Because of the legal and parliamentary and constitutional situation, it is necessary that Congress give the stamp of its approval to the action that has been taken; but, as a matter of fact, the measure only constitutes the Government of the United States the agency through which this understanding and agreement between the employers and the employees may be carried out and sanctified by legislative approval.

I hope this example set by more than a million and a half railroad employees and by the more important railroads of the United States may have some effect upon other branches of industry in this country and lead to their trying to adjust their difficulties by mutual agreement.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few brief remarks.

As a member of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has had in charge the railroad retirement bill now before us, I have been genuinely interested in the development of this legislation. I believe the measure now before us, which was so heartily approved by the House of Representatives on June 21, is an improvement over the Act which was declared unconstitutional.

The enactment of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1934 was attempted to be predicated upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States. By a vote of 5 to 4, the Supreme Court decided that the Congressional grant of power in this respect did not include the power to establish an annuity system for retired employees. The measure now before us is not predicated upon the power to regulate commerce, but upon two separate and distinct powers vested by the Constitution in Congress, neither of which was involved in the case holding the Retirement Act of 1934 to be void.

The measure now before us is predicated upon the right of Congress to appropriate money. Section 12 authorizes an appropriation for the purposes of the bill out of the Treasury of the United States. This appropriation is not payable out of any particular fund, nor out of any money earmarked for that purpose.

I submit that the agreement between the railroads and their employees is a great tribute to the principle of collective bargaining, which in reality is nothing more than the systematic cooperation of groups having mutual as well as different responsibilities. Various important legislative enactments have been necessary to serve as the foundation of the present amicable understanding between railway brotherhoods and management; but these steps have been taken, and little by little additions and improvements have been made. I do not hold that the pending legislation completes this process, but it is subject to modification as need shall arise, and is, in my judgment, a continuation of the peaceful and practical settlement of railroad retirement problems, which will do much to establish a pattern for all industry in this most important field of social welfare.

Mr. President, the statesmanship of labor leaders has been matched by the executive wisdom of industrial leaders, and through the cooperation of both sides has come constructive legislation which will bring a benefit not only to railroad employees but to labor and industry generally. This bill will be regarded as a precious document in the home of every railroad man. He will want to have a copy of it to file with his personal papers, for it represents a value comparable to an annuity policy. One railroad veteran told me that he expected to put a copy of this bill in his family Bible; and in truth it rightly belongs there representing, as it does, the intelligent good will of labor and industry using the instrument of collective bargaining for the common good of all.

I submit the statement of Charles M. Hay, counsel for the committee of railroad labor executives, giving a summary of differences and improvements between the act of 1934 and the present measure. I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF CHARLES M. HAY, COUNSEL FOR COMMITTEE OF RAILROAD LABOR EXECUTIVES GIVING SUMMARY OF CHANGES PROPOSED

1. The bill broadens the coverage of the act so as to include in the capacity of employers groups not included in the present act, namely, railroad associations, bureaus, and other joint agencies and the 21 standard railroad labor organizations.

2. The bill broadens the definition of "employment relation" so as to include persons absent on account of sickness and disability who are not "ready and willing" to return to service, thus enabling some 8,000 men now applying for annuities and unable to quality under the existing law, to receive annuities.

3. The bill changes the age from 50 to 60 at which an employee under 65 with 30 years of service may retire with a reduction of one-fifteenth for each year he is under 65. Due to this reduction requirement, this change is, in the practical effect, of little consequence.

4. The bill broadens the definition of "compensation" to include wages for time lost.

5. The bill provides an alternative to determine a fair average monthly wage of an employee where the test period 1924–31 is insufficient to constitute a just and equitable basis.

6. The bill permits a person who is permanently disabled to retire at 60 although having less than 30 years of service, with a reduction of one-fifteenth for each year he is less than 65. This provision is not in the present act.

7. The present act requires a person to retire at 65 or suffer a loss of one-fifteenth of his annuity for each year he continues in service after that age unless he filed with the board a written agreement of the carrier each year for his continuance in service, and it further provides, unconditionally, that he shall suffer a reduction of one-fifteenth of his annuity for each year he continues after 70. The bill contains no such provision but provides that service of a person 65 years of age or over who continues in service after July 1, 1937, shall not be added to his years of service. It further provides that his compensation received after July 1, 1937, shall be disregarded in calculating his annuity if to include it would diminish his annuity.

8. The present act limits the years of service to 30, whether prior or subsequent or both, thus limiting the annuity to $120, whereas the bill has no limit on service after January 1, 1937.

9. The present act has no minimum annuity, whereas the bill provides for a minimum as follows: For persons with 20 years of service who are employed when attaining age 65, the minimum of $40, provided that if the monthly compensation is less than $50 the annuity shall be 80 percent of the monthly compensation, except that if the 80 percent is less than $20 the annuity shall be $20, or the same amount as the monthly compensation, whichever is less. It is further provided that in no case shall the value of the annuity be less than the value of the old-age benefit he would receive under title II of the Social Security Act if his service as an employee after December 31, 1936, were included in the term "employment" as defined in the Social Security Act.

10. The present act provides for the payment upon the death of a person receiving or eligible to receive an annuity of an amount equal to one-half of 1 year's annuity. It provides no death benefit in the case of a person who dies before becoming eligible for an annuity, whereas the bill has a provision applicable to all employees regardless of the time death occurs, allowing as death benefit a sum equal to 4 percent of the aggregate compensation after January 1, 1937, less the amount paid as annuities to the employee or spouse.

11. The bill has a section contemplated and planned for but not contained in the present act, which provides for the taking over of pensioners on the carriers' private pension rolls, and the payment to them of the pensions in the amount originally granted by the carriers, thus restoring the reductions made since 1930.

12. The present act allows prior service to a person who is an employee on enactment date (Aug. 20, 1935) or who is in the service of any railroad at any time thereafter for any length of time, whereas the bill provides that in order to be entitled to prior service a person must be in the service or in employment relation, or totally and permanently disabled on the enactment date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Order of Business 723, being the bill (S. 2395) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935, will be indefinitely postponed.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will make just a brief statement concerning the pending measure. The joint resolution extends the so-called "nuisance" taxes for a period of 1 year. As the joint resolution passed the House it provided for an extension of the taxes for a period of 2 years. It was my opinion that they should have been extended for 2 years, but the committee thought it was best merely to extend them for 1 year, in view of the fact that if the suggestion of the President is followed, there will be a general revision of the tax laws next January.

That is one of the first questions, I should say, that we ought to decide this afternoon, namely, whether the Senate is going to adopt the 2-year extension or the 1-year extension. I think we are going to need the money derived from these taxes for at least 2 years the way things are now going.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the defeat of the committee amendment, so as to provide for a 2-year extension, interfere in any way with the consideration of any readjustment of taxes at any time during the 2-year period? In other words, if we extend these taxes for 2 years we can still consider, when the time comes, a readjustment of the whole tax structure?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct. It would not interfere at all; and certainly I am sure that every Senator wants to remove some of these taxes—all of them if possible—at the earliest possible date.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit another question, if we only extend them for 1 year, the chances are we will be back here next year extending them again, whereas we might as well do it now for the 2-year period.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the measure did the committee report favorably on the 1-year extension?

Mr. HARRISON. The committee struck from the House joint resolution the 2-year provision and inserted instead 1 year.

Mr. McNARY. I assume that, as chairman of the committee, the Senator from Mississippi desires that action to be approved by the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I just stated that personally I would have preferred to have the extension for 2 years, but the committee recommended 1 year. It is up to the Senate to determine whether they want 2 years or 1 year.

Mr. McNARY. But the proposal for the 1-year period of extension is now before the Senate on a committee amendment, which the chairman of the committee reported and supports?

Mr. HARRISON. I just expressed my views as to that. I will say, in answer to the Senator, that, of course, if the joint resolution were unamended, as the Senator knows perhaps better than anyone else, it would not have to go to conference. I dislike to have to go to conference on the joint resolution. I had hoped that the Senate might pass the joint resolution without amendment, send it on its way to the President, and let him approve it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Does the resolution affect, directly or indirectly, existing excise or tariff rates otherwise than by the extension of the taxes covered by the measure?

Mr. HARRISON. It does not. It extends excise taxes.

Mr. WHITE. And in no other way affects either the tariff or the excise rates?

Mr. HARRISON. It affects them in no other way.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. When did the committee pass on this joint resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. I think it was the latter part of last week.

Mr. CONNALLY. Was there a close vote on the amendment to extend the taxes for 1 year instead of 2 years?

Mr. HARRISON. I may state to the Senator there was not a very full attendance of the committee. I think the Senator at that time was in Texas on some mission.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I was out of the city.

Mr. HARRISON. On this question there was no yea-and-nay vote in the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Mississippi that we all know that the Federal Treasury is going to need the money which will be raised by these taxes, not for 1 year but for 2 years and perhaps for 10 years; I do not know as to that; but most certainly the Government will need it for 2 years. If we extend these taxes for only 1 year, this time next year many Senators are going to be busy in their campaigns and probably they will not be here. So it seems to me, if we are going to extend the taxes at all, we ought to extend them for 2 years. Some Senators might have to face the question right in the middle of their campaign. Fortunately I do not have to come up for election next year, so I will be here to vote on the question; but I wish to say——

Mr. HARRISON. It is my opinion that none of the members had very strong convictions as to whether the taxes should be extended for 2 years or 1 year.

Mr. CONNALLY. There will always be a disposition on the part of timid souls to put off and just take as little of an unpleasant thing as possible; but we know we must have these taxes, and I would rather pull a tooth once and be done with it than to pull it twice. That is what we are going to have to do; we are going to have to extend the taxes now, and then extend them next year, and have the patients kicking and snorting all over the lot. Why not kill the committee amendment and extend the taxes for 2 years?

Mr. HARRISON. Since some of the Senators who have amendments have expressed themselves to me to the effect that there is no question about securing a final vote on the joint resolution tomorrow—I know we cannot pass it this afternoon, because several Senators have indicated that they desire to propose amendments—rather than take up further time this afternoon, and with the assurance of the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Michigan and other Senators who have amendments to offer that we can conclude the consideration of the joint resolution tomorrow, in their belief, within a reasonable time, I thought we would settle the question as to whether there should be a 1-year or 2-year extension this afternoon, and then, if it meets the approval of the Senator from Arkansas, that the Senate could adjourn or recess until tomorrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say that, so far as I am concerned, I wish to assure him that I will cooperate with him to make certain that the joint resolution shall be disposed of tomorrow, and I feel sure that it can then be finally acted on.

Mr. HARRISON. I had hoped we could dispose of it tomorrow, for the very simple reason that the 30th of June is the last day these taxes may be levied unless the law is extended, and for another very potent reason, that the Democrats desire to celebrate on Friday and probably we will not be here on Saturday.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understand there are two very compelling reasons for the passage of the joint resolution tomorrow, and, for both those reasons, I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator's question is addressed to me, I make the same expression as the Senator from Wisconsin does, but I wish to say something about the 1-year extension.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is always helpful in his cooperative spirit.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments of the Committee on Finance were, on page 1, line 6, after the word "therefore", to strike out "1939" and insert "1938", and on page 2, line 2, after the word "thereof", to strike out "1939" and insert "1938", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That title IV, as amended, and parts I, II, III, and IV, of title V, as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, are further amended by striking out "1937" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1938". Section 1001 (a), as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes", approved June 16, 1933, are further amended by striking out "1937" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1938."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there are some very potent reasons for changing the time of the extension from 2 years to 1 year. It is not a matter of "timid souls" or a matter of running away from an issue, but this tax extension involves $650,000,000. It includes the extension of the 3-cent postage, the addition of 1 cent, for another year. It includes excise taxes which, so far as I am concerned, I should like to have extended for many years. But, beyond that, it includes the equivalent of sales taxes upon gasoline, electric energy, lubricating oil, telegraph, telephone, cable, radio facilities, and leased wires, toilet preparations, transportation of oil by pipe lines, mechanical refrigerators, matches, sporting goods, radio sets, and so forth, articles made of fur, firearms, shells, and so forth, brewer's wort and malt sirup, chewing gum, cameras and lenses. It includes taxes on transfers of bonds and deeds of conveyance.

It includes the equivalent of sales taxes upon automobiles and motorcycles, tires and tubes, automobile accessories, and automobile trucks. It includes taxes on issues of bonds and capital stock, on the sales of stock, and upon general amusement admissions.

This in its essence is a general sales tax bill.

Mr. President, there were many affected persons who sought a hearing respecting these taxes. I do not know whether or not, under the present dispensation, a taxpayer has any rights; perhaps all that he is entitled to is a chance to pay after he is "soaked"; but it happens to be the fact that many taxpayers sought an opportunity to present arguments not only to the end that the taxes should be reduced but, in many instances, to show that a reduction of the taxes would increase the revenue. They sought a hearing before the House Ways and Means Committee and were denied it. They sought a hearing before the Senate Finance Committee and were denied a hearing.

Why were they denied a hearing? A motion was made in the Senate Finance Committee to permit them to be heard. It was resisted by the distinguished chairman of the committee solely on the ground that there was not time to hear them, that the joint resolution had to be passed before the 1st of July, as, of course, it does, and there was not time to hear them.

In the face of that situation the committee voted to decline to hear them, but after the committee had voted to decline to hear them, the committee, with 14 members present, including the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], unanimously voted that a year was long enough to extend the taxes; that there was no possible justification to extend them for 2 years without hearings; and that during the intervening year the taxpayers could be heard, and there could be a rational review of the entire situation.

Mr. President, there is no question in the world as to the necessity for the taxes. There probably is not any question in the world about the fact that they are going to be needed for 2 years and probably for more than 2 years. I am very sure they are going to be needed for a very considerable time if the existing program, which defies all economy, continues; and I am perfectly sure they are going to be needed if the gold purchase program continues, because the $650,000 which is to be raised by this extension only pays for the sterile gold which Mr. Morgenthau has purchased since January 1 and put back in the ground again in Kentucky.

By the way, just in passing, I happened to notice in the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune today, a dispatch from London dated June 8, from which I read:

The London bullion market, which has been nervous, today took courage after the Chancelor's statement. Although approximately $1,248,000 worth of gold was sold at 140s. per fine ounce, a decrease of 1½s. from yesterday's price, there were no signs of panic. Most of today's gold was taken by arbitrage houses which will export it to the United States at a handsome profit.

So that for the sake of creating a handsome profit for gold arbitrage houses across the sea, a substantial portion of this money manifestly must be raised.

I am not contesting the fact that the taxes are necessary; I am not contesting the fact that this extension must be immediately voted; but I am submitting, in the face of the refusal of the committee, for good reasons, to hear any of the protests and to entertain any of the discussion respecting what ought to be done in regard to these taxes, that an extension of 1 year is the utmost limit in fair play to those who must assume the burden of paying the assessments.

I think the committee amendment should stand, and I remind the Senate again that it had the unanimous approval of 14 members of the Finance Committee, including its chairman.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment, and it would be proper for me at this time to thank the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. HARRISON] and all the members thereof for the consideration they gave to this measure and for what, in my judgment, is the statesmanlike attitude they have taken.

I speak more particularly of the tax on copper. I am not familiar with the coal industry or the oil industry, but all my lifetime I have been familiar with the copper-producing industry. I said when the depression came upon us, "Give us a high protective tariff on copper and Arizona will not ask a dollar of relief." I repeated that in 1932. I said it in 1934. I say again now, "Give us a high protective tariff upon copper and Arizona will need no assistance in the way of charity or largesses from the Federal Treasury."

For many years—indeed, for decades—Arizona produced one-sixth of all the copper of the world, and for the past 25 years has produced nearly one-third of the copper of the United States. The copper-producing industry in the State of Arizona has increased wages six times within the past year. True, some of the increases were small, but taken altogether they are considerable.

I hope ultimately, with the assistance of my Republican friends if I cannot secure sufficient aid from my Democratic friends, to secure a high protective tariff for the copper-producing industry, and, indeed, for all other American industries.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not need to tell the Senator that I have been as warm a friend of copper protection as he has been. I do not need to tell him that I am just as much interested as he is in having the copper excise tax extended for 2 years or for 10 years. I completely believe in the necessity.

In the face of the situation and in the face of my very deep interest in having this long extension of the copper excise tax, I submit to the Senator that it is evidence of my very deep good faith that I am insisting the extension should be for only 1 year in fairness to all the other people in the country who have to pay $650,000,000 under the terms of this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have been unfortunate if anything I have said would indicate that the able Senator from Michigan has ever been remiss or slacking in any way in his splendid work in behalf of a tariff on copper. Indeed I do not forget that when it looked doubtful as to whether this industry would have any protection at all, it was his strong voice and his splendid power of research that brought forth the material which, in my judgment, was an argument that helped put into law the tariff of 4 cents on copper.

While I am on the subject—and I must ride myself on a "curb bit" and not speak too long—let me say that I have been the subject of some gentle raillery throughout the country, and I am complimented by having the papers even deign to criticize me for the right-about-face that I executed on the tariff question. Mr. President, one-third of a good lifetime has elapsed since I was inducted into the Senate. When I first came here I was a peripatetic, bifurcated volcano, going over the United States speaking for low tariffs and free trade. I made a speech in 1913 for free trade and low tariffs and the Democratic National Committee circulated 200,000 copies of that speech.

Later, having visited the various countries of Europe, having seen the squalor, having seen the poverty, misery, and distress in those countries operating under low tariffs and under free trade, and after making a careful investigation which lasted some years, with the assistance of men able in research, I abandoned my erroneous views regarding tariffs.

Call it inconsistency if you choose, I saw the error of my way, and reverted to the old Jeffersonian, Jacksonian, Madisonian democratic policy of protective tariffs for American industries. Since that time, in order after a fashion to secure unction for the sins I committed as a free-trader and a low-tariff man, I have sought every sensible opportunity to try to spread the doctrine of high protective tariffs for our country. I believe that our country, our working men, and our industries will not have prosperity without high tariffs. That is democratic doctrine; and those Democrats who are for low tariffs have been led away by some heresy that was declared more than 50 years ago.

I know how tiresome is any tariff discussion. James G. Blaine, in his Twenty Years of Congress, said that in the first debate in the House of Representatives in 1789 all was then said that ever could be said in behalf of or against a tariff. I therefore contribute nothing new to the tariff discussion, more than to say that the copper-producing industries of Arizona are now fairly prosperous. Copper industries in Arizona pay almost one-half the wages paid in Arizona. Copper industries in Arizona directly and indirectly pay almost one-half the taxes paid in Arizona. Senators, therefore, will be inclined to forgive any zeal that might appear to be inordinate on my part, and will be inclined to forgive me if I should, from time to time, venture to vex their ears by urging a tariff on copper.

I do not pause merely with a tariff on copper. It would be a selfish, certainly a narrow and circumscribed view, for me to say, "I am for a tariff on copper, but for free trade on what you produce." Hence, I am for a protective tariff on products of the American farm, field, forest, factory, ranch, and mine.

I conclude by thanking the able chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the other members of the committee, without regard to their political affiliations, for what I think is their wise and just action in continuing these tariffs; and when I say I am against the amendment, of course, my able friend from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has no right to assume that I think he is in any way lacking in diligence or is remiss in any duty, or that he has slacked in any way as a protectionist.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator in charge of the bill, and I think probably we have now reached a point where we can agree upon a unanimous-consent proposal, which I ask the Senator to submit.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is the only amendment in the joint resolution, so I ask unanimous consent that not later than 12:30 o'clock on tomorrow, following a recess today, the Senate vote on the pending committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. That is perfectly agreeable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Chair reports back favorably from that committee, with a declaration of understanding to be made a part of the ratification, Executive P (75th Cong., 1st sess.), being a convention to coordinate, extend, and assure the fulfillment of the existing treaties between the American states, signed at Buenos Aires on December 23, 1936, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and the other 20 American republics, represented at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace, held at Buenos Aires in December 1936, and submits a report (Ex. Rept. No. 17) thereon.

The Chair also reports back favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations the nominations of sundry citizens for appointment as Foreign Service officers, unclassified, vice consuls of career, and secretaries in the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of William A. Coates to be postmaster at Arlington, Va. (Office established.)

Mr. COPELAND (for Mr. KING), from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported favorably the nomination of Riley E. Elgen, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia for a term of 3 years from July 1, 1937. (Reappointment.)

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion in the Coast Guard.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of several citizens and officers for appointment or promotion in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in their order the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles Harwood, of Rye, N. Y., to be United States district judge of the Canal Zone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Marion H. Allen to be collector of internal revenue, district of Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Vera P. Ramsey to be postmaster at Pinconning, Mich.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 24, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 23 (legislative day of June 15), 1937

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. John Compton Ball, D. D., of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, we open Thy Book and read that "In the beginning God said let there be light and there was light", and all through the ages the light of Nature has been shining on our pathway; the light of Thy wisdom has guided us and the light of Thy love cheered us. Today we come to utter anew the words given Moses, but we utter them in prayer. O God, let Thy light shine on us. Illuminate our path and problems so that as private individuals and national representatives we may be guided by divine wisdom, actuated by divine love, and motivated by divine power, that we may dwell in the land Thou hast given us as brethren who recognize the same Father and rejoice in a common sonship. May Thy will be done in us this day and Thy kingdom speedily be established over all the earth. In the name of Thy Son, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7328. An act to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484), and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 361. Joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes.

STATUS OF APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to call attention to the condition of the calendar as it confronts the House. The last regular appropriation bill was not passed until June 15. There are at the present time five regular appropriation bills pending, three of which have not even passed the Senate, and this is the 23d day of June. It seems to me the House or the Senate should not be considering minor bills at this time, but should be considering and disposing of the appropriation bills, which must be considered and passed before the 30th of June. The calendar is in the worst condition I have ever known in my legislative experience.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution on un-American activities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

RELIEF BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference .

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, in order to ask a question of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] with reference to a Senate amendment. It appears that the Senate will have the power under the Senate amendment to confirm all employees of the Works Progress Administration receiving over a certain amount of money. The Senate now has the power of confirmation over the State administrators. This amendment is somewhat similar to the provision in the Social Security Board appropriation bill. Is the House going to have an opportunity to express itself on this important amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, I am very bitterly opposed to permitting the amendment to remain in the joint resolution, and, if it is necessary, I would be in favor of bringing it back to the House for an expression of its opinion.

Mr. COCHRAN. With that assurance, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. WOODRUM, BOYLAN, CANNON of Missouri, LUDLOW, MCMILLAN, SNYDER of Pennsylvania, TABER, BACON, and WIGGLESWORTH.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF FISHING ON THE GREAT LAKES

Mr. LUECKE of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUECKE of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, how many of us realize that many varieties of fish which were quite plentiful only a few years ago are today approaching the vanishing point? The sturgeon has all but disappeared from both coastal and inland waters. The salmon has been utterly exterminated in many streams on our eastern seashore, and greatly reduced even in certain streams on the Pacific, with which all of us associate salmon.

On both Atlantic and Pacific coasts the halibut have been definitely reduced in numbers, due to the so-called overfishing. The shad and mullet are diminishing, and the marked decline in the production of oysters has caused great concern in those areas whose economic livelihood depends on what is known as "farming" of oysters.

Turning to the Great Lakes—three of which border the district I have the honor to represent—what do we find? The whitefish that forms one of the most important catches of Michigan fisheries, has been affected in several respects. One of the threats to the whitefish was the deep-trap net which was introduced into Michigan waters in 1928 and proved so effective in catching the fish that the succeeding years aroused grave doubts as to the future developments resulting from the use of such effective equipment.

The fears of fishing experts proved to have been well founded in this respect. At first the introduction of the deep-trap net caused a rise in the production of whitefish far above normal. This continued for a couple of years, but by the end of that period the yield began to decline, and by the third year production began to decline very noticeably.

According to Elmer Higgins, head of the Division of Scientific Inquiry of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, 12 species of fish in the Great Lakes have been either exterminated or are seriously threatened. The blackfin, bloater, and salmon of Lake Ontario have been completely exterminated. The sturgeon, blackfin, chub, and Lake Erie cisco of Lake Erie are no longer commercially important. The other six species of chubs are severely depleted, and the whitefish is threatened with commercial extinction, just as happened in Lake Winnipeg in Canada.

The yellow perch of Lake Michigan has been reduced to 50 percent of its former production, while on Lake Huron production has dropped 75 percent. On Lake Erie the yellow perch is stricken from the list of commercial fishing.

The bluefin of Lake Superior is gone, together with the blackfin of Lake Michigan and the bloater of Lake Ontario. These fish have become negligible as a commercial asset.

In 1924 Lake Erie produced 21,250,000 pounds of cisco, against 111,000 pounds in 1934.

WHITEFISH PRODUCTION

To complete the record I wish at this time to submit brief statistics which show clearly that the whitefish is on its way out. The year 1931 was the greatest catch of all time for a total of 8,453,338 pounds, against 2,516,836 pounds in 1936. And that in spite of the fact that twice as many nets are in the waters today. The above figures are for Michigan waters of all lakes, including Saginaw Bay.

Taking the Lakes separately, we find that Lake Michigan—Michigan waters only—produced in 1929 an all-time high of 4,840,139 pounds, against 768,042 for 1936. Lake Superior fell from 476,650 in 1931 to 230,643 for 1936; Lake Huron 2,819,448 in 1933 to 1,059,651 in 1936. Lake Erie produced only 1,368 in 1936, against 18,613 in 1932; Saginaw Bay from 2,189,958 in 1932 to 457,132 in 1936.

Taking the Lakes as a whole, we find that from an all-time high in 1931 of 10,761,000 pounds, production dropped to 6,276,000 pounds in 1934, or approximately 4,500,000 pounds in 3 years. These are the latest figures available. It has also been impossible to get production by States up to this time, but I hope to do so very soon in order that a true picture of the situation may be had.

From the above figures it is obvious that the time has come for uniform regulation. At the present time the various States have their own laws. These laws are conflicting, and we must take Canada into consideration, because she plays an important part in the fishing industry.

In the laws of the various States affecting the whitefish we find that the size limits are as follows: Michigan, 2 pounds round, 1 pound 12 ounces dressed; Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York, 1¾ pounds round; Ontario, 2 pounds round; Indiana, 2 pounds round, 1 pound 10 ounces dressed, 1 pound 6 ounces dressed, head off, and salted; Wisconsin, 13 inches on Lake Michigan, 15 inches on Lake Superior; Minnesota, 16 inches.

The sizes of the mesh used in nets to catch the whitefish are interesting. Lake Erie, gill net mesh: Michigan, 4¾-inch as used; Ohio, 3-inch as used; Pennsylvania, 4¾-inch steel rule; New York, 4¾-inch; Ontario, 4¾-inch as used when adopted by States fronting Erie, 3⅛- to 4¾-inch prohibited if enforced in United States.

Lake Erie, pound net mesh: Michigan, 4½-inch pot, but 3½-inch or smaller may be used in one side, except tunnel side for shoaling; 4½-inch heart and tunnel, 5-inch lead, Meshes between 3½ and 4½ inches prohibited in pot. Net may not be set in water deeper than 80 feet. Ohio, one-fourth of each side next to back 2¾-inch as used; rest of pot 2¼-inch as used; meshes must hang squarely strung on one-third; twine not heavier than 18-thread. Pennsylvania, 2¼-inch pot as used—insert steel rule. New York, 4¾-inch mesh. Ontario, no law on mesh of pound nets. Maximum number to any licensee, 10. Department designates which nets may be set.

Lake Ontario, gill-net mesh: New York, 4¾ inches; Ontario, 4½ inches, as used. Pound-net mesh: New York, 4¾ inches; Ontario, no law on mesh of pound nets. Maximum to any licensee, 10. Department designates where nets may be set.

Lake Huron, gill-net mesh: Michigan and Ontario, 4½-inch as used. Pound-net mesh: Michigan, same as on Lake Erie. Ontario, same as on Lake Ontario. (Michigan permits the use of the deep-trap net, the regulation of which is before the State legislature at this time.)

Lake Michigan, pound-net mesh: Michigan, same as Lake Erie and Lake Huron. Wisconsin, no mesh prescribed. Illinois, 4½-inch pot (2¼ inches square, not less). Net to be not more than 20 meshes deep. Indiana, 3½-inch pot, not less; 2-inch back, not more. For 15 feet below surface, 4-inch heart and funnel and 5-inch lead. All meshes as manufactured. Gill-net mesh: Michigan, 4½-inch, as used. Wisconsin, 4-inch after July 1, 1937, 4¼-inch; southern Green Bay, 4-inch. All mesh as used. Illinois, 4½-inch (2½ inches square, not less). Not any more than 20 meshes deep; 10 percent undersized allowed; these to be sold on shore and not shipped. Indiana, 4½-inch as used.

Lake Superior, gill-net mesh: Michigan, 4½-inch as used. Wisconsin, 4½-inch, as used (leg. mesh, leg. fish). Minnesota, 4½-inch as possessed; 5 inches for whitefish. Ontario, 4½-inch as used. Pound-net mesh: Michigan, see Lake Erie. Wisconsin, no mesh prescribed. Minnesota: Pound nets are not mentioned for Lake Superior, but the following laws apply to Lake of the Woods, Rainy, and Namekan Lakes: Not less than 3-inch pot for all fish; in Lake of the Woods, not more than 2 nets in string; in other two lakes, one net; 2,500 feet between strings for nets; leads not to exceed 50 or 60 rods to shore. Ontario: No law on mesh of pound nets in Great Lakes waters. Maximum number, 10 to licensee. Department designates where nets may be set.

Michigan and Indiana have a closed season from November 5 to December 15 on whitefish, while Wisconsin closes from October 15 to December 1, and Illinois from October 20 to November 20. On Lake Superior, Michigan closes from November 1 to November 26; Wisconsin from September 25 to November 15; while Minnesota has no closed season. Canada has no closed season at any time, and during the closed seasons ships fish into the United States which cannot be caught lawfully. This seems a situation which is not desirable, and unfair to the American fishing industry.

The foregoing paragraphs show very clearly the need for uniform regulation. Obviously it must come if not only the whitefish but other species are to survive. The importance of taking steps toward uniform regulation cannot be overstated.

IMPORTANCE OF THE GREAT LAKES

Some of you good friends from other States may question whether the problems of which I speak are of sufficient magnitude for our consideration in this Chamber. May I remind you that the Great Lakes—my principal interest at this time—form a vital artery of Nature-given transportation for the commerce of many of our States, furnish vacation and recreational facilities for millions of us, and are the chief source of the fresh-water fish we consume? These Lakes and their connecting waters are the greatest fresh-water area in the entire world.

Those of you from agricultural regions can appreciate the magnitude of the Great Lakes when we tell you that the surface area is 60,000,000 acres or almost a hundred thousand square miles. Of some hundred and fifty million pounds of fresh-water fish produced every year in the United States, about 65 percent is gotten from the water on our side of these five Lakes. Or if we count in the Canadian production we find that in a recent year there were some hundred and eleven million pounds of fish valued at six and a half million dollars produced. Engaged in this production there were more than 10,000 men and over 5,000 boats, not to mention the millions of dollars invested in the industry.

FISHERIES DEPLETED LIKE FORESTS

Our wastefulness of our natural resources has been often commented upon, but relatively little of a practical sort has been done about it. The stripping of our forests by haphazard lumbering methods and with no thought to replanting is perhaps the best advertised of our tendencies toward short-sighted policies.

In spite of the justified alarm in informed quarters, the general public seems blissfully unaware of the seriousness of the problems facing the fisheries of the Great Lakes.

VALUE OF UNIFORM REGULATION

There is no better way to show the need of greater attention to our fisheries' problems than to get down to actual cases. Alaska, as you know, is still a Territory and as such is governed entirely by the Federal Government. When this area was bought from Russia in 1867, neither party to the transaction realized how extensive were the resources of that great Territory.

One thing we acquired by the purchase was the Pribilof Islands, which at that time were inhabited by some 2,000,000 seals. For the half century following acquisition, seal-killing privileges were granted to private companies on a lease basis. These firms obtained over 2,000,000 skins during this period and lost many more due to the reckless practice of shooting the animals in the open waters, so that many sank and were lost. This shooting in the water is destructive in another sense in that it kills males and females alike. The loss of the females not only diminishes future breeding possibilities but often means the loss of the mother's pup, which is waiting back on the land for feeding from the mother's milk, only to starve if the mother does not return.

By 1910 the herd had decreased to only 132,000 seals. To meet this alarming situation which threatened to extinguish the seal, the Federal Government took complete control of the remnants of the herd, placing the entire control of this valuable resource with the Bureau of Fisheries of the Commerce Department. The following year, in 1911, an international agreement was concluded between Great Britain, Japan, Russia, and ourselves to prohibit pelagic sealing, and this is enforced by the United States Coast Guard.

The wisdom of conservation as applied to the seals is shown by the fact that the herd is now well over a million again, which is about 10 times the low point we have referred to in 1910. In spite of this there have been steadily increasing numbers of young bull seals slaughtered each year, always, of course, reserving enough for breeding at a normal rate of growth.

The necessity of conservation is indicated by the fact that indiscriminate slaughter has almost extinguished seals the world over, the only sizable herds remaining being one owned by Japan on Robben Island, one by Russia on the Commander Islands, and the one on Lobos Island in the mouth of La Plata River in Uruguay, South America. Incidently, each of these herds has been protected by the governments concerned for many years. Without such foresight they, too, would in all probability have been extinguished as the others have.

THE CASE OF CRAB CONSERVATION

Seventy-five percent of the world's blue-crab supply comes from the Chesapeake. This member of the crustacean group has only been in great demand since the advent of refrigeration in transport service about 1900. As usual demand caused "overfishing", waste occurred and production declined. Little was done about it until in 1917 Dr. E. H. Churchill was detailed by the Bureau of Fisheries to make a study of the life history of the crab.

This study showed that some 80 percent of all female crabs pregnant with eggs were found in winter in the waters of the lower Chesapeake near the Virginia Capes, and 80 percent of the males remained in Maryland waters. Why male and female should part for the winter is not entirely clear, but the fact is they do.

With the young a similar migration likewise exists. Without going into the biological details of the many stages of crab growth, in which it often does not even look like a crab, we find many migrations back and forth between the Maryland and Virginia waters. The Bureau in its recommendations recommended that the female crab bearing the egg sponge should be protected at all times, and the so-called "green" crab, heretofore placed in floats to shed its shell, should be allowed freedom until it reached the peeler stage.

Although Maryland passed the requisite laws, Virginia, which perhaps even more controlled the fate of the crab, did nothing for a long time, with the result that production continued to decline until in 1925 a low ebb of 29,000,000 pounds was reached. A number of conferences between the commissioners of the two States were held, and in 1926 Virginia passed legislation protecting the female crab bearing eggs. As a result, 5 years later crab production had more than doubled, having jumped to 68,000,000 pounds. Could the benefits of conservation be more dramatically shown?

FEDERAL AND STATE COOPERATION

The sphere of action by the Federal and State authorities is based on the ancient Roman code and the old English common law, as well as affected by our Constitution. According to these old principles, all animals are the property of the State which holds title to them until they are reduced to private possession. Pursuant to this the various States have passed laws relating to the manner in which hunting and fishing may be conducted.

When our Federal Constitution was drafted there was no specific control of fish and game delegated to the Federal Government, so that, except for the Territories or the parks and other lands actually owned by the Central Government, it is doubtful that Congress has power to legislate as to hunting and fishing. The Federal control of the marine fisheries under the maritime laws applies only to Americans on the high seas, and control of boundary waters is obtained only through the treaty-making power of the Government.

The Federal control of black bass is based upon the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution but is narrowed by the fact that it applies only to interstate shipments of fish and otherwise depends upon voluntary cooperation of State and Federal officers for its effectiveness.

WHAT THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CAN DO

There is no doubt that under the welfare clause of the Constitution that the Federal Government is fully justified in proceeding along the lines which the Congress has already laid down in the fishery laws to the effect that there shall be determined "whether and to what extent the fishery resources have declined, what the cause of the same may be, and what remedial measures may be recommended."

Our policy thus far has been that the remedies recommended must be applied by the governments of the several States to the waters within their jurisdiction, so that responsibility for fishery conservation is mutually divided between the Federal and State Governments. The actual enforcement has been in the main the responsibility of the States but the leadership and guidance on fundamental and practical matters has been the way in which the Federal authorities have been of greatest service.

Since it has been so often found that the migration of aquatic life from one State's waters to those of other States has often vitiated the regulations of the stricter States, it has been wondered whether the interstate movement of fish in the waters might not come under the interstate commerce clause and so be subject to uniform Federal regulation. There is also the shipment of caught fish from the borders of one State into other States. From the broader viewpoint it would seem that fisheries are endowed with sufficient interstate characteristics to justify such Federal control.

Perhaps the best means of regulation of the Great Lakes fisheries, and the prevention of the extinction of many commercial fisheries, is to be found in the treaty-making power, in spite of the none too favorable results of attempts in the past to regulate this by agreements between Canada and the United States.

The necessity of uniform regulation is apparent from the fact that in many cases, fishermen from two States or two nations depend upon the same population of fish for their catches. Lack of uniformity causes much unfair competition between fishermen of adjoining States and in addition fails utterly to give the fish the necessary protection.

There are many things which can be done on this broad problem of conservation of fisheries. The prime thing is to develop a broader sense of viewing it as "aquiculture" rather than hunting, just as we now have agriculture rather than merely living from wild fruits and vegetables. If we can instill people with this feeling, we shall be able to take the fishing industry out of ruthless despoliation and bring it up to date as a part of modern rational production.

Mr. Speaker, since I am convinced that Federal aid and guidance must come eventually to conserve the fishing industry on the Great Lakes, I am introducing a resolution which will give the Commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries the authority to cooperate with the departments of the various States for the purpose of carrying out the policy outlined in the fishery laws, to wit: "Whether and to what extent the fishery resources—of the Great Lakes—have declined, what the cause of the same may be, and what remedial measures may be recommended."

RESCISSION OF ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER 197

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, at the time the relief bill was discussed on the floor of the House and during the consideration of the bill to continue the authority of the Public Works Administration the matter of the stringent relief restrictions imposed on all P. W. A. projects through administrative order 197 was brought up and complained of. Assurances were given that this order would be rescinded in order that grants for projects already approved and for which no funds were available could be advanced on the original 45-percent grant basis.

Some time has passed since this assurance was received, but I have just been notified that the order in question was definitely rescinded on order of the President yesterday. This means that the Public Works Administration can now go ahead on the old 45-percent grant basis, as originally planned, with no relief labor restrictions.

Of interest also is the action of the Senate in amending the relief bill, providing for the extension of the Public Works Administration for 2 years and going a little further than the House bill on this subject. Under the provisions of the Senate amendment a total of $300,000,000 is made available to P. W. A. for future projects, $200,000,000 to be used in making grants and $100,000,000 to be used in making loans. This $300,000,000 would be made available within the limitations of the revolving fund; that is, P. W. A. would be permitted to sell to the R. F. C. securities now held and at present unauthorized for sale, and the R. F. C. is released from the limitations imposed upon it by the Emergency Relief Act of 1935 to make this possible.

I hope that when the bill goes to conference the House conferees will find it possible to accept the Senate amendment, since it incorporates the provisions of the House bill on this subject and is consistent with the representations made in this body by administration leaders when the relief bill was under discussion.

Adoption of this amendment would insure the consummation of projects which have been approved by the examining divisions of P. W. A., and for which no funds are now available.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEITER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

CABINET GORGE PROJECT

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah presented a conference report and statement to accompany the bill (H. R. 114) to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation pumping or other uses, and for other purposes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes today after the disposition of Calendar Wednesday business and any other legislative matters that may be presented.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from New York understands, I presume, that if the Committee on Indian Affairs gets through with its call on the calendar, other committees will then come in.

Mr. FISH. I realize that, and I am just taking a chance on getting the time.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, if we all get through and the House does not take out, the gentleman wants permission to speak?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow final legal action in the District of Columbia will be taken which will permit the St. Louis Jefferson Memorial to proceed.

I wish to emphasize the fact that the more I study this matter the more thoroughly I am convinced of the fraud, graft, and corruption that surrounds it. We should do something concrete to forestall this expenditure.

I am convinced, beyond any question of doubt, that the National Park Service knows of the corruption that exists.

Mr. Speaker, $6,750,000 of Federal work-relief money is about to be spent to initiate the National Park Service into the brotherhood of fraud, graft, and corruption—the building of the Nation's folly, the $30,000,000 second memorial to Jefferson in St. Louis. As hard-pressed as this administration is for money and facing the necessity of a balanced Budget, it is the Members of this Congress who will have to bear the onus of the blame if this nefarious scheme is not halted before it gets started. Already suits have been filed in the United States district court in St. Louis for the condemnation of 10 blocks of property in the downtown business section in furtherance of a well-designed plan of certain interested groups to unload onto the Federal Government 37 blocks of commercial and industrial property where upward of 5,000 are permanently employed. All of this is being carried forward, as has previously been told, under the guise of improving historic sites, which for the most part are nonexistent.

The induction of the National Park Service into this partnership with crime is not unknown to them.

For more than 18 months the Citizens' Nonpartisan Committee of St. Louis have been seeking first in one department and then another here in Washington to bring about an investigation of this fake scheme and the use of Federal funds for it.

The Department of Justice has been informed of the frauds in connection with the bond-issue election in St. Louis. The Department of Justice has been informed of the false and fraudulent representations made by the promoters of the scheme when they applied for a loan and grant of $21,015,000 in August 1935. The Post Office Department has been informed of the misuse of the mailing privileges in the attempt to deceive the voters of St. Louis in the election of September 10, 1935. The Department of the Interior is thoroughly familiar with the facts concerning the fraud in the bond issue election in St. Louis and all of the irregularities in the promotion and presentation of this scheme for hoodwinking the Government into an ultimate expenditure of $30,000,000, contrary to all the rules of honesty and common decency.

The National Park Service is fully aware of the frauds which have been committed in St. Louis and know all the circumstances under which the bonds of the city have been sold and the efforts which have been made by St. Louis businessmen to protect their very means of making a living by trying to halt this matter in the courts. The National Park Service also know that this is neither a necessary nor useful project but are willing to enter the brotherhood of corruption at the order of the President without further compunction. The President of the United States, I am sure, knows nothing about this fraud which has come to light. Now what are the circumstances which will cause this Congress to be wary of spending a measly $3,000,000 for a memorial to Jefferson here in Washington, yet allow this monument to fraud, corruption, graft, and waste to be built in St. Louis?

How is it that the citizens of St. Louis who are deprived of due processes of law in their own city by some mysterious influence which reaches out and overwhelms both the courts and grand juries, can get no satisfaction from the various governmental departments I have mentioned? How is it that this Congress is willing to allow this project to get under way without an immediate investigation?

Mr. Speaker, there is every element in this promotion which cries for action on the part of this body. We pass laws, and the Executive, or some of his aides, promptly appropriate to themselves the powers reserved to us by the Constitution. In the matter of preserving historic sites, the act itself no less than three times reserves to Congress the handling of money for the purposes of the act, yet in this instance the President, by Executive order, has taken money appropriated for work relief and placed it at the disposal of the National Park Service to complete the compact with the corruptionists of St. Louis. Now, who are these corruptionists? They are the people who, prior to the bond-issue election of September 10, 1935, in St. Louis, initiated and financed a campaign of misrepresentation, wherein they set up that this project, the building of a $30,000,000 improved national park or plaza in St. Louis, was part of the Federal Government's $4,800,000,000 work-relief program and that the Government had already approved the project and the St. Louis plans for the memorial. This was a shameful lie.

The corruptionists are also the promoters who furnished the money to debauch the ballot on September 10, 1935, and who have since furnished bail and counsel for those who have been indicted for election crimes in St. Louis. The corruptionists also include those who applied for a loan and grant of $21,015,000 and set forth that "this is a national project to be constructed by the United States or its qualified authority."

This statement was made ostensibly for the purpose of deceiving someone in authority in Washington into the belief that this particular project was approved by the Federal Government, which it turns out never has happened even to this day.

The only approval this useless scheme has is that of the President and the officials of the National Park Service, who seem more than willing to proceed in a partnership with the St. Louis money raised in an election in which fraud has been established in each of 19 wards.

While there may be nothing new in this attitude of the National Park Service, considering recent revelations of payroll padding, there is something new and dangerous in this entire disregard for the rights of the people to honesty in the counting of ballots for a bond-issue election anywhere, and in this case where the result is so intermingled with the Government's aims and intentions, it should be the first insistence of the National Park Service that money contributions to them shall come from sources beyond all question and without any taint of either fraud or corruption. The handling of this St. Louis money without a complete investigation into the charges which have been made and are in nowise denied, will be a blot on the escutcheon of the National Park Service, and a reflection on the character of this Congress, unless we call a halt to this wasteful spending as well as the characteristic disregard for common decency which is here so well exhibited.

Mr. Speaker, there is yet another and deeper issue behind this situation. It is the apparent break-down of justice in Missouri. For several years we have read stories coming out of that State of the workings of the Pendergast machine in Kansas City.

Two courageous Federal judges have gone far in the last few months to check the machine for awhile at least. In Kansas City 176 persons have been indicted for frauds and misdemeanors at the last regular election in November. The St. Louis election manipulators who took their cue from the Pendergast machine in Kansas City have been more fortunate. Although a great many of the St. Louis election crooks have been indicted, that mysterious power which I mentioned before has intervened to delay and thwart justice in St. Louis. The law-enforcement record of the State is not one to be proud of. The individual who commits an ordinary crime in Missouri has, according to statistics compiled by the Bureau of the Census, 42.8 percent chances that he will not be convicted and subjected to a penalty even if caught and brought to trial. In Missouri the election crooks seem particularly immune to punishment by the courts. This is an added reason for a congressional investigation of this memorial promotion and the strange and irregular use to which work-relief funds are now being put.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6551) entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes", with an amendment.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, and Mr. STEIWER to be conferees on the part of the Senate.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs I call up the bill (S. 1902) to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, and I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 96]

Bates	Engel	Kelly, N. Y.	Romjue
Bernard	Farley	Knutson	Sabath
Biermann	Ferguson	Kvale	Sadowski
Buckley, N. Y.	Fernandez	Lamneck	Schuetz
Cannon, Wis.	Ford, Calif.	Lucas	Scott
Casey, Mass.	Fulmer	McAndrews	Sirovich
Celler	Gasque	McClellan	Smith, Conn.
Champion	Gifford	McGroarty	Smith, W. Va.
Chapman	Gilchrist	McReynolds	Sullivan
Cravens	Green	Magnuson	Sweeney
Crosby	Gregory	May	Taylor, Colo.
Crowther	Hancock, N. Y.	Millard	Thomas, N. J.
Culkin	Hancock, N. C.	Mitchell, Ill.	Vincent, B. M.
Cummings	Harrington	O'Brien, Mich.	White, Idaho
DeMuth	Hartley	O'Connell, Mont.	Wigglesworth
DeRouen	Healey	Pace	Wilcox
Dickstein	Hendricks	Peterson, Fla.	Williams
Dockweiler	Hennings	Peterson, Ga.	Wood
Drew, Pa.	Jacobsen	Peyser	Zimmerman
Drewry, Va.	Jarrett	Phillips
Duncan	Johnson, Luther A.	Ramsay
Ellenbogen	Keller	Reed, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRISWOLD and Mr. VOORHIS asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, on roll call 94 of last Monday, relating to the railroad retirement bill, I was unavoidably absent. If present, I would have voted "yea."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the speech made by Mr. Douglas, notwithstanding it is more than two pages. It is two and a quarter pages.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a radio address delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by Chester Jordan, Jr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire as to the time on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma submits a parliamentary inquiry which the Chair will undertake to answer.

The gentleman's committee has the call, and he can call up any bill he desires by instruction of his committee. The time for debate is controlled by the rules of the House.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I understand that, Mr. Speaker. I understand there is an hour on each side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule:

Provided, That not more than 2 hours of general debate shall be permitted on any measure called up on Calendar Wednesday, and all debate must be confined to the subject matter of the bill, the time to be equally divided between those for and against the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask for the time in opposition.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter within the control of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1902) to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes, with Mr. BEAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a Commission be, and hereby is, created and established to be known as the Indian Claims Commission, which shall be composed of a Chief Commissioner and two Associate Commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Commissioners shall continue in office during the existence of the Commission or until resignation or removal by the President only for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Vacancies in the Commission shall be filled by the President in the same manner as original appointments. No vacancy shall interrupt the functioning of the Commission, nor impair the right of the remaining Commissioners to exercise all of its powers and to perform all its duties. The Commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment during their term of office. Each of the Commissioners shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, payable in the same manner as the salaries of judges of the courts of the United States.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Commission to investigate all claims against the United States of any Indian tribe, band, or other communal group of American Indians residing within the territorial limits of the United States or Alaska, to ascertain and determine all of the facts relating thereto and all questions of mixed law and fact as may be incidental to such determination, and, on the basis of the facts found by it, to ascertain and determine the merits of all such claims and to make findings with reference thereto. Such claims shall include all claims arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States and all those whether sounding in contract or tort or otherwise with respect to which the claimant would have been entitled to redress in any court of the United States if the United States were subject to suit; and all claims of whatsoever nature on account of any breach of duty committed by any officer or agent while purporting to act in the name or on behalf of the United States; and all further claims under all treaties heretofore negotiated between the claimant and the United States but not formally ratified or executed by all of the parties thereto; and those claims of whatsoever nature which would arise on a basis of fair and honorable dealings unaffected by rules of law, and those which would result if the treaties, contracts, and agreements between the claimant and the United States were revised on the ground of fraud, duress, or mutual or unilateral mistake whether of law or fact. Any such claim now pending in the Court of Claims, and any such claim previously referred by Congress to the Court of Claims and not yet filed in such court may be transferred, together with all the documents and certified copies of all the records relating thereto, by the complainants to the Commission at any time within the period provided for presentation of claims to the Commission; and in connection with claims so transferred all further proceedings with respect thereto shall be had under the provisions of this act regardless of the provisions of any other law or of any act giving jurisdiction of such claims to the Court of Claims: Provided, That in cases now pending in the Court of Claims the transfer thereof to the Commission shall be made upon motion of the attorney of record for claimant in each case with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and such attorney or attorneys shall proceed under his or their approved existing contract according to its terms. No claim shall be excluded because of the provisions of any other statute; nor because it has already been presented to the Congress; nor on the ground that it has become barred under any rule of law or equity, or by reason of any treaty or statute; nor on the ground of a prior adjudication with respect thereto in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding between the same parties: Provided, however, That the Commission, when ascertaining the merits of any claim, shall take into consideration, and may inquire into, all previous adjudications or settlements of such claim and all payments made by the United States on its account. In any case wherein the Commission determines that a claim has merit under the provisions of this act, the General Accounting Office and the Indian Office upon request of the Commission shall furnish such information as in the judgment of the Commission is required for the determination of set-offs.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall make a detailed report to the Congress of its findings of the facts of each claim, the conclusion reached as to the merits of such claim, and the reasons therefor, together with an appropriate recommendation for action or nonaction by that body. Such report shall show how each commissioner voted upon such claims. If any claim shall be ascertained to be without merit in law or in fact, the Commission shall so report. If any claim shall be found to rest on some legal, equitable, or sound moral obligation, the recommendation shall be for a direct appropriation by the Congress in a specific amount, or other adequate relief, or for the passage of an act giving jurisdiction of such claim to the Court of Claims.

In all proceedings brought pursuant hereto in the Court of Claims all determinations of fact by the Commission shall be admissible in evidence but may be reviewed by the court either on the basis of evidence taken before the Commission, or on additional evidence, or both.

SEC. 4. The Commission shall be authorized to receive claims for a period of 3 years after the approval of this act, and no claim existing before such period not presented within such period may thereafter be submitted to any Federal court or administrative agency for consideration or action, nor will such claim be entertained by Congress.

Any claim within the provisions of this act may be presented to the Commission by any member or members of an Indian tribe, band, or other communal group, as representative of all such members, regardless of the present status of such members as allottees, citizens or unrestricted Indians; but wherever any tribal organization exists, recognized by the Secretary of the Interior as having authority to represent such tribe, band, or group, such organization shall be accorded the exclusive privilege of representing such Indians, unless fraud, collusion, or laches on the part of such organization be shown to the satisfaction of the Commission.

SEC. 5. Immediately after its formation the Commission shall send a written explanation of the provisions of this act to the recognized head of each Indian tribe and band, and to any other communal groups of Indians existing as a distinct entity, and shall request that a detailed statement of all claims be sent to the Commission, together with the names of aged or invalid Indians from whom immediate depositions should be taken and a summary of their proposed testimony.

SEC. 6. The recognized representatives of each such tribe, band, or other communal group of Indians may retain to represent its interest in the presentation of claims before the Commission an attorney or attorneys at law, whose employment and the terms thereof shall be subject to the provisions of sections 2103, 2104, 2105, and 2106 of the Revised Statutes, and whose practice before the Commission shall be governed by rules and regulations hereby authorized to be formulated by the Commission. The Attorney General or his assistants shall represent the interests of the United States in connection with all matters pertaining to this act.

SEC. 7. The Commission shall make a complete and thorough search for all evidence affecting such claims, utilizing all documents and records in the possession of the Court of Claims and the several Government bureaus and offices. The Commission or any of its members or authorized agents may hold hearings, examine witnesses, and take depositions in any place in the United States or Alaska, and any of the commissioners may sign and issue subpenas for the appearance of witnesses and the production of documents from any place in the United States or Alaska at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpena the Commission may obtain an order from any court of the United States requiring obedience to that subpena; and any failure to obey such order shall be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Witnesses subpenaed to testify before the Commission, witnesses whose depositions are taken pursuant to this act, and the officers or persons taking the same, shall severally be entitled to the same fees and mileage as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 8. The Commission shall give notice and an opportunity for a hearing to the interested parties before making any final determination upon any claim. A full written record shall be kept of all hearings and proceedings of the Commission and shall be open to inspection by the attorneys concerned. Whenever a final determination is reached by the Commission upon any claim, notice thereof shall be given to the tribe, band, or group concerned. Within 20 days thereafter written objections thereto may be filed with the Commission by any interested party. If such objections are not accepted by the Commission, they shall be recorded as a part of the report on the claim presented to the Congress.

SEC. 9. The Commission may adopt all such rules for its own procedure, for the organization of its work, and for the effectuation of the purposes of this act as it may deem appropriate. The Commission may employ, subject to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and fix the terms of employment of such experts, field investigators, and professional and clerical assistants as may be necessary to fulfill duties which cannot be properly performed by persons already engaged in the Government service. At the Commission's request, the General Accounting Office, the Land Office, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs may transfer or temporarily assign to the Commission such of their employees as are specially qualified to assist the Commission in the performance of any of its duties under this act.

SEC. 10. All necessary expenses of the Commission, including all reasonable traveling expenses incurred by the Commissioners, or under their orders, upon official business in any place outside the city of Washington, and including necessary expenses for suitable rooms and equipment for the principal office of the Commission in the city of Washington and for the performance of duty outside the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the Chief Commissioner.

SEC. 11. Annual reports shall be submitted by the Commission to Congress showing the progress of its work. The Commission shall cease to exist on the fulfillment of its duties under this act; or, in any event unless extended by act of Congress, on the expiration of 10 years after the formal organization of the Commission. When the Commission shall cease to exist, all its books, documents, letters, official records, and other papers shall be transferred to the Indian Office.

SEC. 12. There is authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine.

SEC. 13. This act may be cited as the "Indian Claims Commission Act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS]. The Chair inquires if any member of the minority on the committee is opposed to the bill? Is any other member of the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill and I ask to control the time in opposition to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman for 1 hour.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, before recognition is granted, may I be permitted to ask this question? On this side some Members are for the bill and some are against it and I should like to know if some time can be yielded to us.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I shall be glad to yield some time to the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much time?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I can yield the gentleman 5 minutes, possibly 10.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let us have 20 minutes on our side out of the hour.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Very well.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We are not ready to use it right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS] for 1 hour.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I assure gentlemen that this bill, S. 1902, represents an honest effort upon the part of your Committee on Indian Affairs, upon the part of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, the Office of Indian Affairs, the Department of the Interior, the Department of Justice, the administration itself, and all others interested in Indian affairs to settle a very troublesome question. Before the bill was ever introduced in Congress, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, representatives of these various groups that I have designated held several conferences to draft the measure that is now before you. During the Seventy-fourth Congress H. R. 7837 was introduced in the House. It represented the material contained in the bill before you today. That bill was reported to the House on June 19, 1935, a little more than 2 years ago. During the Seventy-fourth Congress there was introduced in the Senate S. 2731. This bill was reported to the Senate and passed the Senate July 29, 1935, almost 2 years ago. During the Seventy-fifth Congress the bill H. R. 5817 was introduced in the House, and S. 1902 was introduced in the Senate. The Senate bill which is before you today passed the Senate April 22, 1937. The Senate bill came to your Committee on Indian Affairs, and your committee reported the bill on May 22 of this session.

I shall now briefly call your attention to the bill itself.

The Indian Claims Commission bill proposes to create a commission to investigate and to determine the facts and the merits of all existing claims of Indian tribes against the United States and to report its findings with appropriate recommendations to Congress.

The bill does not provide for the adjudication of any Indian claim. Its provisions will expedite the settlement of all claims on their merits. Its enactment will make possible final settlements, whereas present procedures have frequently resulted in incomplete or limited settlements.

Under existing procedure Congress is constantly confronted with claims by Indian tribes against the United States. Legislation dealing with these claims is of two kinds: (1) To provide direct settlement; (2) jurisdictional acts to permit suits in the Court of Claims. Congress is now required to pass on the merits of these claims in such legislation and in almost every case without adequate data upon which to reach a decision. The immediate and sufficient justification for the creation of this commission is the fact that the commission would relieve Congress of this burden and would submit findings of fact which would enable Congress to pass intelligently upon the merits of the claims.

Under existing procedures the enactment of a jurisdictional bill is always preceded by extended preliminary negotiations and by lobbying by Indians and their attorneys. The resulting jurisdictional acts are often inconsistent with one another, depending upon the limited information now available and upon the ability and resources of the Indians' representatives. The presentation to the Congress and to the committees is necessarily partisan and sometimes includes claims for unjustifiably large sums. Such claims stimulate the charge that the Indians are making a raid on the Treasury. Such a charge would be wholly unfounded and would, in fact, be impossible if the presentation of Indian tribal claims to this Congress were accompanied by a finding of fact by the Indian Claims Commission.

Second. The bill now before you, S. 1902, as amended by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, would establish a commission composed of three commissioners, one of whom would be an Indian, appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and would be equipped with the usual powers of a fact-finding commission to hold hearings and to examine witnesses (sec. 7). The commission is directed to "make a complete and thorough search of all evidence" affecting claims upon its own initiative, through investigations in the field and in Government records, utilizing in doing so, insofar as possible, Government employees now qualified in the work (secs. 7, 9). The interests of the Indian claimants in the investigations and determinations of the commission are amply protected by the provisions of the bill requiring notice to all possible claimants (sec. 5), and notice and opportunity for hearing to all interested parties before making findings on any claim (sec. 8), and authorizing representation by attorneys (sec. 6).

Third. Upon the completion of its investigations the commission will make formal findings of fact and recommendations to Congress for action or nonaction upon the claims by Congress. If the claim has no merit Congress will be so informed and may disregard such claim thereafter. However, where the claim has merit, the commission will recommend either a direct settlement, or in those few cases where judicial action may be unavoidable, a jurisdictional act giving adequate jurisdiction of such claim to the Court of Claims.

Fourth. It is provided that all existing claims must be presented to the commission within 5 years (section 4) and that the work of the commission will end 10 years (section 10) from the date of organization, unless otherwise provided by Congress. Annual reports of the progress of its work are required to be presented to Congress (section 11).

The outstanding benefits which would follow the establishment of such a commission may be summarized as follows:

First. The proposed method of handling Indian claims will expedite necessary work and will eliminate a great volume of unnecessary work since it will be free of the present divided responsibility between the Department of the Interior, Department of Justice, and General Accounting Office, and since the commission can direct and standardize research, discard at the outset worthless claims, and avoid duplication of research by handling related claims simultaneously.

Second. The commission will be prepared to determine claims in a more competent manner than that afforded by the present system. Instead of hasty, political decisions by Congress upon individual jurisdictional bills, and haphazard and partisan preparation of the claim for trial, the commission, as an impartial expert body, will assume the burden of investigation and the accurate advising of Congress in an authoritative and conclusive manner.

Third. A commission, acting as adviser to Congress, offers the only way in which claims founded upon political wrongs, mainly those claims which seek revision of or compensation for inequitable treaties, can be settled. The Court of Claims repeatedly dismisses such claims for lack of jurisdiction, placing at no avail the prolonged effort required to reach that Court.

Fourth. From the foregoing, it is evident that great expense will be saved the Government and the Indians. The present cumbersome and inconclusive method, estimated to require a century to reach completion, means increasing direct and intangible costs to the Government and prohibitive expense or exorbitant outlay of tribal funds to the tribes.

Fifth. Finally, just determination and settlement of just claims will improve the morale of the Indians and the effectiveness of the Government service among them.

As can be learned by reading the hearings on the bill that was in the Senate during the Seventy-fourth Congress and the bill that was in the House during the same Congress, also the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, the Indian Office is supporting the bill, the Department of the Interior supports the bill, the Bureau of the Budget has approved the bill, as will be seen in the Secretary's letter, wherein the Bureau of the Budget said this legislation would not be in conflict with the President's financial program provided certain changes were made in the bill, and those changes have been made to meet the requirements of the Budget Bureau. Also, the Department of Justice recommends the bill. Finally, the President of the United States has asked that this bill be enacted during this session of Congress. The Senate has twice passed the bill. Your committee has twice reported this measure, and now we ask its adoption by the House.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, the present bill was placed on the Consent Calendar for consideration by the House and was passed over without prejudice because of the nature of the legislation. As has been explained to you, this bill sets up a new Indian commission to be known as the Indian claims commission. I want Members to bear in mind that we have had for over a period of a century an Indian Bureau in this Government to look after the affairs of the Indians, and if there is any indictment against that Bureau that is more pronounced and more effective than this legislation presented here, I do not know what it is. This legislation is brought in here apparently to protect the rights of the Indians. For what purpose does the Indian Bureau exist? The legislation offers a means of determining the claims and the rights of the Indians.

It can go over the records of the Indian Bureau and check the records of the General Accounting Office. For what purpose does the Indian Bureau exist? All you are going to do by this legislation is to set up a new Indian Bureau consisting of three members, who shall serve during the lifetime of the commission or until they reach the age of 70 years.

The legislation attempts to limit the time for the existence of this commission. But this House knows that, regardless of any time limitation, these claims will not end due to the work of this commission. Instead the claims rejected by these three commissioners will be presented to you Members for special consideration.

For that service they shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum. There is going to be a definite increase in the cost to the Government if this legislation is enacted.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I only have 5 minutes. I cannot yield now.

I want to call to the attention of the House section 2 of the bill. I suggest that each Member get a copy of the bill and read it. It authorizes a complete search of all records of the Indians since the time this country was established. More particularly it provides that no claim shall be barred on the grounds of the provisions of any other statute, nor because it has heretofore been presented to Congress, nor because of any rule in law or equity, or by reason of any treaty or statute, nor because of res judicata. In other words, if the Indians have taken their claim to the Court of Claims and had a decision and the Congress perhaps has paid out the money in accordance with that decision, that is to be no bar. They can still come to this commission and present their claim all over, open it up again, and perhaps have the entire claim paid from the beginning.

The particular language to which I wish to call your attention is on page 4 of the bill:

> No claim shall be excluded because of the provisions of any other statute; nor because it has already been presented to the Congress; nor on the ground that it has become barred under any rule of law or equity, or by reason of any treaty or statute; nor on the ground of a prior adjudication with respect thereto in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding between the same parties.

I should like to ask you Members one question, and that is this: What constituent of yours can come before the Congress and present a claim to the Committee on Claims that has been barred by the statute of limitations for 10, 30, 50, or 80 years and have the statute of limitations waived? Yet by this bill you are doing just that. In fact, we have had bills on the calendar that the committee has reported out, waiving the statute of limitations for the benefit of the Indians, although the matter occurred some 80 years previously.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming the Commission would make a recommendation, the Congress would still have to pass upon that recommendation. Is that not true?

Mr. COSTELLO. That is quite true. I read from page 5:

> If any claim shall be found to rest on some legal, equitable, or sound moral obligation, the recommendation shall be for a direct appropriation by the Congress in a specific amount, or other adequate relief, or for the passage of an act giving jurisdiction of such claim to the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from California 2 additional minutes.

Mr. COSTELLO. In other words, the commission will report back and tell you to appropriate so much money, because they think that amount should be paid. They will act as a court in presenting these claims. As a result you will be called upon to pay out millions of dollars under this legislation.

Furthermore, on page 6 you will find that if the Department of the Interior recognizes a particular band of Indians where they have a tribal organization, the individuals of that tribe cannot present their claim to this commission. It has to be done through the recognized heads of that tribe.

There are other objections to this bill. The limitation of 5 years that is put upon the time in which these claims are to be presented, you know and I know, is absolutely meaningless. Ten years from now they will come back with more claims and present them, just as though this commission had never acted upon them, and they will ask you to take action thereupon.

I am frank to state if this legislation passes, all you are doing is to create a new bureau to dig down into the records to try to find some plausible excuse for presenting Indian claims to the Congress. It will not relieve the work of this particular House committee. It will only augment it. It will simply mean you will be confronted with continued added raids upon the Treasury through this commission.

I might state I believe many Members received a form letter from the American Indian Federation opposing this legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the membership of this body will bear in mind throughout the consideration of legislation involving Indians and their rights, that we are dealing here with an involuntarily subjected class of people. It is to this body that the Indians of this country must appeal. They are inarticulate except through us.

I want first to answer the argument made by the distinguished gentleman from California a moment ago. He asked:

> What have we got the Indian Department for? Why should we create another commission?

Mr. Chairman, the answer is that the Indian Department is not a court to which the red man may submit his cause, just or unjust. The Congress of the United States is the only tribunal to which the red man may appeal. Remember again what I said a moment ago—that the relationship of guardian and ward exists between the United States and the red man. We are their guardians; we must not violate our duty toward those people.

The argument has been made here and will again be made upon the floor of this House that this bill creates another commission; that it may result in two trials of the same issues. Mr. Chairman, this is not the fact. The same argument could be interposed to the creation of the Federal Trade Commission, which acts as an agency to enable Congress to pass laws curbing trusts throughout the United States, a commission whose findings are persuasive in court actions dealing with trusts. Through this bill we are creating a fact-finding body for the purpose of doing away with the endless bills now before this House and that have been before this House for 20 or 30 years, as my distinguished colleague from Missouri told you. It will go a long step in that direction.

Would any Member of this House, Mr. Chairman, refuse to lend an ear to the report of a commission filed with Congress, a commission appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate of the United States? Would any Member of Congress refuse to pay attention to an impartial investigating committee reporting to the body which was hired for the purpose of ascertaining the facts? Every day we see bills introduced in the House extending jurisdiction to the Arapahoes, the Crows, the Assiniboines, the Gros Ventres, and various other tribes. Our time is taken up with them. This commission will prove to be the greatest saving agency that the Congress of the United States could establish in the interest of doing justice to the Indians to whom we owe a duty. We owe them just the same kind of duty that any of us would owe to a ward of whom the court might appoint us guardian. We cannot do less than give them a fair deal.

It will be argued here today that an Indian should not sit upon this commission. I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I proposed to amend the Senate bill so we could put a red man upon that commission. I believe there is just as good a brain in the skull of a red man as there is in the skull of a white man. We find them going ahead in literary lines wherever they have had the opportunity to develop along those lines. Is it not the fair, the decent, the honorable thing to do for us, a guardian, to say to our wards, if they are competent, to give them representation? Let us put a member of their class upon the commission that is going to secure to them the administration of justice in their claims. Is not that the proper thing to do?

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. If the Indians have the brain power the gentleman suggests, why do we constantly tie them to the apron strings of the Government? Why not let them be American citizens?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. We should, as a matter of fact.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. At the hearing on the Interior Department appropriation bill, in connection with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, it was brought out that the Indians of the United States are less self-supporting than any other Indian in North or South America. There must be something radically wrong with the administration of Indian Affairs.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I will tell the gentleman why it is. It is because we have never treated them as our equals. It is because we have driven them from pillar to post. It is because whenever they get anything of value it is taken away from them by the white man. [Applause.] That is the reason, and that is the answer to the gentleman's question. You can take a man from any walk of life or any class of society, deprive him of his freedom, his rights, his liberties, and his opportunities and make a useless being out of him.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. One further question if the gentleman will permit: It was also brought out that there are thousands and thousands of Indian children today who are not receiving any kind of education. Something is wrong where such a condition exists.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. It is our fault. This is the only tribunal to which the red man may appeal and ask for help. I ask you to do your duty by the people you have forced under your supervision and over whom you have established the involuntary relationship of guardian and ward.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes at my disposal I wish to answer some of the statements made by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]. I am, of course, a new Member of Congress and also a new member of a so-called minor committee, the Committee on Indian Affairs, but this committee is loaded with claims and the Members of Congress cannot get to the bottom of them, we cannot get at the facts.

The Indian Bureau says we have not the means to sift these claims and give a real fair and accurate report, one that is fair to the country, one that is fair to Congress and one that is fair to the Indians. Of course, the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] states this is a Treasury raid. When we talk about a Treasury raid being conducted under the leadership of the Indian chiefs of America, do not forget the land raid that we conducted against the Indians during the last 300 years in this country.

The opposition to this bill today should remember one thing. The reason we have these claims and the reason that this bill is in here backed by administration forces is the fact that the claims of the Indians have never been properly adjudicated. They have been treated on a charitable basis. They have had to go before a committee and they have had to proceed through lobbies. Under this bill they will go before a commission of a quasi-judicial nature and present the facts and arguments to the commission, which will merely advise Congress. Of course, the commission can no more order Congress to pass a bill or to kill a bill than this House can tie the hands of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Another criticism of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] is that this bill is too wide open. The bill was made wide open, sounding either on the basis of a legal consideration, moral consideration, or an equitable consideration. The reason is that an attempt is being made to be fair with the Indians and to give them no more than the law, equity, or moral consideration should give them.

May I close with the request on behalf of the committee that the Members of the House give this bill fair consideration because of the fact that the Committee on Indian Affairs should not deal with the Indians on the basis of charity, but should deal with them as other groups of the country have been dealt with, on the basis of law and equity. We should not denominate this as an Indian raid on the Treasury but simply as a bill to expiate the unfairness that the American people in the last 300 years have visited on the Indians of this country.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I had no desire to inject myself into this debate, because I do not know a great deal about the subject; but I have made two unsuccessful attempts to solicit information from gentlemen who addressed the Committee. Now, I had to get at it this way.

I want to ask the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee how much it will cost annually to operate this commission?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The gentleman will observe that under the terms of the bill funds for the operation of this commission are to be appropriated by the Congress, with no stated amount. It will receive whatever the Congress deems necessary. It will be necessary for the commission, through its representatives, to make a showing before the Appropriations Committee and convince that committee as to what will be necessary to operate the commission.

Mr. COLMER. Very well. I thought I could get the information, but I still do not have it.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. No; I regret I do not have the time to yield to my friend.

Mr. Chairman, it appears to one who sits on the side lines that this is just another effort to set up another bureau. What is the Bureau of Indian Affairs doing now?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for an answer?

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, this year a total of $31,100,000 has been appropriated for the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In addition to that, over $500,000 has been appropriated annually for the payment of the salaries of the officials of this Bureau. It is proposed under this bill to set up another bureaucracy which will include a lot of high-paid people who will sit in swivel chairs here in Washington and pass upon these claims. Why cannot this work be done by the present Bureau?

I am in favor of giving justice to the Indians. Personally, I think they were done a great injustice in the beginning. However, I have a keen desire to be fair with some 130,000,000 American citizens who are taxpayers, and I am against a bill which provides for an additional bureaucracy. I hope the bill will be defeated.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am probably looked upon as the outstanding enemy of the Indians in this Congress, but I may say I am not an enemy of the Indian but I might be properly classed as an enemy of the attorneys for the Indians.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I refuse to yield as I desire to present my case.

Mr. Chairman, my interest in Indian legislation started some years ago. Information came to the committee of which I am chairman, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to the effect that the Congress had passed 114 resolutions extending jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to consider various claims of the Indians. I was further advised if some action was not taken by the Congress the Government of the United States would be required to pay billions of dollars if all the claims that had been filed were allowed and paid.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I refuse to yield at this time as I must present my views on this subject.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman give us the source of that information?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not yield. I will give the gentleman the source of the information.

Mr. Chairman, I called a meeting of the committee and invited the Assistant Attorney General who handles the Indian claims in the Court of Claims, as well as a representative of the Comptroller General's office, to appear before our committee. Let me impress upon the Members now that it is the Comptroller General's office, not the Bureau of Indian Affairs or the Department of the Interior, that has the records relating to the Indians and the amount of money that has been spent for the benefit of the Indians since the Constitution and various treaties with the Indians have been signed.

This is not an idle statement, because I hold in my hand the hearings. Assistant Attorney General Blair told our committee that up to that time the petitions filed in the Court of Claims under the jurisdictional acts passed by the Congress by unanimous consent, and without any debate whatsoever, either on the floor of the House or on the floor of the Senate, involved some three and one-fourth billion dollars and the Indians still had the right to file additional petitions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not right now. Permit me to go on. The gentleman can get time from the committee chairman. We were told something had to be done. My experience over a period of years in this House convinced me it could not be done through the Committee on Indian Affairs. So, by direction of the members of my committee, I appeared before the Appropriations Committee and presented the matter to that committee. I suggested that the Appropriation Committee call members of the Court of Claims before their committee, and they did. I suggested they call the Assistant Attorney General, and they did. I suggested they call the Comptroller General, and an assistant of the Comptroller General appeared. These men confirmed the statement I made, and in a deficiency bill an amendment was carried where the Government was given the right to offset the claims of the Indians by showing advances and gratuities which had been made to the Indians by the Government of the United States. This helped, but what happened? A number of cases were dismissed because it was shown beyond a doubt by the records of the Comptroller General's office that the Government had advanced more money to the Indians than the Indians were claiming. The Court of Claims had passed on cases and the Supreme Court had passed on cases, and denied money to the Indians. The Indians were not entitled to the money, the courts said.

Right away the attorneys for the Indians came before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House and the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and asked that the jurisdictional acts be amended so that the Government would not be permitted to charge off the advances and gratuities which had been made to the Indians.

Last May the doctor sent me back to bed for 10 days. I had stopped the passage of a bill changing a jurisdictional act. However, while I was in bed that bill passed the House. It had already passed the Senate. The case was reopened in the Court of Claims, although it had been passed on by the Court of Claims and had already been passed on by the Supreme Court of the United States. On June 1 of this year as a result of the jurisdictional act to which I have referred, the Court of Claims rendered another decision in this case, and I have the decision here. There will be submitted to the Committee on Appropriations of the House to be included in the next deficiency bill an estimate for this judgment amounting to $5,313,347, with interest at 5 percent per annum on $2,271,000 from June 7, 1937, to date of payment.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not proceeding in order, in that he is not confining his remarks to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed in order.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I insist the gentleman from Oklahoma state in what way I am not proceeding in order.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman is not discussing the bill. The gentleman is discussing his own prowess and the activities of his committee in defeating some claims. This bill goes to the question of finding the facts with reference to claims. What the gentleman has done in the past does not relate to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed in order.

Mr. COCHRAN. My statements are being made with the view of showing the Members of the House exactly what is happening in connection with Indian claims, because every one of the claims to which I am now referring under the terms of this bill is to be taken out of the Court of Claims and turned over to a commission of three men, one of whom is to be an Indian and claims decided against the Indians can be reopened. If this is not in order, I do not know what is in order.

Mr. DISNEY. It is in order, but it is not a correct statement of the facts.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, well, I can prove my statements by records. Another of the claims which, under the terms of this bill, can be taken out of the Court of Claims and turned over to the commission provided for in the bill is a claim of the Shoshone Tribe of Indians. This case was also decided this month. This judgment will also be submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and over $4,000,000 is involved. In other words, if they are not satisfied they can ask this commission for more. During the present month nearly $10,000,000 in judgments against the United States has been awarded by reason of the jurisdictional acts, referring these cases to the Court of Claims and they are all based on something that happened 75 years or more ago.

Another case which can be taken out of the Court of Claims is in the amount of $252,000,000. Why, in claims which are pending before the Court of Claims and which can be taken before this proposed commission the claimants even want money for the mineral which has been taken out of the ground and the timber that has been taken off the ground. Do not take my word for it. Look up the claims yourself and read the petitions. I have spent 3 years in working, not playing, on Indian claims, and I have stopped dozens of them from being passed by this House.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, another claim that can be taken before this commission was defeated in the closing days of the last session, when I refused to permit a bill to be passed which would prevent the Government from offsetting advances and gratuities against the claim. This is the California claim. What happened? The same people who recommend the passage of this bill, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and so forth, sent their representatives to me and called me over the telephone, and pleaded with me to let the bill pass, stating it did not amount to much. However, the Assistant to the Attorney General of the United States told me, "If you let that bill pass, we will be compelled to walk into the Court of Claims and confess judgment in the amount of $17,000,000." You can see this is an important question, one which deserves your consideration. I am perfectly willing that the bill be called up and voted on by the House, because I think it will make the Members of the House realize there is something more behind Indian claims than merely the desire of a Member of Congress to get such bills passed. Lawyers, not Indians, are pushing these claims, lawyers who get the Indians to sign up and then forevermore have the Indians in their hands.

Do you know that all the evidence which is going to be presented to this commission in the event the commission is established must be prepared by the Government of the United States and laid on the table for the attorney of the Indians? The attorney does not get any evidence. In one claim pending before the Court of Claims, and which can be taken over by this commission, the General Accounting Office has been working for 9 years on the matter, and it has cost the General Accounting Office $200,000 to try to assemble the evidence to protect the taxpayers of this country against a raid on the Treasury.

If you go back and find out the amount of money the Congress of the United States has appropriated for the upkeep of the Indians since the Constitution was signed and since treaties were signed, you will realize the Indian has been treated pretty fairly. Remember every claim is 75 or 100 years or more old, some based on treaties signed before 1800. Surely, Mr. Chairman, this should be stopped. This bill will reopen dozens of claims which the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court have rendered adverse decisions. Remember that. What tribe of Indians could you get to consent to reopen a case that they had already won? Why, then, should you ask the Government to reopen a case decided in the Government's favor?

Now, another feature of the bill worth mentioning: Under the terms of this bill the Government is to be responsible for the acts of any of its agents. The Supreme Court time and again has held that the Government of the United States is not responsible for the acts of any agent. I will move to strike out that language at the proper time.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to exert myself any further on this bill. There are others here who, I am sure, will present additional information to the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I decline to yield, but I will say to the gentleman from Montana, in closing, that I compliment him on his activity on behalf of the Indians. The gentleman has only been here since January, but he has been more active and has got more bills out of the Indian Affairs Committee since we met in January than any new Member of this House since I have been around here, and I have been around here now for nearly 25 years.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, should be defeated. We have a Court of Claims, and we have a Supreme Court, and let the cases remain where they are and if Congress does not change the jurisdictional acts, the Government of the United States and the taxpayers will have half a chance at least to win some of these cases. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, you would think to hear the discussion that has been going on here from my learned and distinguished friend, my colleague from Missouri, and other Members, that there is about to be created here a commission of Indians for the purpose of stealing from the Government for the good of these Indians.

As a matter of fact, if this commission is set up, it will be a fact-finding body. For what purpose? For the purpose of stealing money from the Government for the Indians? Who can say that? I do not believe that. I do not believe the President of the United States would appoint, neither do I believe the Senate of the United States would confirm, three men who would go on a commission for the purpose of cheating the very Government that created their positions.

Here is what this commission is for, and in my judgment the Government will be a heavier beneficiary from this commission than the Indians. The Court of Claims is a big, busy court. The Court of Claims is in a log-jam at the moment with a multiplicity of claims, not only Indian bills, but other claims, and my distinguished friend from Missouri is not correct when he points out that many jurisdictional bills will be taken from the Court of Claims and placed before this commission, because this is not to be a court. This is not to be such a commission as can render a single judgment in law or in equity. This is to be simply a fact-finding body. What is the purpose of its creation? The Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Bureau of the Budget, and the President himself, in giving support to this measure, evidently think the Government can save money for the Government by having a commission whose business it is to search out the facts with respect to these claims which are filed by the Indians against the Government, and it is possibly their thought that the Government will be protected through this commission.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. Would not the Government and the Court of Claims be bound by the findings of this fact-finding commission?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; they would not—not under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I cannot yield further.

I want to take this opportunity to talk a little about these gratuities the gentleman from Missouri has referred to. Do you know what the gratuities and the advances are that the gentleman refers to? You would think from the gentleman's remarks that they represent money taken out of the United States Treasury and given to the Indians. Well, it is not that at all. The things they call gratuities and advances are moneys paid the administrative officers who are in charge of the bureaus and other divisions of the Office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the officers that deal with Indian affairs. They are not gifts to the Indians, they are administrative costs, salaries, rents, and so forth. Jurisdictional bills? Why, a jurisdictional bill has not a thing in the world to do with gratuities. Here is what a jurisdictional bill does.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma 2 additional minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. We all know that before the Government of the United States can be sued, a tribe or an individual or a corporation or a company must have conferred upon it the right to sue the Government. This is what a jurisdictional bill is and nothing else. It has nothing to do with gratuities, and so on.

Now, the gentleman points out that the General Accounting Office has been busy for 9 years working on some Indian claims in order to get them ready for the Court of Claims. That is absolutely right, because the General Accounting Office is in possession of all of the facts and all of the figures, and when jurisdiction is conferred upon a tribe of Indians to sue the Government, that tribe asks for an accounting from the Government and the General Accounting Office is the only office in possession of the figures and the only office that can render an accounting to the Indians of what the Government has done under the terms of a particular treaty. So it is that the Accounting Office in one case delayed until 4 years after the time fixed in the original jurisdictional bill within which to permit the Indians to file petitions. The Accounting Office had all the information, but the Accounting Office did not render the accounting until 4 years after the time within which the Indians could file their petitions had expired.

This is a good bill and it ought to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, as a Member of this House having in his district four tribes of Indians, and some of the most intelligent in the United States, also one of the wealthiest tribes, I say that I am very much opposed to this bill. I am very anxious to see it defeated. I ask you Members from districts that do not have Indians in your districts, to give us due consideration and to be very careful on this bill. If there ever was a bill introduced since I have been here that opens up the floodgates to siphon money out of the United States Treasury, this is it. I have reached the conclusion that the reporter was right who said some years ago "that JOHN COCHRAN, of Missouri, is one of the five most valuable men in this House." Mr. COCHRAN'S plea here on this bill and his description of the effect of it is certainly convincing. I notice the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] a moment ago said that these jurisdictional bills simply conferred upon the Court of Claims the right to try the suit. At the same time these jurisdictional bills tie the hands of the Government and prevent a proper hearing. This bill, if it becomes a law, will lead to millions of dollars being taken out of the Treasury on unjustifiable claims. It will throw down the bars on adjudicated cases, and let them come back and plead for more.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. For a short question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman refers to the wealthy Indians in his district. How does that conform to the statement made by the gentleman from the Committee on Appropriations awhile ago when he spoke about the Indians of the United States being less self-supporting than any other group of Indians anywhere in the Western Hemisphere—Canada, the United States, Central America, South America?

Mr. PIERCE. I think that is largely because of the way the Indian Department has treated the Indians.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And not the fault of the Indians?

Mr. PIERCE. Absolutely not. I think if they had been let alone and not tied to the apron strings of the Indian Department they would have been much better off. We do not develop them as citizens. I wish we could remove some of these hampering laws that have managed these Indians and that we could recognize them as American citizens and so treat them. I know the Indians that I am acquainted with would be vastly better off if they were torn loose and were not forever tied to the apron strings of the Indian Department. This commission will simply gather facts, it is said, but they will be facts that will be used against the Government, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] was right when he mentioned the fact that these findings will be used in the Court of Claims as established rights and so pleaded.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman realize that this bill sets a deadline and compels them to bring in their claims at a certain time, and we have never been able to get that done before?

Mr. PIERCE. The whole thing will open up the floodgates. I think the bill ought to be defeated. I cannot see any right or justice in establishing at this time another bureau to bring up these old claims that have been adjudicated and bring them back into court and try to get more money. The part of section 2, on page 4, ought of itself to kill the bill. I am certainly hoping that the Committee of the Whole will vote down the bill and report against its passage. It will lead to more tied hands of the court when the Government comes to defend against Indian claims, the same as many of these jurisdictional bills have done. This bill should be defeated. I am asking you Members who have no Indians and are not interested to vote with us to defeat the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to make an effort to not talk about individuals here for about 7 minutes, but I want to give you the facts of this situation just as they are. The Indian Bureau was established in 1832 and was put under the War Department, because these Indians were held in subjection. They were prisoners of war, and they have never been released. You have made them citizens, but their right to handle their property, and their right to life and liberty is still denied them, and they are held in subjection by the Indian Bureau. In 1868 they transferred the handling of the Indian Affairs from the War Department to the Department of the Interior, and there they have remained ever since. In 1855 we established the Court of Claims. How many Indian cases have come before the Court of Claims since 1855? Since that time 192 Indian cases have come before the Court of Claims. How much money has been involved in those suits since 1855? The total amount of claims that have come before the Court of Claims amounts to $2,187,000,000. How many claims have been decided favorably to the Indians during that period? Twenty-seven. What is the rate of percent of recovery of Indian claims? It is 2.3 percent of the amount sued for. How long does it take to handle one of these Indian cases? First, you must have a jurisdictional act if you do not pass this measure.

I want to refer to two specific cases that cover this entire field, and if I cannot convince the most skeptical that something should be done to change this system you have my permission to vote against the bill. I am just giving you two cases, and I know of hundreds of others. In 1866, following the Minnesota massacre, the Government of the United States came out into the Territory of Dakota to see if they could not make some arrangement with the Indian tribes to build railroads and telegraph lines through the country. They went to the fathers of these men sitting in the gallery this afternoon and entered into a treaty agreement with them that they were to be given $400,000 for permission to cross and recross their country and that the white settlers and white men engaged in that business would not be molested. Those Indians kept their word. No Indian in American history ever violated a treaty made with this Government. It was first violated by the Government itself. We paid the Indians $400,000 for that privilege.

Within the past few years those Indians presented their claims to the Court of Claims of this Nation. You talk about adjudication. You talk about going back of a judgment to do justice to these Indians. The Court of Claims found a judgment for the Aricaras, Mandans, and Gros Vents, but under the accounting system they deducted as a gratuity the $400,000 they paid them years ago for the specific purpose of crossing their territory. Now, is that right? Is there any man in this House this afternoon who thinks that is right? If there is an individual here who would say those men were not entitled to recover the $400,000 taken away from them, I would like to know it. There is not one. But that has been adjudicated. That is through. These Indians have sat here years and years now asking for Congress to give them a jurisdictional act so that they can come into the Court of Claims and recover their own $400,000. At this minute they have not gotten that bill.

Men will get up on the floor of this House and deny them the right to go into the Court of Claims to prove the facts about which there is no controversy. Is that justice? I do not care if it results in a judgment for $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 or $50,000,000. If it is right between man and man, if it is justice to those Indians, let us pay it and not refuse because you say, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] says, "Why, it is costing us $5,000,000."

Let me give you one more case, and I hope I have time to finish it, because it will indicate to the Members of this House what can be done under this bill where you do not have to ask for a jurisdictional bill, and keep these Indians pounding at the doors of this Nation for 7 years before they can get a bill. It takes 8 years and 11 months to get a report from the accounting department. It takes 3 years and 7 months to get a case decided. So add it up. Add up 6 years and 8 years and 3 years and 11 months and 7 months and 6 months, and you see how long it takes. Pass this bill and we will have the facts and we will be able to do justice to the American Indians.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BURDICK. Will the gentleman give me 2 more minutes?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I do not have the time.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and by the eternal I will put it in.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, of course it grieves me a great deal today to be opposed to my committee on this bill, but the longer I have studied the bill and the longer I look at it, the more I have come to the conclusion that the only good thing about it is the printing and the paper.

This bill was reported out by our committee in the Seventy-third Congress, by a committee of seven members, seven members being present. It now comes to you with 11 members of the committee having been present when it was voted out. The bill was taken up at 10:30 and reported out at 12 o'clock when our committee usually adjourns.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Well, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I cannot yield unless the gentleman gives me a little of his time.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I would like to correct the gentleman.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman answer this question? Was not the bill taken up at 10:30 on the day it was reported out?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes, but the bill had been reported by a subcommittee and was considered for three consecutive meeting days in the general committee.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true it was considered for 1½ hours the day it was reported out?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes; after it had been considered 3 other days.

Mr. O'MALLEY. By a subcommittee.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. By the general committee at two other meetings.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do not yield further, Mr. Chairman.

This bill will cost the Government around $500,000 a year to maintain this commission if the commission only investigates and hears the claims that are now being investigated by the General Accounting Office and the Attorney General's Office and other divisions of the Government concerned with Indian affairs.

I am sorry, but I cannot yield to the gentleman even though he is the author of a similar bill.

Mr. DISNEY. Will not the gentleman yield that I may correct one of his statements?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, the Senate bill was taken up, and on page 3716 of the RECORD you will find how it was passed—and the debate on it—if you can—I cannot find it. This bill starts out with ridiculous proposition no. 1, purporting to set up the Indian Claims Commission, of which one member must be an Indian. Why do we not bring in a bill reconstituting the Supreme Court and saying that one member shall be a Negro? What is the idea of this? Why not say that one member of this commission must be an Irishman because some Irishman might want to make a claim? This is ridiculous proposition no. 1.

The commission is to be permanent, although the bill does carry the limitation that the commission shall expire after 10 years unless the time is further extended by act of Congress.

It has been said on the floor that the administration is for this bill. I would not be honest with the Members of the House whose votes they have attempted to get by such statements if I did not tell them what one branch of the executive department said about this bill in a letter to the Chief Executive:

> In some instances this legislation would practically result in two trials of the same claim, one before the commission and another before the Court of Claims. On the other hand, it is submitted that a complete and exhaustive investigation of all claims of Indian tribes by a special commission might dispose of the entire subject and thus possibly preclude further attempts on the part of individual tribes to secure consideration or reconsideration of a claim.

The Attorney General himself says that this does not do away with a bit of work, for these Indians can come back to Congress or they can go to the Court of Claims after this claims commission has turned down their case. So what is saved? Nothing. We duplicate work and make two trials necessary where one sufficed before. Let us see how the Attorney General supports this bill:

> In view of the fact that the measure deals with subjects primarily within the activities of the Interior Department, this Department acquiesces in the proposal—

Is that support?—

> this Department acquiesces in the proposal.

So far as the administration supporting this bill is concerned, the only communication that I have ever seen—and I believe it is the only one on the subject—expresses the hope that this legislation will be taken up at this session and that it might become law.

The report of the Department of the Interior favoring this bill is contradictory in two places. In one place it states that the reason the Indians have not been able to get their claims acted upon is because many of them did not have the wherewithal to hire attorneys. The bill itself provides that they must have attorneys if they want to go before the commission. By the provisions on page 4 of the bill you put these Indians into the hands of attorneys, yet the Department says that the reason many of these claims have not been presented is because the Indians had not the means to hire attorneys. The bill provides further that attorneys having authority to represent the Indians shall be the only ones who can examine the records. If the Indians do not have the wherewithal to hire attorneys, why should this bill compel them to hire attorneys in order to appear before the commission or to have these records examined?

In the short time at my disposal I have not been able to enumerate all the ridiculous propositions in this bill, but if you will go over it carefully you will discover others. The gentleman from Missouri said that thousands of old claims would be reopened. If this is not indicated by the language on page 3, from lines 7 to 13, I cannot understand the English language. Every claim that has ever been passed on by the United States Government can be brought up before this commission and reopened and reexamined. The language on page 4 of the bill provides that even those claims that have been presented to Congress and refused by our committees can be heard by this commission and then submitted to us again for action, thus reopening claims that were determined years ago.

The Senate bill did provide that once the commission turned down a claim it could not be considered by Congress, but you will see on page 5, line 22, that this language has been stricken. So it is now possible under the present wording of the bill for claims turned down by this commission to be brought to Congress again. Neither I nor any other Member wants to deny to the Indians of our country—and there are 30,000 of them in my State alone—the right to come before Congress; but if they are still to come before Congress, I cannot see why this commission should be created.

This commission is supposed to be a fact-finding body. There is no justification for its creation, because although it is to be a fact-finding body it still must go to the General Accounting Office, to the Land Office, to the Bureau of Indian Affairs and borrow their employees who are doing this work now for the committees of Congress; so, I cannot see any way in which work will be saved. Furthermore, this commission will cost the Government of the United States not less than $500,000 a year in expenses and salaries.

There is but one more point that I want to make clear: Two policies may be followed in dealing with the Indians; first, the policy of the Indian Bureau which is to keep the Indians for years on the reservations and under the control of Government job holders; second, the policy of the Government trying to get the Indians out of and off the reservations and have them assimilated as quickly as possible into our civilization. Although the Indians are fewer in number today than they were 100 years ago the expenditures of the Government for their care is far greater. As the Indians grow fewer the bureaucracy that feeds off them and fattens upon them grew greater. One more bureau added to this bureaucracy that rides the backs of the Indians of the United States like the old man of the sea means only more expense for this Congress and nothing for the Indians, for you may be sure that where the great majority of these claims are concerned some lawyer has initiated them and gotten the greater part of the award whether or not a limitation is put in the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman had his own time.

Mr. NICHOLS. I would like to ask the gentleman to clarify that statement.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman had time to make his statement.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman made a statement a while ago this would not prevent matters going before the Court of Claims. It seems to me in the past there have been many Indian claims that have not been properly considered or properly adjudicated. Does not the gentleman believe if these various claims were placed before this commission and finally disposed of, the Congress would probably not pass very many more jurisdictional bills? Does not the gentleman believe it is about time, after the lapse of all these years, to have these claims which have been pending for years finally disposed of by an impartial tribunal, which will give the Indians and the Government fair and impartial consideration?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I may say to the gentleman first of all, a tribunal that is created which is predicated upon one type of citizen being a member of that commission, cannot be impartial. When a bill comes into the Congress of the United States compelling the appointment of one member of a race or one member of a particular class to be a member of the commission, it starts off by not being impartial.

Mr. BOILEAU. This commission has not the power to pay the judgment, if they render final judgment?

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is right.

Mr. BOILEAU. This is only an investigating commission, which will have to make a report to the Congress of the United States. It is a fact-finding committee, so to speak. Does not the gentleman believe it is proper to have an Indian member on that commission to preserve and protect the rights of those people whose claims are being investigated?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I may say to the gentleman that committees of Congress are supposed to get the same information from the same sources this commission would get it. I cannot see any saving, because this commission will have to go to the General Accounting Office, the General Land Office, and the Bureau of Indians Affairs, where exist all the records pertaining to the Indians.

Mr. BOILEAU. After they get all this information together and make their investigation, they would probably submit a majority report and a minority report, if there was a difference of opinion. This Congress then, through a committee, would have the opportunity to give adequate and proper consideration to the matter. It seems to me something of this kind is necessary if we are going to deal fairly with the Indians.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If there were Indians in the gentleman's district and an adjudication was made against them and they sought his help to put through a bill to get the thing they wanted, on the basis of the commission's finding would the gentleman refuse to introduce such a bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. I may say if a fair investigation had been made by this tribunal, a report submitted to the Congress, and the Committee on Indian Affairs refused to report a bill, and, further, if the matter came before the House and was turned down, and I thereafter tried to get a jurisdictional bill passed, I believe the House would curb me.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Who would decide whether it was a fair adjudication?

Mr. BOILEAU. First of all we would have a report of the commission that made the investigation. Then the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House would consider the matter, and the House would undoubtedly follow the recommendation of this committee and turn down the claim if the committee so reported.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then the gentleman would deny the right of petition to an Indian in connection with a claim that had been passed upon by the Commission?

Mr. BOILEAU. No. I would still have the right to introduce a bill, but I say the Indian Affairs Committee, having considered the claim and having turned it down, would not give me much consideration, and I would not be deserving of very much consideration. Until such time as a full and fair investigation and final adjudication is had, these Indians have the right to demand that the Government give them their day in court.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. I want to ask the gentleman a question. He says in most instances the lawyers take the greater part of this money which is recovered.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is right.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in every bill he has any knowledge of there is a provision in the bill that not exceeding 10 percent may be paid to the attorney?

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is right, 10 percent of the claim; but the gentleman knows well enough this Indian claim business is the biggest racket in the country.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Certain lawyers hang around our committee room and then go out to the Indian tribes and get these Indians to sign a contract. Then they go and dig up the claims, then come to the committee and try to get a jurisdictional bill through.

Mr. NICHOLS. Yet if we had been a little fairer with the Indians, they would not have had to go out and get lawyers and give them half of the money.

Mr. O'MALLEY. They do not get the lawyers. These lawyers also collect a lot of money in traveling expenses and for a lot of other things. There are lawyers in this country that would be disbarred in my jurisdiction for ambulance chasing if their conduct in connection with Indian matters was exposed.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman did not yield to me, but I yield to him.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I would have been glad to yield to the gentleman, but I did not have time.

Regardless of how claims are gone into, and regardless of how they get before the Court of Claims, if the judgment of that court is that the Indians should recover and that a debt is owing by the United States Government to the Indians, does not the gentleman think that debt should be paid to the Indians just the same as it should be paid to white men?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I think as between white men and Indians both should be paid, but I do not see where the gentleman's statement has anything to do with this commission.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is talking about lawyers inspiring the presentation of these claims.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is right. They not only inspire the claims but they dig up the evidence.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Let us assume that they do inspire these claims. If a court of this Government, an institution of the Government, finds that the Indian is entitled to recover, should not that debt be paid by the United States Government?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes; but I may say to the gentleman that if he will peruse the records of the Court of Claims he will find that 50 percent of the claims these lawyers have dug up are rejected because they are so rotten, so obviously attempts to raid the Treasury, that the court will not even hear them.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Why do they have such fear of coming before the Court of Claims if they cannot recover?

Mr. O'MALLEY. The reason a lot of these lawyers do not want to come before the Court of Claims is because they have not been able to get by with these old claims. The court has dismissed the claims. Now they want a commission that will pick up the claims and give them another day in court. Our duty here is to protect the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman has stated this commission cannot be an impartial tribunal if it is already provided that one of the three members shall be an Indian. Has the gentleman noted that all three members are to be selected by the Government and two of them are to be whites? The Government is selecting all three of them.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I know the gentleman says two of them are to be whites. I know one man who says he is going to get such an appointment, and he is a white man.

If we pass this bill to create a new commission which will cost the taxpayers of the United States more than $500,000 a year from scratch or from the time it starts, with as little consideration and in as little time as has been given in both bodies, it is no wonder we cannot balance the Budget, and it is no wonder we have to raise taxes. This bill ought to be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Where does the gentleman get the $500,000? Right out of the air?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

A MATTER OF ECONOMY AND JUSTICE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, what this bill does is to give us an "out on the Indian" problem. It proposes to find the merits of these claims. If you do not do this today, the problem goes on. Some time, some day, the line will have to be drawn, and this is an attempt to place a deadline, get the claims in, and determine the facts.

Section 4 states:

> The commission shall be authorized to receive claims for a period of 5 years after the approval of this act, and no claim existing before such period not presented within such period may thereafter be submitted to any Federal court or administrative agency for consideration or action.

It is true that the committee struck off the words, "nor will such claim be entertained by Congress", but this was merely because one Congress cannot bind a succeeding Congress. The bill does provide that claims unpresented within this time may not thereafter be submitted to a Federal court or administrative agency. So a deadline is established and we can work to a settlement of the problem of Indian treaty claims.

This bill will also put an end to claim chasing by lawyers because it gives this commission the right to assemble the facts and advise the Indians of their merits.

The gentleman from Missouri mentioned a cost of $200,000 for investigating one claim, but the facts there uncovered, as is pointed out in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, might bear on a number of claims. The documents could be photostated. Instead of one set of lawyers pawing through the records for the facts regarding a particular claim and then another set of lawyers doing it again, all going to an expense which eventually will be paid out of the Treasury, this fact-finding commission would make "a permanent accomplishment", in the words of the report of the Secretary on the measure.

This bill in reality is an economy measure. It is of value both to the Indians and to the Government, and I am inclined to agree with the gentleman who stated the biggest value is to the Government.

This bill will stop the exploitation of the Indians. One gentleman spoke of the Indians in his district. I have five reservations in my district. Every election year one campaigner or another, admittedly including the gentleman before you, goes out and says to these Indians, "Elect me and I will try to get your claims settled." And, of course, we do try. But this hashing and rehashing keeps the Indians in a constant state of turmoil. Then attorneys come along. The result is the Indians do not know where they are.

In all justice to the Indians, in all justice to the guardian Government, these claims which are based on treaty rights should be settled while the people who lived the closest to the time the treaties were made are still here.

This perpetual carrying along and carrying along and baiting the Indians with this and baiting them with that is responsible for the condition of which the gentleman complains, that we are pampering them.

Let us give the Indians their day in court, consider their questions, and bring them before the Claims Commission. If their claims are without merit, it is expressly provided that the Commission shall say they are without merit, and this will dispose of them. If they have merit, let us settle them, put the Indian on his own with what we promised him in our treaties, and then give him a chance to get on and get ahead.

Treaties in the minds of the Indians are rightfully based on that section of the Constitution which states that treaties along with the Constitution shall be "the supreme law of the land." How can we preach love for the Constitution if we do not carry out our treaties? How can we point the finger of scorn at debt defaulters when we "run out" on our Indian treaties?

This bill does not create new claims; it simply seeks to determine what is right. The gentlemen who are afraid of this bill are afraid to face the facts.

If you are not afraid to face the facts and do justice, you ought to vote for this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN].

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, I have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs since coming to Congress, and this is my third year. I am one of the members who never miss a meeting unless it is absolutely impossible to be there.

This bill has been kicked around in our committee as long as I can remember. It is not anything new. My colleague's statement that we considered the bill for only an hour and a half one forenoon and then reported it out is incorrect. We have considered the bill for 3 years. Subcommittees have studied the bill. The bill came over from the Senate, and we considered it fully again and amended it. We cut down the salary of the commissioners from $10,000 to $7,500, and made a lot of other changes. At first I was skeptical about the bill and thought it would create duplication, but the longer I am here the more I am convinced we will never get these claims bills satisfactorily taken care of unless we have an impartial fact-finding body.

In 1935 I was fortunate enough to get a jurisdictional bill passed which my predecessor had tried to have passed. However, I realize that a good many bills are knocked out every time they are called up because they might involve some money. With respect to the bill that I finally had passed, the Department of the Interior admitted that timber to the extent of over $600,000 had been taken off of the land, but still the average Member on this floor here was afraid to allow it to go to the Court of Claims, although they had taken this much timber that belonged to the Indians and the money is now being held in escrow where no one can use it. It is a matter that certainly should be settled once and for all.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEHRMANN. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in most of these claims that will be presented to this commission by the Indians, if the commission is set up, there are claims based upon positive, ironclad treaties between the Indians and the Government of the United States?

Mr. GEHRMANN. Absolutely.

In this jurisdictional bill that I had passed, I purposely cut down the attorney's fee to 5 percent, and certainly that was not an ambulance-chasing proposition. Furthermore, the State legislature authorized the attorney general's office to assist the Indians, and the attorney general and an assistant attorney general were here a short time ago, and they are now going through the records down here in the Bureau of the Budget and the Department of the Interior, and every attorney or representative of some tribe that has a claim is digging over these same records. If you create this commission, they will go through these records and will separate them by tribes and will have the facts with reference to each tribe, and there will not be any duplication.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] stated it cost $200,000 to investigate one claim or to have a force of 200 men there for 2 years to dig up records on one claim. This is the way it has been going right along, but I am sure that eventually this commission will employ people to dig up the facts about every tribe so that they will have them at their disposal, and will index them and then will be in a position to come before the Committee on Indian Affairs and tell us whether or not a particular bill is worthy of consideration. We are considering bills every day where we have to depend on someone like our good colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], who was before the committee the other day when we passed out three bills. We took his word for it, and that was about the only reason we passed them. I do not know that we had any facts, and in most cases we have to take the facts from some colleague rather than from some impartial commission. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I am as much opposed as any Member of this House to the creation of any new bureau or commission, but this is an exception because we are dealing with a people who are wards of the Government of the United States. A trust relationship exists between the Indians and the Government, and whatever we do should be done on a plane of high honor and a high sense of justice, dealing fairly with a people who have not been able to represent themselves personally in the Court of Claims or before the committees of the United States Congress.

I have no Indians in my district, except a very few in Oakland County and in Pontiac, Mich., representing a band of Chippewas, the balance of whom reside in the district of my good friend the gentleman from Michigan, Congressman LUECKE, in upper Michigan. However, a typical claim, and undoubtedly one which will reach this commission if it is created under this bill, has come to my attention, presented by no less a person than a probate judge residing at the Soo, Mich., no later than December 1936, in which he calls attention to the fact that this band of Chippewa Indians, to which I have referred, had two treaties made just 2 days apart back in 1855. The first was signed by the duly delegated chiefs. After they left those who did not represent the tribe 2 days later got drunk and were induced to sign a new treaty, which deprived these Indians and their descendants of valuable fishing rights in the Sault Rapids, the waters around Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., and the Great Lakes.

The Indians have constantly contended that those who remained and signed the second treaty had no authority to do so, and that the second treaty abrogated the rights reserved to the Indians in the first treaty entered into but a few hours before. I realize that because of the long lapse of time that the injustice done this tribe will be outlawed because of the statute of limitation and in the ordinary procedure these people would be prevented from presenting the facts or from asking for a review of their case unless this bill becomes law. The measure before us is more than a bill to create a fact-finding commission. It is a clearing house, and presents an opportunity once and for all to the Indians to present their claims. It is, also, a statute of limitations because if the claims are not presented within a period of 5 years they cannot present them afterwards.

Now, in regard to the cost of this commission, suppose it does cost the Government of the United States some money. I think the Secretary of the Interior has summed up the entire object of this bill relative to cost in a paragraph on page 3 of the report in which he says:

> A somewhat increased cost to the Government (i. e., simply the expenses of the commission itself) will be balanced by a permanent reduction of costs in the Indian Office, the General Accounting Office, the Department of Justice, and the courts. And finally, it will be possible for the Indians, Congress, and the country to know with a clear conscience, that at least the facts have been ascertained, and that the merits of the cases are set down in an adequate manner. It is believed that just, final settlement would follow as a matter of course.

I hope this bill passes in order that we may give the Indians a square deal. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY].

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, first let me address myself to the question of the expense involved. The gentleman from Minnesota says it will cost half a million dollars a year. I do not know on what basis that statement is made, but if we stop to reason about the thing we know that it cannot cost that much money. I have tried to give judgment to the matter, and it seems to me that $100,000 a year would be a maximum, and that is a matter of estimate.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman, although he did not yield to me.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I shall give the gentleman a little time. How many employees does the gentleman estimate this commission will have to have in order to investigate these claims as thoroughly as they propose to do, and as they are now being investigated by the General Accounting Office and others?

Mr. DISNEY. Several; but the gentleman must take into consideration that the Indian Affairs Bureau has worked on these claims, and that the General Accounting Office had one claim for 9 years, and one that was 4 years over the limitation, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] said.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman knows from the bill that the salaries of the three commissioners will amount to $25,000 a year.

Mr. DISNEY. That is not so bad. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN] put his finger on the vice, as far as the Indians' affairs are concerned, when he said that this morning, acting on Governor PIERCE's word, without any facts, the Indian Affairs Committee passed out a couple of bills. And why? Because the committee wants to be unfair? No; but because it is overworked and cannot do the job correctly. They cannot do it because they have their other work to do, and when bills are passed out on the word of a gentleman whom they respect, that is not a scientific way of handling government. I do not care about boards and commissions. I am sorry that we have to create them, but if there ever has been one since I have been a Member of this House which is justified, it is this commission in this bill. Some time let us get rid of the Indian claims, by trying the cases. Here and now is the time. I overheard one gentleman say that he was for this bill until he noticed that any claim, even an adjudicated claim, could be considered. All this bill does is to provide for a fact-finding body. I refer to page 5, line 11:

> In all proceedings brought pursuant hereto in the Court of Claims all determinations of fact by the Commission shall be admissible in evidence but may be reviewed by the court either on the basis of evidence taken before the Commission, or on additional evidence, or both.

It is merely a fact-finding commission, nothing else, and the facts ought to be found. Then we would not hear these cries about fraudulent claims, and claims engineered by selfish people.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. I notice in the 1938 Budget that the salaries for the Indian Bureau in Washington are about $500,000 a year. Are these officials in Washington so overworked that they cannot do this job?

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, yes. All the gentleman needs to do is to find out what the facts are. Ask any member of the Indian Affairs Committee. They know that the Indian Bureau cannot get this work done. There is no dispute about that. The worst opponent of the bill would not claim that the Indian Bureau has the time to do the work.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. As a matter of fact, that is not one of the things that the Indian Bureau is charged with doing.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], and I respect him just like the Indian Committee respects him, made the statement that this would open up the floodgates. What floodgates? Only 27 out of 192 claims have been allowed in favor of the Indians, and of all the Indian claims filed in the history of the Nation, only 2.3 percent have been adjudicated in their favor and the Indians paid. What floodgates, I ask you? That is just a campaign issue here in the House to defeat the bill.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. I refer to the floodgates when the bill provides for claims that have been already settled.

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman ought to read the paragraph. It says so clearly.

Mr. DISNEY. Two and three-tenths percent would not constitute floodgates. The gentleman ought not to get frightened over that.

Mr. PIERCE. Past adjudication does not count if you pass this bill.

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman should read the bill, read what the wording of the bill says.

Mr. DISNEY. I have studied the bill thoroughly and at length. The claims commission must determine the fact, and every item that the commission passes on must come back here to Congress, and, instead of having a Member's mere word for passing out a bill, they will have the backing of the claims commission. Then you will have something to pass on, and the answer when bills come in here for any kind of a claim, or the first question of every Member will be, Was this passed on by the claims commission, was it favorably determined by the claims commission? That will be the question, and that will be the backlog on which we can support ourselves. Surely this is a good bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I would not have asked for this additional time were it not for the statements that have just been made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY]. The gentleman called attention to page 5, line 11, of the bill, in which he attempted to show how this commission was just to be a fact-finding commission.

> In all proceedings brought pursuant hereto in the Court of Claims all determinations of fact by the Commission shall be admissible in evidence but may be reviewed by the court either on the basis of evidence taken before the Commission, or on additional evidence, or both.

Let me ask you just this one question: What is the basis on which this commission is going to arrive at the facts that they are to present to the Court of Claims? As I called to your attention previously, page 4, lines 6 to 13, gives you the story as to the manner in which this commission is going to find evidence. There are to be no barriers of any kind.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman read the proviso that follows, starting on line 13?

Mr. COSTELLO. I will be glad to, but first, let me consider the language I have quoted. It is stated there that there are absolutely no barriers to the presentation of facts or of claims. In other words, it will be the duty of this commission to check the Indian records all the way back, to study every treaty, every statute, every law, and it does not make any difference whether the treaty was entered into a valid manner or not, it will be a subject for this commission to go into. It is up to this commission to determine what equitable, moral, or legal claim there may be that is actually presented to this commission. Frankly, if there is one good feature in this bill, it will be found at the bottom of page 5. It specifically provides who may present claims to this commission. It not only absolves every Member of Congress from the duty of representing various Indians who may be located in their districts, absolves them from the duty of representing them before the commission, but specifically provides that they are not eligible to present any matter before this commission. In order to present a matter before the commission you must be a member or members of an Indian tribe. The only other ground on which you might possibly present a matter would be to act as attorney.

In that connection I want to call to your attention the statement that appears on page 3 in the committee report in a letter from the Secretary of the Interior:

> There will be no need of paying to private attorneys amounts which have aggregated millions, and which, before the final settlement is achieved under the now existing arrangement, would total tens of millions.

In other words, the cost to the Government runs up into such high figures that when the 10-percent attorney fee is tied on, the attorneys are receiving tens of millions of dollars.

The Secretary would have you believe you would not need attorneys. The bill specifically provides for the method in which evidence is to be presented before this commission and sets forth that attorneys shall make motions. In other words, you are going to continue to hire attorneys, in spite of the statement of the Secretary of the Interior.

Frankly, every item that is mentioned here by the Secretary of the Interior as being an argument for the establishment of this commission is to my mind a direct indictment of the existing Indian Bureau. That is the very purpose for which the Indian Bureau exists, to look after the welfare and rights of the Indians, and if they are not properly being looked after, if the Indian Bureau is failing to look up the facts, what assurance do we have that some new bureau created now is going to do a better job or act more honestly with the Indians than has the past administration of the Indian Bureau in the 100 or 150 years gone by?

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. If the bill were amended by cutting out from line 6 down, would that not help it?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes; but I think we might take out even the first six lines and still not have a good bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time, 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that certain attorneys who do 90 percent of their legal work with Indians are interested in this bill. I made that statement, and I am firmly convinced that the passage of this bill will enable those attorneys to reopen every single claim that has ever been adjudicated by the Court of Claims or that we have passed upon in this Congress. If that were not so there would be no need for the language on page 4 in this bill, which says:

> No claim shall be excluded because of the provisions of any other statute, nor on the ground that it has become barred under any rule of law or equity.

Under that section every claim that any man had 150 years back could be reopened.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. The gentleman did not read what bothers me in this bill. On page 4, line 10, "No claim shall be excluded by reason of any treaty or statute."

Mr. O'MALLEY. That is right.

Mr. KITCHENS. Does that have the effect of doing away with all treaties or allowing the Indians to come in and say that under any treaty the United States has made the tribe got the worst of it?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I agree with the gentleman, because over on the other side of the page that intention was carried out by inserting language to the effect that if they could show fraud, duress, or mutual or unilateral mistakes whether of law or fact they could get their claims into court. This language is in addition thereto. But this is not the worst part of the bill. If this bill becomes law and this commission is created, the floodgates will be opened. If you do not believe this, look at page 6, section 5. This opens the floodgates for every claim that was ever settled. Listen to this language:

> SEC. 5. Immediately after its formation, the Commission shall send a written explanation of the provisions of this act to the recognized head of each Indian tribe and band, and to any other communal groups of Indians existing as a distinct entity, and to the superintendents of all Indian agencies who shall promulgate the same, and shall request that a detailed statement of all claims be sent to the Commission, together with the names of aged or invalid Indians from whom immediate depositions should be taken and a summary of their proposed testimony.

What lawyer in the country would not like to have cases dug up? The Indian lawyers will have their business advertised for them. For instance, a few years ago a certain firm of attorneys got every member of a certain tribe to sign a contract with them in the matter of claims. They will be able to go back and say to the Indians that the Department is advertising this law, that they should hire this firm of attorneys, that they will present their claims for the Indians. Not only will they tell the Indians that they can get through present claims but they will advertise to them that they can reopen the old claims. What kind of commission are we setting up?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield.

Should we sit here and pass a law advertising to the Indians, "Come in and get it"? This one provision alone in the bill appears to me to be clear evidence of what this bill is for and whom it is supposed to help. It is not going to help the Indians; they can come before our committee, as they always have, and if their claim is legitimate it will be approved. I repeat, this bill will not help the Indians; it will help only the Indian lawyers.

The statement has been made that Congress does not give the Indians a fair hearing. I think that the Indians have had fair hearings before our committee. As one member of the committee, I attempt to get facts on whatever bills are before our committee. We have a report from the Budget, we have a report from the Department, we have a report from any agency interested in the bill. We do not need this commission.

Mr. HILL of Washington. How much did the gentleman know about the bill of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] which was called up this morning? How much did the gentleman know about it? Not a thing.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the gentleman will get me some more time I will explain what I know about it.

Mr. HILL of Washington. The gentleman did not know anything about it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman the passage of this bill is demanded by considerations of natural justice constituting a moral obligation of the highest nature. "He who denies justice denies the Lord."

Anyone who has made even a superficial examination of the relations of the Government of the United States with the native Indian races must be convinced of the manifold injustices suffered by the native inhabitants of the country at the hands of the supreme political power. Helen Fiske Hunt Jackson has well named her record of the treaties made by the United States with its Indian inhabitants and the violation of those treaties by the Government, "A Century of Dishonor." No other term so aptly fits the long record of violated and broken treaties so that, if the term had then been invented, practically every treaty made by this Government with the Indians could have been cynically referred to as a "scrap of paper." For the protection of the Indians those treaties have been little more than scraps of paper, and it is only in comparatively recent years that the conscience of the country has been awakened to the true situation.

Now, it has been said, in words or substance, in the debate on this bill, that the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission is unnecessary and supererogatory and that it will simply take the place and perform the duties of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, or both. I have been a member of the House Committee on Indian Affairs for the last 4 years and have attended every session of the committee unless required by official duty or some other controlling reason to be elsewhere. And I know of my own personal knowledge that if the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House should sit every day, all day, of this session of Congress it could not hear fairly and adequately all of the claims presented to the committee. It has been necessary for the committee to decline to hear many claims offered in apparent good faith and with at least a fair probability that the claims have some merit. The committee has worked assiduously and devotedly and done all possible to be done in the time available since every member of the committee has other work of equal importance which cannot be neglected. It therefore follows that if the various tribes and bands of Indians of the United States who are earnestly convinced they have just claims against the Government of the United States must await an opportunity for presenting their claims to the Indian Affairs Committee of both House and Senate or of either, it is not too much to say that many of them must wait forever.

It has been estimated, Mr. Chairman, that at the present rate of progress in the disposition of Indian claims under present conditions and circumstances, they cannot be disposed of for a full century hence. If such delay does not mean the grossest kind of injustice to people who have just claims, then the words of the English language have lost their meaning or we are so deficient in moral sense as not to understand or appreciate injustice when it is presented to us.

It must not be thought that the establishment of the Commission as proposed in the bill before us will work any miracle. Even then, I suppose, some inequity will result and some injustice will occur. But at least we will have done all that lies within our power to correct the injustice and the lack of equity which are now so evident in our relations to those who are now our Indian citizens of the United States. Do not be mislead by the assertion, in whatever form made, that such claims can be adequately taken care of through the regular Indian Affairs Committees of the House and Senate, for that idea is the very opposite of the fact.

As a practical matter, then, we have two possible courses to adopt. One, to go along as we have been going for the last half century and more with the confident assurance that many, many of our native people will be denied as to their claims against the Government any possible opportunity to present them to any court of competent jurisdiction—a stark denial of justice. And on the other hand we may create an Indians Claims Commission as provided in the bill now under consideration, which we may confidently hope and expect to dispose of the Indian claims with fairness to all and within a comparatively short time. Henry IV of France is reported to have said that good justice is swift—he might in truth have gone further and said that delay in affording opportunities for securing justice is a denial of justice.

The argument has been advanced here that the payment of the claims asserted by the Indians will bankrupt the Government and all of the changes have been rung upon that statement; but it has not been asserted, Mr. Chairman, that the claims are unjust, and, after all, is not that the very issue involved? Is not the issue that an opportunity should be given to determine whether the claims so sincerely asserted by the Indians are just or unjust; and is not the further issue one of morals, that the just claims should be paid and the unjust rejected? The opposition to the bill really is an opposition to give any sufficient opportunity to the Indians to have their claims examined and a report made thereon by a competent and distinterested tribunal in order that Congress may separate the wheat from the chaff, may know which claims are just or unjust and may make corresponding provision for the claims which are founded on right and equity.

Reference has further been made to the claims of the California Indians and it has been pointed out that a certain amendment to the original jurisdictional bill would result in a judgment against the United States of upward of $17,000,000. It was not said that the Government of the United States did not truly owe the California Indians $17,000,000, and indeed no adequate reason was assigned in the debate for opposition to the proposed amendment to the jurisdictional bill which would have given, as I understand, the California Indians a fair opportunity to present their claim in court and have the same adjudicated in accordance with elementary principles of justice and equity.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Indian Affairs Committee I had occasion to make a careful examination of the claims of the California Indians, and, in my judgment, the claims which they have asserted are entirely just and they are entitled in right and equity not only to $17,000,000 but to a much larger amount, and yet the question seems not to be what justice rightly demands in their case but how they can be kept from securing the payment of their just claims.

And the case of the California Indians is only an example of what has gone on and is going on all over the country with respect to many of the Indian citizens. Some other measure might be proposed which would work out to better advantage both for the Government and for the Indians, but no such measure is now before us and we all know the difficulties that would be encountered in drafting such a bill and having the same presented and considered. As a practical matter we must either take the bill now under consideration with such amendments as we care to make to it, or else give over any idea of doing anything whatsoever on the subject.

Our attention has been called to the burden imposed upon the Government in compiling all of the available evidence concerning Indian claims as though it were something which the Government should not be required to do. Surely we have not so far forgotten the primary principles of equity, and indeed the primary principles of law, as to believe for a moment that such a course of conduct involves any imposition upon the Government of the United States. Even in private litigation, Mr. Chairman, any litigant may through appropriate legal or equitable process compel the furnishing of evidence in the possession of his opponent either through bill of discovery or through subpena duces tecum, or in some other fashion. All such processes are based upon considerations of natural justice in order that right and truth may always prevail.

Now, if we obey that rule as between private litigants where one owes no special duty to the other, how much more powerfully ought it operate as against the Government in its relations with the Indians. For it has been said here, and reiterated, that the Indians are the wards of the Government, and that the Government is the guardian of the Indians. Whether or not the ordinary definition of guardian and ward would encompass the relation of the Government with the Indians, it is undoubtedly and unquestionably true that the relation of trustee and cestuis que trustent has always existed and now exists between the Government and the Indians.

The Government is the trustee and the Indians the beneficiaries of the trust. Stated in the ordinary way, the Government is the guardian and the Indians are the wards. Now, we must remember that this relation did not come about through the will of the Indians. It was imposed upon them by the Government. The Government insisted, and still insists, that it is the guardian of the Indians, and that it has a right to control their affairs. The Government insisted, and still insists, that it is the trustee, and as such has a right to control their affairs. This relation has existed since the foundation of the Government itself. Now, the Indians ask only an opportunity to go into some court, or before some independent fact-finding body, such as the proposed Indian Claims Commission, and show, by a preponderence of the evidence if they can, that the trustee has been faithless to its trust; that the guardian has in many instances betrayed and cheated its wards. To deny them a fair opportunity for a dispassionate inquiry into these accusations is, indeed, Mr. Chairman, a denial of justice—and a deliberate denial of justice is an abominable thing, a detestable thing, in the sight of men and of God. Surely we are not sunk so low in the moral scale that we will, after full consideration, be willing to keep the profits gained by betrayal of the trust which we have assumed, by cheating those whom it has been and is our solemn duty to protect. Our obligation to the Federal Government demands of us no course of conduct which runs contrary to the principles of justice.

Nor is it a sufficient answer to say that these claims are old and therefore they ought not be paid; that they are barred by the statute of limitations; that they cannot be presented because the Indians were cozened at some time into signing a treaty, perhaps without understanding its contents, perhaps under such conditions that the signers did not really represent the people who are now said to be bound by their acts, or that the claims should be rejected by reason of some statute passed by the Congress of the United States, or that they should not now be heard because some court at some time, somewhere, heard one phase of the claims and denied relief on other phases because the enabling legislation was not sufficiently broad. All such arguments really avoid the main issue, and that issue is, I repeat, the demands of natural justice, an issue that, like some mighty mountain, thrusts its head above the plain and above the clouds that encompass it into the bright sunshine of eternal truth.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT].

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the Indians want their affairs wound up. They are entitled to a careful, honest, conscientious investigation and report on facts pertaining to their claims. We have been promising to wind up their affairs, and of course this is impossible until every claim has been disposed of.

Personally I have been doing my best and giving all the time I possibly can to wind up the affairs of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, and I am thoroughly convinced it cannot and will not be done until the Congress can get the unvarnished facts on the claims of the Indians, not only in my district but throughout the Nation. This cannot be done without assistance from somebody that will read, investigate, summarize, and report the facts.

That is exactly what is proposed in this bill. It provides for a commission of three to do this one thing. No Member of Congress—House or Senate—with thousands of other things to deal with, can give the necessary time required to go back a hundred years and read all of the old musty files down to the present, also go personally to the reservations—and Indian country like Oklahoma—and investigate conditions first hand.

With the facts properly before the Congress we can adjudicate claims on the basis of equity and the existing laws.

Something has been said this afternoon about the extra expense in setting up this proposed Indian Claims Commission. Well, what of it? We spend millions of dollars for doing other things, and I think this is important, and it will be money well spent. I believe it will be an honest endeavor to give the Indians a square deal—a step in the right direction.

I think the opposition to this bill, from an expense standpoint, is a good example of straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. I sincerely hope the bill passes.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman [reading]:

There is on the House Calendar S. 1902 to create an Indian Claims Commission to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes.

The question of the settlement of Indian claims, based upon alleged wrongful actions of the Government, through its disregard for Indian treaties and through many other causes, has been before the Congress many years. The Indian wards of the Nation will never be satisfied until these claims have been settled. The establishment of an Indian Claims Commission, whose duty it will be to investigate these claims and report to Congress, will be the initial step in disposing of this troublesome question.

I enclose for your information a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior on this subject. I hope it will be possible for this legislation to receive early action in the House so that it may become a law in this session of Congress.

So sayeth the President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that a member of our committee had to oppose this bill today. Let me call to the attention of the members of the committee the fact that only one member of the Committee on Indian Affairs opposes the bill. I want to straighten out the RECORD in regard to the situation in the committee and the reporting of the bill. There are 18 voting members on our committee. Eleven members were present when the bill was voted out. The vote was unanimous. Eleven plus one—the gentleman who is opposing the bill—makes 12; plus 3 members who have not attended a single meeting of the committee during this session of Congress, plus 3 other gentlemen, who have spoken in behalf of the bill, accounts for the entire membership. This shows that the support of the bill is almost unanimous.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman from Wisconsin said that any good claim presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs would be reported out.

I want to ask the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee whether it is not a fact there are many meritorious bills having to do with Indians now pending before the committee that have not been considered by the House of Representatives?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The gentleman is correct and I thank him for the contribution.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What does the gentleman think this bill will do, if anything, with reference to the following situation: Since I have been a Member of Congress, which covers a period of 12 or 14 years, we have had literally hundreds of Indian claims of various kinds. The gentlemen representing the Indian territories have been put to a rather hard test to get the proper perspective before the Congress. What effect will this bill have on that class of cases? Will it act as a clearing house or will it complicate the situation and make it worse?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It will act as a clearing house, because this commission will find the facts and make recommendation to the Congress. Those cases that have no merit will not have to be considered by the Congress and it will not be necessary to take up the time of the House and Senate for their consideration. Those that have merit may be acted on as the Congress sees fit.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a Commission be, and hereby is, created and established to be known as the "Indian Claims Commission", which shall be composed of a Chief Commissioner and two Associate Commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Commissioners shall continue in office during the existence of the Commission or until resignation or removal by the President only for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Vacancies in the Commission shall be filled by the President in the same manner as original appointments. No vacancy shall interrupt the functioning of the Commission, nor impair the right of the remaining Commissioners to exercise all of its powers and to perform all its duties. The Commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment during their term of office. Each of the Commissioners shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, payable in the same manner as the salaries of judges of the courts of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Commissioners", insert the following: "one of whom shall be an Indian."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee a few questions. Is this a permanent Commission?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The provisions in the bill read that the Commission shall perform its duties for a period of 10 years and shall then cease to exist, unless further authorized by the Congress. Or, if its duties are performed in less than 10 years it will cease to exist when its duties are concluded.

Mr. McCORMACK. I notice in one of the paragraphs it is stated the Commissioners are appointed without limitation as to time?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. There is a time limitation of 10 years, with the further proviso if its work is completed sooner the Commission ceases to exist.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is a time limit of 10 years, and it may cease prior thereto if its work is finished?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. A question was asked about waiver of treaties and other statutes in the consideration of these claims. I refer to the language appearing on page 4, line 6, reading as follows:

No claim shall be excluded because of the provisions of any other statute nor because it has already been presented to the Congress; nor on the ground that it has become barred under any rule of law or equity or by reason of any treaty or statute.

Does the gentleman think we ought to go that far? For example, if there is a statute of limitations, does not this permit any claim that might have arisen 50 years ago to be reopened?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Of course, most of these claims are 50 years old and even older.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. This is necessary because practically every one of these claims is based upon treaties that are very, very old, and because of the fact the Government has been negligent in permitting these Indians to have their affairs adjudicated. Many statutes of limitation have run against them, not by reason of the fault of the Indian at all, but by reason of the fault of the Government.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the Congress been negligent?

Mr. NICHOLS. In many, many instances, in passing jurisdictional acts giving the tribes the right to institute a suit against the Government, yes. There is another reason why this is necessary, and I give the gentleman a concrete example. In 1934 there was a jurisdictional act passed which gave the Choctaws the right to sue the Government. The time fixed in that act was 1930.

They had to file and perfect their pleadings by 1930. They went in and filed their case, but the proof on which the case was to be tried had to be adduced by the General Accounting Office. The General Accounting Office did not provide the proof and the facts until 4 years after the limitation fixed within the bill had expired. So that, after the facts had been obtained—and it was the Government that was negligent in not obtaining them, and without the facts the Indians could not present their claim—they were barred by the slow action of the Accounting Office in sustaining their claim. There is pending now a bill to reconfer jurisdiction; and there are many, many of those claims. That is the reason this language is absolutely necessary in the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the General Accounting Office could not get the facts covering these claims within a certain length of time, I am unable to understand how this commission could get the facts without at least as much personnel.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs another question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I direct the gentleman's attention to this language, which appears in line 10, page 4:

Or by reason of any treaty or statute.

What effect will that language have?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Suppose we consider a statute.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let us take a treaty.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I will cite him a particular instance. The Fort Laramie treaty was entered into in 1851 between the United States Government and the Crow and other Indians. Under a mistake of fact a subsequent treaty was entered into in 1868 with the Crow Indians by which 30,000,000 acres of valuable land were taken from the Crow Indians on the theory that the treaty of 1851 had never been ratified by the United States Senate. It was not discovered until I think in 1925 in the trial of a certain Indian case that the treaty had been ratified and that those Indians were wronged because the whole proceeding from 1851 on was based on a mistake of fact. This bill would give the commission the right to go back to that date. What is true in that case is perhaps true in many other cases.

Mr. McCORMACK. I take it then, the purpose of this bill——

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Is to do justice to the Indians.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is to enable equity to be extended to the Indians without regard to any intervening acts, treaties, statutes, or otherwise?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is right.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. And that should be done.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, when I was a boy I read a wonderful book called "A Century of Dishonor", by Helen Hunt Jackson. Since that time I have been a friend of the Indians. That is why I asked to be placed on the Committee of Indian Affairs when I came here in 1933. I trust also I am fair to my own Government, the Government of the United States. So I feel that not only should the Indians have justice in this matter but also the Federal Government. I happen to be the chairman of the subcommittee which considered this bill, which we reported unanimously. Why? Because we thought it was just to the Indians and also because we thought it was just to the Federal Government. Even my good friend, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], and my good friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], complained of the inequity and the injustice of the present system and its failure to get justice for the Indians, also to help the Government do its business. All this bill will do is to expedite these matters.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] came before our committee this morning. He wanted a bill passed. As has been stated, we did not know the facts, but we took his word for them. Even my good friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] accepted them as the facts, and we reported the bill without any facts being presented.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That bill was up for consideration in the preceding week at a committee hearing, and we acquired some facts at that time.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Possibly some facts. I trust they were a little better than those the gentleman stated on the floor when he charged the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY] with the authorship of this bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. HILL of Washington. That was the charge the gentleman made here, that the gentleman from Oklahoma was the author of the Senate bill we are considering.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman misunderstood me, just as he has misunderstood a number of facts today. I stated the gentleman from Oklahoma had introduced a similar bill sometime ago.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Oh, no. If the gentleman will examine the RECORD, he will see that he stated the gentleman from Oklahoma was the author of the bill we are considering; so those are the gentleman's facts.

This bill simply provides for a fact-finding commission. This commission is not a court, as has been charged, but a fact-finding commission. I wonder if there is any Member of the House who is opposed to the Federal Trade Commission as a fact-finding body, or the Federal Power Commission as a fact-finding commission.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Does the gentleman know of any other legislation ever passed by the Congress which contains the following provision:

Nor on the ground of a prior adjudication with respect thereto in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding between the same parties.

You not only create a fact-finding commission but you upset every decree, judgment, or decision that has ever been rendered by courts in this country involving Indian claims.

Mr. HILL of Washington. If such judgments are unfair to the Indians, we ought to upset them. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. We are not upsetting these decrees, judgments, and decisions; all we are doing is applying the same rule we apply in connection with contracts. We are looking at all four corners of the deal to try to arrive at an equitable understanding of the problem.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Washington. The bill provides that all these claims must be filed in the next 5 years.

It has been stated there were no facts produced to support this bill. I hold here a copy of the Senate hearings. This contains 54 pages, which must have been overlooked by some of our opponents. May I read one statement on page 8 to show where the Indians will profit by this bill:

The present method of handling those claims which have received attention—wastes the substance of the claimants and puts the Government to heavy expense that results mainly in disappointment and unjustified defeat.

That is, the old system—

I quote from the statement on page 9 of a witness before the Senate committee, as follows:

At the present rate of progress there would appear to be more than one century ahead of troublesome Indian claims.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] wants to get this subject out of the hands of Congress, believing that we could do away with the Indian Bureau and the Committees on Indian Affairs and have the Indians take their place with the white men. I am with him on this program. However, the best thing you can do is to support this bill, because this procedure will get the claims out of the way in the next few years much more quickly than under the old system.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Yes; I yield briefly to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. Does this bill in the opinion of the gentleman affect any existing judgments or suits now pending?

Mr. HILL of Washington. It affects them to the extent that the facts regarding such suits may be brought before the Court of Claims or before any courts, but such courts are not bound thereby. This bill simply brings the facts before them.

Mr. HARLAN rose.

Mr. HILL of Washington. In conclusion, may I say that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] stated he had four tribes in his district, and from that angle he appealed to you who are in districts which have no Indians to vote against this bill. I happen to be one of the chiefs of the Yakima Tribe of Indians. The first year I was here the chiefs came to Washington and inducted me as one of them. They call me Chief Klaquenut, which they said means Chief Sunrise. Perhaps it is because of this I have been getting up at sunrise and trying to get down to the office at about 7: 30 in the morning to do my work. As one of the chiefs of the Yakima Indian Tribe, I hope Members from districts which do not have Indian reservations will vote for this bill, because this bill will expedite the consideration of the claims of the Indians against the United States, it will give them justice, and it will help the Government in getting these claims settled once and for all. This is the whole purpose of the bill. This is why our subcommittee reported the bill unanimously, and why the bill was reported favorably from the full committee, as has been stated, with the exception of our friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY], who is opposed to it.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. In the discussion of a moment ago reference was made to an injustice which occurred back in 1851. Unquestionably, when we bought Manhattan Island for two barrels of whisky, there was a terrible injustice done.

Now, are we going back and investigate all of the dealings during the last century and a half and give the commission power to do nothing except report their findings to the Congress or to the Court of Claims? They would not be able to make such a report on all these claims in 100 years.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Is the gentleman a friend of the administration?

Mr. HARLAN. Sometimes.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Does the gentleman suppose the President would appoint or the Senate confirm men who would go back that far if there was no justification for it.

Mr. HARLAN. Then what is the purpose of the bill, because the gentleman from Montana referred to one matter going back prior to the Civil War.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The gentleman is in error in stating that we referred to an adjudication, we referred to a treaty which is known as the Fort Laramie treaty, entered into in 1851.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the last two words are "United States." I want to talk a little about the United States and what it has done for the Indians, and I would especially like to have the attention of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR], who would lead the House to believe, from his original statement, that all the Government has done for the Indians has been to kick them around.

The figures are not available in the records of the Department of the Interior prior to 1873, but some of the cases that are before the Court of Claims are based upon treaties that go back as far as 1790. I repeat that the records are not available as to the amount of money the Government has appropriated through the Congress out of the Treasury of the United States, and not out of tribal funds prior to 1873, to assist the Indians, but from 1873 they are available.

From 1873 to 1899 the Congress appropriated $78,752,-349.99.

From 1900 to 1931, the Congress appropriated $381,925,-865.93.

From 1932 to 1937, up to June 30 of this year, the Congress appropriated $142,987,581.21.

This makes a total, which the Congress of the United States has appropriated for the upkeep of the Indians of this country, irrespective of tribal funds, and out of moneys that the taxpayers put into the Treasury, $603,665,797.13.

These are official figures from the records of the Department of the Interior, secured a few moments ago.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. Does not the gentleman know that the figures he has given would not amount to the value of the land that was taken by the United States Government away from the Crow and the Shoshone Indians alone?

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me say to the gentleman in reply that it depends entirely upon what year you consider the value of the lands. We paid $15,000,000 or 4 cents an acre for the Louisiana Territory. We bought the lands west of the Mississippi River when we paid the $15,000,000. Should we now say we robbed the French and give them the value of the land as of today?

Mr. GREEVER. We at least bought them—we did not take them away from anybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. And let me say to the gentleman there is only one, and that is the One above who knows whether or not the Indians ever took the land they claim away from somebody else. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to see if we can get some agreement about concluding the debate on this section.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there is another committee amendment to which I am going to offer an amendment.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we have gone far afield in the consideration of this bill. This commission is supposed to be set up for the purpose of wiping out the maze and the haze of claims now pending before the Court of Claims. It seems to me that many of the gentlemen in opposition to this bill, if they believe it is not safe to do this, must have concluded that the President is going to appoint, and the Senate is going to confirm, a corrupt commission, because if the commission is not corrupt, then, occupying the position it does, it should protect the Government against claimants who are unscrupulous and should protect the Government against claims which are unconscionable, and for gentlemen to state, as has been said here, that a fact-finding body, which everyone admits this is to be, could overrule the judgment of a court of record, is silly, preposterous, and absurd.

Mr. THOM. That is what it says.

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not care, I say to the gentleman. This Congress has passed many laws thinking that they were constitutional and in the end found that they did not amount to the paper they were written on. If that is the intent of the bill, I say it is absurd to think that you could, within the terms of the Constitution, give a fact-finding body authority to overrule the judgment of a court of law.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I have high respect for the gentleman's ability as a lawyer, and I would like to support this bill. If this clause means nothing, will the gentleman agree to strike it out?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; but I will explain it to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. The gentleman has a big job on his hands if he can do that.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may not explain it to the gentleman's satisfaction, but I would say this: I am not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I do think I know what that provision means, and I know the reason it is in there. I have not heard Members willing to discuss it. I will tell you why it is in there. That was explained in part by the gentleman from Montana, but that does not fit that portion of it which applies to the courts.

I will tell you why that had to be in there. In the Seminole case, to which I have referred several times, the evidence which would permit them to file a petition was not adduced until 4 years after the time expired for the filing of amended petitions. When the information was available then the Seminoles went in and amended their petition; they were not able to amend them before that time because the facts were not there. They filed their amended petitions in the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims gave them judgment on the amended petition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I would like to have the gentleman's time extended 5 minutes, because I want to ask him a question.

Mr. BOILEAU. I hope the same amount of time will be extended, and that the time allowed here will be 15 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of debate has been fixed. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the time of the gentleman from Oklahoma be extended for 5 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. When the case was appealed to the Supreme Court, that Court ruled, and I think they were correct in their ruling, that these amended petitions were filed too late. It was 4 years after the time fixed for the filing of amended petitions. So the Supreme Court promptly kicked out the Seminole case, not on its merits, if you please, but upon a technicality of time.

All this would do, and the purpose of the language the gentleman has asked me about—and there are many of those cases which were filed under the Jurisdictional Act of 1924, all in the same category with the Seminole case—would be to permit these claims to have their day in court. Unless this language or some similar language is contained in this bill, or unless jurisdiction is again conferred upon those tribes by a specific act of this Congress, then they have not had an opportunity to have their cases heard upon their merits, because the Government was in possession of facts, and nobody else had the facts, and the Government delayed 4 years beyond the time when they could amend their petitions before the facts were adduced.

Mr. HARLAN. If this is purely a fact-finding commission, why cannot the master commissioners of the Court of Claims go into the question of these facts and find them?

Mr. NICHOLS. I think this bill could have been written so as to confer on them that additional jurisdiction. Maybe they do not need it. The bill then might have been amended to add enough personnel to their force to do that, but if the gentleman is familiar with the Court of Claims, he must know that there are claims, not Indian claims, but claims of all kinds, far in excess of Indian claims, that have got that court hopelessly covered up with work.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield and permit me to make a short statement in respect to the Stockbridge Tribe of Indians?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. They had a jurisdictional bill for all their claims, but in that bill there was a provision that the attorney should not receive more than 10 percent. The bill also fixed a limit. So the attorneys put all the claims in the complaint, all the claims the Stockbridge Indians had, and when it came to the matter of proof they submitted proof only for the easiest claims to prove so that they would get enough in so that the 10 percent would give them their maximum amount of fees, with the result that the matter was considered res judicata, but the merits were not presented on all of the claims, but only a small part was considered by the court, because they were looking after their own fees and the Stockbridge Indians were deprived of their right to have all their claims adjudicated.

Mr. NICHOLS. I want to say to the members of the committee in all seriousness that this commission will take great work off of this Congress, and it should do it, because unless you are going to say that a corrupt commission is to be appointed, then the function of that commission will be to weed out and stop taking the time of this Congress in the consideration of claims that have no merit. Let them do the weeding. That is the purpose of the commission. Let them send to us for our consideration only those things which have merit and which should be considered.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. If the description given by the gentleman of the Seminole case be the exact fact, and that given by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] be the exact fact, would it not have been better to have brought in separate bills to confer jurisdiction, rather than to throw down the bars, open the floodgates, and let everybody come in?

Mr. NICHOLS. I will say to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] that I have jurisdictional bills here. The gentleman need not worry. I am representing my Indians. I have jurisdictional bills here to take care of them, but all Indians ought to be afforded the same opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

All time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 11, after the word "office", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That any commissioner having reached the age of 70 years shall be automatically retired without pay."

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would not ask the members of the Committee to indulge me another minute this afternoon were it not for the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] addressed some remarks particularly to me. Those remarks were addressed to me in the most kindly terms as the gentleman has addressed remarks to me before in this session relating to Indian matters in the same manner. The gentleman speaks about my activities with reference to Indians. Yes; I have been active in their behalf, as in the State of Montana, in the district I represent, there are about 13,000 Indians, their wives and children. I know of my own personal knowledge that those Indians have been wronged. I am bringing bills into this House to endeavor to right those wrongs, and as long as I am a Member of Congress I am going to continue to fight the battle for the red men the same as I would if their color were white.

In view of the 1-minute talk and extension of remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 18 at page 5979, I feel that additional information should be furnished to Members of the House.

Large figures were used by the distinguished gentleman. Whatever his purpose, he did not, however, advise the Members of the House that Mr. Blair, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Public Lands Division, which includes Indian affairs, at a hearing before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives, Seventy-fourth Congress, which was referred to by him in his remarks, stated:

Since the 1st day of January 1934 in the Court of Claims the Government has defeated claims amounting to $369,000,000. There has not been a single judgment against the Government in the Court of Claims on these bills which has cost the Government any money since the 1st day of January 1934. I mention that date because that is the time I took charge of the division. The record before that is correspondingly good.

A great many of these claims are fictitious; that is, they are imaginary; but the Indian tribes and the Indian societies throughout the country feel that they are entitled to their day in court, and unless they do have their day in court there is corresponding dissatisfaction and belief that the Government has wronged the Indians in many instances when it has not at all. (P. 3 of hearings.)

It is very apparent that the Court of Claims may be trusted in such matters.

The distinguished gentleman was slightly in error in saying that the gratuity amendment to the deficiency appropriation act of 2 years ago, and which amendment he helped to enact, was responsible for saving the Government the sum of $1,956,233.56 in gratuities in the Shoshone of Wyoming Indian case. Had the distinguished gentleman consulted the Shoshone Jurisdictional Act of 1927 he would have found that it provides as follows:

SEC. 3. * * * the court shall also hear, examine, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said tribe, but any payment, including gratuities which the United States may have made to said tribe, shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suit (44 Stat., pt. 2, p. 1349).

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. I would like to ask the gentleman's opinion on that very case. At the present time there is a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in behalf of the Shoshone Indian Tribe, and, as I understand it, under this bill, this new commission could now come in and take jurisdiction of that case away from the Court of Claims?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is not true. This commission takes jurisdiction away from no court. It is simply a fact-finding body to help the court and to help this Congress determine when a case is meritorious and when it is not. That is the only purpose of this bill.

The gentleman is likewise in error when he makes the statement referring to myself as having made several arguments in the House since I became a Member last January in regard to one bill which I introduced and reported. That bill provides that "there shall be reimbursed through the United States Treasury and placed to the credit of certain tribes $3,373,580." If the gentleman will recall the facts, I made one talk when this bill was called on the Consent Calendar of about 5 minutes' duration, in an attempt to have the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] withdraw his objections to it. Those are the only remarks that I made concerning this bill on the floor of the House.

The distinguished gentleman is also slightly in error again when he states that the Shoshone claim arose under the treaty of 1863, instead of 1868, which is the correct date.

Concerning the Crow claims my distinguished colleague cites the report of the Comptroller General showing that under all treaties and all acts of Congress from 1851 to 1927 disbursements of $11,638,395 were made, which sum consisted of treaty obligation stipulations and money taken out of Crow tribal funds, all of which legally belonged to the Crows, and also included the sum of $3,807,978.44, which was charged by the Government as set-offs and gratuities under the Jurisdictional Act of 1927. He then quotes the following from the decision of the Court of Claims:

The amount of the set-offs shown in the findings so far exceed all other claims, that even if these claims were allowed, no recovery could be had.

This statement applied to a number of claims advanced by the Crows, minor in character to the principal claim, namely, that the Government had obtained from the Crows over 30,000,000 acres of their valuable lands for an inadequate consideration under a mistake of fact that the Treaty of Fort Laramie of September 17, 1851, granting the Crows a defined reservation, was not a law, and that the Crows did not have a treaty or contract title to their lands, but merely right of use and occupation.

The Government in its brief in the Crow case, H–248, Record, 1052, states:

That in the event of any recovery herein the defendant is entitled to have offset against the amount of any judgment-money credits in the total sum of $3,807,978.44.

My colleague from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] quotes the following extracts from the decision of the Court of Claims:

The first claim is that for additional consideration for 30,530,764.8 acres of land taken over by the Government under the treaty of 1868, representing the amount by which plaintiff's reservation under the Fort Laramie treaty of September 17, 1851 (11 Stat. 749), was diminished by the treaty of 1868, which reduced the reservation to 8,000,409.2 acres. The plaintiff claims a failure of consideration through a mistake of fact, as to the ratification of the treaty of 1851, causing the Crow Indians to cede this large territory for an inadequate price. The claim is made for the difference amounting to some $30,000,000.

* * * * * * *

However, under the Jurisdictional Act this court is confined to claims arising under and growing out of the 1851 treaty and the treaty of 1868; both of these treaties set out the consideration to be paid by the Government. Under the Constitution all treaties made under the authority of the United States are the supreme law of the land, and the question of the amount of the consideration and what entered into the negotiations are not for this court to determine. Both are political and not judicial matters.

* * * * * * *

Under the provisions of the treaty of 1868 the United States agreed to expend sums of money for the benefit of the Crows for various periods and for various and special purposes, the indefinite amounts to be determined by the United States from time to time as contingencies and necessities should arise. In compliance with the obligations thus assumed, Congress disbursed for the benefit of the Crows $1,499,866.16. This amount was the consideration which went to the Crow Nation for the cession of the 30,000,000 acres delimited from the 1851 reservation. Both from a factual and jurisdictional standpoint, there can be no recovery on this claim.

In the first place it will be noted that for the cession of over 30,000,000 acres of land the Crows were paid the sum of $1,499,866, in provisions, goods, and so forth, which is about 5 cents an acre.

In the second place, it will be noted that the court held it had no jurisdiction under the Jurisdictional Act as worded to amend the consideration, if found inadequate, mentioned in the treaty of 1868.

In the third place, all Members of this House who are lawyers know that when a court finds it has no jurisdiction, all that it thereafter says in the decision is obiter dicta, and binds no one. In the recent Shoshone Indian case the Court of Claims expressly overruled obiter dicta indulged in in a previous decision as being irrelevant and immaterial to the decision rendered (Ct. Cl., Shoshone decision, June 1, 1937).

Now, it stands to reason that after the court found it had no jurisdiction to do justice to the Crows under the original Jurisdictional Act, as Congress had intended to confer—otherwise Congress would not have referred the case to the court for adjudication—it gave but cursory consideration to the facts and law covering the several claims of the Indians; in other words, it was a useless proceeding on the part of the court to go into any of the facts when it knew it had no jurisdiction to decide the case.

That there was a mistake of fact as to the validity of the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1851 which granted the Crows a defined reservation which could not be taken from them without their consent and without adequate compensation, is fully supported by the record in the case when carefully considered and is further supported by the decision of the Court of Claims in the case of the Fort Berthold Indians, who also were granted a defined reservation by the Fort Laramie treaty of 1851 and whose lands were taken by the Government under the erroneous conviction, as found by the court, that the Fort Laramie Treaty was not a law. To prove that there was a mistake of fact and that the Crows were told they held no title to their reservation under the Fort Laramie Treaty, the following is submitted:

In 1930 the Court of Claims in the case of the Fort Berthold Indians, composed of the Arickarees, Mandans, and Gros Ventres, parties to the Laramie Treaty of 1851, held said treaty valid and in force and effect.

From 1854 up to the time of the Court of Claims decision all Government officials, treaty commissioners, and superintendents of Indian affairs were laboring under the impression that the Fort Laramie Treaty of September 17, 1851, was not law and were guided accordingly. The early annual reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in tabulations of Indian moneys and appropriations, recited that the Laramie Treaty was unratified; and in a report of Congress the Secretary of the Interior advised the treaty not ratified (S. Ex. Doc. 4, 40th Cong., special sess., p. 35, Mar. 1867). Under this false assumption the President, by Executive order in 1870, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, deprived the Fort Berthold Indians of North Dakota of several million acres of their treaty lands without compensation and without their consent, a large part of which went to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. to satisfy land grants, and parts were opened to settlement. For this deprivation of lands belonging to the said Indians the Court of Claims awarded a judgment. In its decision describing what was done with the Indians' ratifications of the Senate amendment to the Laramie Treaty of 1851, the court said (71 Ct. Cl. 336–337):

> The Treaty of Fort Laramie of 1851 was ratified by the Senate on May 24, 1852, after amending article 7 of the same. The amended treaty was returned to the tribes for their assent to the modification of the same. All tribes assented thereto, and due to an administrative error and oversight the treaty was never proclaimed, hence the Indian Office and other delegated officials concerned in negotiations with the Indians proceeded upon the erroneous conviction that the Fort Laramie Treaty was never ratified. * * * There can be no doubt that the failure of Government officials and others dealing with the Indians at this time to recognize the treaty of 1851 was due exclusively to a belief that the treaty of 1851 was never ratified by the Senate. The plaintiff Indians were at the time an ignorant and unlettered people, forced by their status and situation to rely implicity upon the representatives of the Government, and while they laid claim to a much larger territory than the 1870 reservation, they were in no position to controvert an alleged existing condition, which was represented to them by those in authority as leaving them without any landed reservation whatever. As we look at it, it was the Government's error and unintended misrepresentation which resulted in procuring a settlement with the Indians in 1870 which did not equitably compensate them for rights granted them under the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1851.

Keeping in mind what the Court of Claims found as above quoted, namely: "The Indian Office and other delegated officials (meaning treaty commissioners) concerned in negotiations with the Indians proceeded under the erroneous conviction that the Fort Laramie Treaty was never ratified", and "There can be no doubt that the failure of the Government officials and others dealing with the Indians at this time to recognize the treaty of 1851" as law, and that the "Indians were at the time an ignorant and unlettered people, forced by their status and situation to rely implicitly upon the representatives of the Government", and that "they were in no position to controvert an alleged existing condition, which was represented to them by those in authority as leaving them without any landed reservation whatever", we come to a similar situation relating to the Crow Indians of Montana, who, as the records show, were always the friends and allies of the Government.

The President in 1866 appointed what is known as the Northwest Indian Commission, composed of General Curtis, Governor Edmunds, Orrin Guernsey, and Henry W. Reed, to treat with the Crows and other tribes of Indians. This Commission proceeded up the Missouri River to Fort Union, convened the Crows in council, and on July 15, 1866, General Curtis told the "chiefs and headmen of the Mountain and Prairie (River) Crow Indians":

> We now want to make a treaty with the Crows. We know that you have always been our friends. Your old treaty has expired, and we are here to make a new one. The Great Father does not want to injure but to help you. He wants a road up to Yellowstone Valley, and one up this river; with stages and traders along the lines, and a great depot for goods at this place. He wants the right-of-way along the Missouri and Yellowstone, and the ground for stations. This is the kind of treaty we want to make and in consideration thereof you will have an agent at the mouth of Milk River and he can deliver your goods anywhere on this river. We will give you a much larger annuity than you ever had before. With the old treaty you got about $3,000, but under this treaty you will have 10 times as much.

That same afternoon Governor Edmunds told the Crows:

> We told you this morning that the Laramie Treaty had expired.

In its report to Secretary Harlan, dated August 25, 1866 (Annual Report, 1866, p. 168), the Northwest Treaty Commission said:

> In accordance with our appointment by the President of the United States and the instructions of your Department given orally and otherwise, at sundry times, the undersigned have during the past two seasons, visited the various tribes of Indians of the Northwest for the purpose of making treaties with such as have never made treaties, and renewing treaty arrangements with those who had been parties to the Treaty of Laramie, which has terminated by its limitation of 15 years.

On April 5, 1866, Secretary Harlan wrote Indian Commissioner Cooley:

> I have to state that the expiration of that (Laramie) treaty on account of the amendment adopted by the Senate should be explained to the Indians, and urged as a reason, in connection with other reasons, for entering into another treaty.

He wrote that Indians should not expect payments for the "fulfillment of treaty stipulations which do not exist according to the terms of the amended treaty."

The Crows signed the treaty as drafted by the Commission on July 16, 1866, by mark, but it was not ratified.

Here were direct statements to the Crows by the official representative of the Government that the Fort Laramie Treaty, which granted the Crows a defined reservation, had "expired", and by the official report of the Commission to the Secretary of the Interior had "terminated by its limitation of 15 years", and by Secretary Harlan that it does not "exist."

In 1867, under an act of Congress, the so-called Indian Peace Commission was created, composed of Indian Commissioner Taylor, Army officers, and well-known civilians. This Commission proceeded westward in the fall of 1867, and assembled the Mountain Crows—at that time there were two bands of the Crow Nation, the Mountain and the River—in council at Laramie on November 12 and 13, 1867.

Keeping in mind that all Government officials, including the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, were under the erroneous conviction that the Treaty of Fort Laramie of 1851 had not been ratified and was not a law, and that the Crows had been told by the Northwest Indian Commission in 1866 that the Fort Laramie Treaty had expired, terminated, and a new treaty was necessary. Indian Commissioner Taylor told the Crows on November 12, 1867:

> We learn that valuable mines have been discovered in your country, which in some instances are taken possession of by the white people. We learn that roads are laid out and traveled through your land; that settlements have been made upon your lands; that your game is being driven away and is fast disappearing. We know also that the white people are rapidly increasing and are taking possession of and occupying all the valuable lands.
> Under these circumstances we are sent by the Great Father and the Great Council at Washington to arrange some plan to relieve you as far as possible from the bad consequences of this state of things and to protect you from future difficulties. We desire to set apart a tract of your country as a home for yourselves and children forever, upon which your Great Father will not permit the white man to trespass. * * * We will always feel grateful for your friendship to us. We will show our friendship by our acts.

It may be stated here that the Crows had occupied the area embracing Montana and parts of Wyoming from time immemorial; that they held their country against all comers, and naturally they considered it their land and their home; they thought their occupancy and possession of their lands had been confirmed by the United States by the Laramie Treaty of 1851; but they were told by the Northwest Indian Commission that such treaty had expired, had terminated, which the Court of Claims has held in the Fort Berthold case was erroneous.

Bear's Tooth, replying to Commissioner Taylor, among other things, said:

A long time ago (in 1851) you made a treaty with my nation, the Crows. * * * The Sioux told us you were going to fool us and not give us back our country, and that you would play us the same trick you did them.

Blackfoot said:

A long time ago a treaty was made with us. Our agent told us the Great Father wanted to see us. We had an enemy's country to go through but we went. We sold them the California road. They were to give us goods for 50 years. * * * We are being surrounded by the whites and by other nations. Our country is getting smaller and smaller. The whites have made two branches of a road beside the California and have cut up the best game country we have. * * * You would be mad if we were to go into your country and kill all your stock. I cannot go anywhere without coming on some of your people. I would like to have them called in and the road stopped (meaning the Powder River Road). Your people do not make anything by that road that I can see. Your people going through the country looking for gold are the ones who cause us much trouble. I ask you to stop them. * * * Give us a good agent. Give us a copy of the treaty that you will make with us.

Wolf Bow:

None of us ever fought against you. We have never been your enemies. * * * Call off your young men from the Powder River Road and let that road be abandoned. * * * Put the Sioux Indians in their own country and keep them from troubling us.

Commissioner Taylor, the next day, said:

On account of your refusing to join the Sioux against us, when urgently requested to do so, you are dearer to us than ever. We hope when you return to your country that you will inform the Sioux of our promises, and that they will be induced to make peace. * * * Formerly you could find all the game you needed, but now the buffalo have entirely disappeared from a large portion of your country. The game will soon entirely disappear. Our people were formerly confined to the eastern country, but they are rapidly spreading all over the West. Your Great Father looks ahead and wishes to preserve, for your own use, some of the good lands as a reservation for you and your children forever. * * * We are sorry all who are interested in that (Powder River) road are not here. If they were we might settle the question at once, but as only a few are here we can only tell you what to say to the Sioux when you return. We will consider your wishes in that respect. We will meet you next spring (note.—This was in the autumn of 1867) and settle the matter. * * * If you will stop the war and keep the peace in good faith until we hold our peace council next year, we may do as you wish us to do about the road and the posts. We hold that road to protect our people against bad Indians. If war continues, the post and roads will be held. If we do not abandon the road in the spring we will pay you for it.

Blackfoot, replying said:

We are not very numerous, but are very strong and powerful. There is plenty of buffalo, deer, elk in my country, beaver in all the streams and plenty of fish. * * * Your people like to get my country for nothing. That is not right. I want to be paid for it. I believe all you tell me. * * * You have not kept the promises made to us in the last treaty. We have only received goods once, when we ought to have received them every year.

Commissioner Taylor:

The goods were sent by the Great Father, but were stolen by his agents. We will report the matter to him and have you righted.

General Sanborn said they had drawn up a treaty and asked if the Crows would sign then or next spring, to which Blackfoot replied that they would sign in the spring when the Commissioners came to Kearney and could see all the Indians together.

The Peace Commission again met the Mountain Crows in council at Fort Laramie, May 6 and 7, 1868, and after further but unimportant discussion the treaty drafted by the Commission was presented and signed by mark on May 7, 1868 (15 Stat. 649).

The cession made by the Crows by this treaty was over 30,530,000 acres of valuable mineral and agricultural land and the consideration named in the treaty in the form of annuities and goods amounted to $1,499,866, or about 5 cents an acre.

The treaty of May 7, 1868, was made on the part of the Government under the erroneous conviction that the Fort Laramie Treaty was not law and that the Crows had merely an occupancy right to the land, whereas in fact and in law they held a treaty title, which it is conceded is of far greater value than a mere right of occupancy. Under the circumstances it is plain that on account of the mistake of fact as to whether or not the Crows had a treaty title, the Government paid the Crows a wholly inadequate consideration. As stated, most of the consideration was paid in goods, and the following statement made by Chief Blackfoot before the Brunot Commission of 1873 shows the character of goods furnished the Crows:

The treaty (of 1868) you say, has bought all our land except on the side of the river. And what do we get for it? We get a pair of stockings, and when we put them on they go to pieces. They get some old shirts and have them washed, and give them to us; we put them on and our elbows go right through them. They send us tin kettles; we go to get water to carry to our lodges; we dip the water up, but it all runs out again. That is what we get for our lands! What goods are given us are no better than we give the whites, and I do not see what we are getting for our lands. (Report of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1873, p. 136.)

On the question of inadequacy of consideration paid the Crows, the following, taken from the report of the Commission which made the treaty of May 7, 1868, which report is addressed to the Secretary of the Interior in submitting said treaty, proves the great value of the land ceded:

We have made our stipulations with them [Crows] as with a perfectly barbarous people. * * *

It will be seen from the above that in fixing the terms of these treaties the Commission has been governed less by the consideration of the value of possessions ceded by the Indians than by what they considered essential conditions to the maintenance of peace with and the civilization of the Indians. The whole expense of this 30 years' effort to civilize is no more expense than 30 weeks' expense of actual war with them.

But if the value of the possessions ceded is to be considered, then, for stronger reasons, the Government should not hesitate to have the treaties ratified and executed. Mineral lands of exhaustless wealth and inconceivable value extending over thousands of square miles, navigable streams, rivers of hundreds of miles in extent, on the banks of some of which (the Muscle Shell) our capitalists have already invested more than a million dollars in mines of copper that promise to exceed in richness any that have ever before been discovered; large agricultural tracts, the finest of the eastern slopes of the mountains, are a portion of what these tribes have ceded by this treaty.

Former Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs Mr. Meritt, before the Joint Congressional Committee on Northern Pacific Land Grants, testified under date of April 16, 1925 (hearings before Joint Congressional Committee on Investigation of Northern Pacific Land Grants, pt. 4, p. 1927):

Mr. RAKER. What does the record show that the Crow Indians received, if anything, for making the treaty of May 7, 1868, and reducing the amount of land specified in the Laramie Treaty of 1851?

Mr. MERITT. In reading the treaty, gentlemen of the committee, I was impressed with how little they got for the large amount of territory they gave up under that treaty of 1868. * * * The Crows gave up approximately 30,000,000 acres of land under that treaty of 1868, and it is claimed that some of that land was very valuable for mineral and other purposes; and they got very little in return for it.

Mr. RAKER. Well, it has not been only in this case but in others; it has been demonstrated to me that the Indians, even following and after these treaties, have not been dealt with fairly.

In a report of the Secretary of the Interior to the Senate Indian Committee dated April 20, 1936, he stated:

The amount received by the Indians (Crows) for the vast area of 30,530,764 acres appears to have been inadequate.

The claims presented by the Crows come squarely within the above-quoted holding of the Court of Claims in the Fort Berthold case. The conditions as to knowledge of Government officials prevailing in May 1868, when the Crow treaty was made, were identically the same that prevailed 2 years later when a transaction was consummated regarding the lands of the Fort Berthold Indians. Both tribes had been treated with as though the Fort Laramie Treaty was nonexistent. Under the "erroneous conviction" and "belief" of Government officials, as stated by the court, that the Laramie Treaty was not a law and consequently neither the Fort Berthold Indians nor the Crow Indians had a treaty title to the lands they occupied, the Government in the Fort Berthold case took away their lands without compensation and in the Crow case obtained their lands for an inadequate consideration.

There was a mutual mistake of fact on the part of the United States when it made the Crow treaty of May 7, 1868, and informed the Crows that the 1851 Laramie Treaty had "expired", had "terminated", and the Crows accepted the statement from the official representatives of the Government as correct. Coming as it did from superior beings, who possessed the treaty and knew, or should have known, all about what happened to it, it cannot be argued that the Crows knew the true facts in 1868. In view of what the Government commission told the Crows the United States cannot contend that the Crows should have known to the contrary. As stated by the Court of Claims in the Fort Berthold case, "they were in no position to controvert an alleged existing condition which was represented to them by those in authority as leaving them without any landed reservation whatever." In other words, it was a mistake of fact as to title which induced payment of a wholly inadequate consideration for a valid treaty title to a defined area. Payment was not made or provided for in the 1868 treaty on the basis of a valid treaty title. This point is basic in the Crow case.

Now, all that Senate Joint Resolution 55 provides is to confer upon the Court of Claims adequate and effective jurisdiction to enable it to do equity and justice to the Crow Indians. It was supposed when the original Jurisdictional Act was passed and approved by the President that Congress had provided such adequate and effective jurisdiction, but by reason of the decision of the Court of Claims and the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Klamath Indian case it becomes absolutely necessary, in order that the courts can do justice to the Indians, that the broadened jurisdiction provided in Senate Joint Resolution 55 be enacted. The Klamath Indians being similarly situated as the Crows, as found by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court, Congress came to the relief of the Klamath Indians, and on May 15, 1936, passed an act conferring the necessary jurisdiction. The Crows now ask that similar treatment be accorded them.

As Congress originally intended, as shown by the RECORD and the reports of Congress, to confer upon the courts adequate and effective jurisdiction, so that justice could be done the Crow Indians, therefore Congress, in passing the pending joint resolution, would be only carrying out what it had originally intended to do for these friendly Indians.

The original Jurisdictional Act, which Senate Joint Resolution 55 amends, provides that all proper set-offs and gratuities should be allowed the United States from any judgment rendered.

I appeal to all my colleagues to read the remarks I made in this House on June 15, and appearing in the RECORD of that date, begnning on page 5757, which go more into detail as to the merit and justice of the claim of the Crow Indians.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 2, after the word "retired", strike out "without pay."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the committee amendment provides that "any commissioner having reached the age of 70 years shall be automatically retired without pay." My amendment proposes simply to strike out the words "without pay." The amendment is really offered for the purpose at least of placing a question on the record about this very novel legislative provision—at least it is novel so far as I am concerned. I do not recall having ever heard of any such provision in an act of Congress, and I can see no need of such provision.

It strikes me that we have a very tender regard for only one class of public servants, the judiciary. Under acts of Congress any Federal judge having 10 years' service may retire at the age of 70 years on full pay. In my State, Colorado, a judge of the State supreme court who has served 10 years may, without regard to age, retire on a pension of $3,500. In the pending bill we are proposing to create a commission on which a man might serve creditably for 30 years or more and then when he arrived at the age of 70 he can go and jump out of the window. If the language is stricken out, if my amendment is adopted, he would retire without pay. The words "without pay" are not needed to bring about automatic retirement without pay. I assume that the inclusion in the amendment of the words "without pay" must be for some purpose which is not disclosed on the face of the amendment.

It is possible that in the course of time, considering the rapid development of social-security legislation in this country, if this commission should still be in existence there may be some provision of law under which these commissioners, at the age of 70, could retire on some sort of pension and that this very novel language appearing in an act of Congress for the first time in the history of our Government might stand in their way. I can see nothing to be accomplished by these words, and for this reason I have offered this amendment.

Indeed, the entire amendment could go out without any impairment to the service. Under the language of the bill the President is given power to remove commissioners for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. This would enable the President to remove an incumbent for either mental or physical failure. If the incumbent does not suffer such failure, I can see nothing in the nature of his duties which would call for his mandatory retirement at the age of 70 years. At a salary of $7,500 per year he would have nothing left to retire on in Washington. I think therefore the entire amendment should be rejected.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, not so much because I am opposed to the amendment as because I am anxious to read a short excerpt from a letter written by Judge Fenton W. Booth, of the United States Court of Claims, dated March 31, 1936, and see whether or not we can explode some of these statements of costs that have been floating around here. Everybody wants economy, but let us not pin it on one particular item or one particular class. Let us see what Judge Booth said. This letter was addressed to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK]:

In answer to your inquiry of March 20, 1936, I have obtained the following information with respect to Indian cases in this court, and it is as accurate as it can possibly be made:

You first ask this question: "Since the court was created, how many Indian cases have come before it?" Since 1855, 192 Indian cases have been referred to the court. In this connection it is proper to observe that for some years during the court's early history there were not referred to it any Indian cases.

The next inquiry is: "What was the total amount claimed in all cases?" The total amount claimed in all cases is $1,650,624,942.27.

The next question is: "How many cases have been decided favorably to the Indians?" The answer is 27.

You then ask: "What amount has been allowed to date and how does this compare to the amount sued for?" The total amount of judgments, not including interest, awarded by this court is $20,595,666.67. It is impossible to calculate the percentage of the amount recovered as compared with the amount claimed for the reason that in many of the cases filed the amount claimed is not stated. This is true even in those cases where favorable judgments have been awarded.

We have a report from the Indian Division of the Department of Justice which discloses the number of Indian cases filed, the amount claimed, and the amount allowed since 1918; and, as near as we can compute, the comparison with the amount sued for and allowed shows that the amount recovered was 0.366 percent of the total amount claimed.

What becomes of all this chatter about blowing in money on the Indians, on the wards of the Government? I read further:

If we take the entire Indian litigation from the beginning, as near as we can figure the comparison, the total amount recovered would be 2.34 percent of the amount claimed.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Then the amount sued for must have been more than the entire wealth of the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, no; the amount sued for was $1,650,000,000. The total wealth of the United States is about $375,000,000,000.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In the history of this Government, how much has the Government expended on the Indians and how much have they collected?

Mr. DISNEY. I do not know.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the Members of the House read the hearings before the Senate before they vote on this bill. There they will find the answer to all the arguments of the opponents.

Mr. DISNEY. I think these Senate hearings contain answers to all the arguments of the opponents.

I am advised by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] that $603,000,000 is the amount the Government has spent on the Indians.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Including claims?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes; according to the figures of the gentleman's side of the table. I did not know that it was going to be necessary for the proponents to look up those figures; I thought that burden would be on the opponents.

Mr. O'MALLEY. There was $306,000,000 appropriated for the care of the Indians.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman said that was all the money. I do not know what construction the gentleman is going to put on it, if he does not like it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to speak on this bill, although I have some knowledge of Indian affairs. I have between forty and fifty thousand Indians in my State that I represent, and I try to represent them as I do the non-Indians. [Applause.]

This bill, in my opinion, will do nothing except cause confusion and give assistance to some very shrewd and very ambitious attorneys. [Applause.] We have in the State of New Mexico repeatedly paid claims to Indians involving water rights which they thought had been taken from them. They now claim all the waters of the Rio Grande because of prior use, and the Supreme Court has ruled that prior use establishes a preferential right. If this bill is enacted into law, in 30 days I will probably receive from the forty or fifty thousand Indians in the State of New Mexico at least 10,000 claims, and that is what this commission will be confronted with.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Indians of this country are getting fair treatment. This bill is nothing more than a bill to create certain positions for certain people and to build up a fine practice for certain attorneys. I am opposed to this, and I sincerely trust the measure will be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado to the committee amendment.

The amendent to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado to the committee amendment: Page 1, line 11, and page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may advise the gentleman that he has not offered a proper amendment to the committee amendment. The gentleman may attain the same end by voting down the committee amendment.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 10, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Commission to investigate all claims against the United States of any Indian tribe, band, or other communal group of American Indians residing within the territorial limits of the United States or Alaska, to ascertain and determine all of the facts relating thereto and all questions of mixed law and fact as may be incidental to such determination, and, on the basis of the facts found by it, to ascertain and determine the merits of all such claims and to make findings with reference thereto. Such claims shall include all claims arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States and all those whether sounding in contract or tort or otherwise with respect to which the claimant would have been entitled to redress in any court of the United States if the United States were subject to suit; and all claims of whatsoever nature on account of any breach of duty committed by any officer or agent while purporting to act in the name or on behalf of the United States; and all further claims under all treaties heretofore negotiated between the claimant and the United States but not formally ratified or executed by all of the parties thereto; and those claims of whatsoever nature which would arise on a basis of fair and honorable dealings unaffected by rules of law, and those which would result if the treaties, contracts, and agreements between the claimant and the United States were revised on the ground of fraud, duress, or mutual or unilateral mistake whether of law or fact. Any such claim now pending in the Court of Claims, and any such claim previously referred by Congress to the Court of Claims and not yet filed in such court may be transferred, together with all the documents and certified copies of all the records relating thereto, by the complainants to the Commission at any time within the period provided for presentation of claims to the Commission; and in connection with claims so transferred all further proceedings with respect thereto shall be had under the provisions of this act regardless of the provisions of any other law or of any act giving jurisdiction of such claims to the Court of Claims: Provided, That in cases now pending in the Court of Claims the transfer thereof to the Commission shall be made upon motion of the attorney of record for claimant in each case with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and such attorney or attorneys shall proceed under his or their approved existing contract according to its terms. No claim shall be excluded because of the provisions of any other statute; nor because it has already been presented to the Congress; nor on the ground that it has become barred under any rule of law or equity, or by reason of any treaty or statute; nor on the ground of a prior adjudication with respect thereto in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding between the same parties: Provided, however, That the Commission, when ascertaining the merits of any claim, shall take into consideration, and may inquire into, all previous adjudications or settlements of such claim and all payments made by the United States on its account. In any case wherein the Commission determines that a claim has merit under the provisions of this act, the General Accounting Office and the Indian Office upon request of the Commission shall furnish such information as in the judgment of the Commission is required for the determination of set-offs.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 2, after the word "attorney", insert the words "or attorneys."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'MALLEY: Page 4, line 8, after the word "Congress", strike out the rest of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and the word "parties" in line 13.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a correction. The word should be "statute."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I had originally wanted to strike out only that part of section 2 which says, "nor on the ground of a prior adjudication with respect thereto in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding between the same parties."

I had hoped to cut off consideration of some of these old cases and keep them away from this commission. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects to even that little bit of improvement in this ill-advised bill, therefore I am forced because of the wording I inadvertently used, to offer the amendment so that it strikes out everything after the word "Congress" down to and including the word "parties." That strikes out also any claims or treaties. That is all right with me. Even though this may be Oklahoma day, it is all right with me to have that additional language stricken out to improve the bill a little.

If we are going to open this commission, as the language clearly indicates, to all these old claims, we might as well follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio who spoke a few words a moment ago. Some attorney will dig up an Indian who had a great grandfather who lived on Manhattan Island and have him file a claim. That is what is going to happen. The attorneys will not only dig them up, but the bill compels the Bureau of Indian Affairs to send out advertisements for Indians and their lawyers to get aboard the gravy train. We are spending enough money without advertising to any particular class in this country to come in and make a claim. We are told about all the trouble we have with these claims and how many are stacked up for the court to hear. The passage of this bill will create so many claims the commission will have to have a special truck to haul the papers away.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. In a minute. The gentleman from New Mexico put his finger on the reason for the passage of this bill. The reason is found in the case of attorneys for Indians whose claims have been denied or cut down by the Court of Claims wanting to get another crack at the Treasury.

This bill will give them a chance to come in again.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Not only claims which have been denied by the Court of Claims but claims which have been denied by the Supreme Court of the United States will be opened up if this language prevails.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman from Missouri states that if the language which I seek to strike out by my amendment remains in the bill, not only cases which have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims but even those which have been adjudicated by the Supreme Court will be reopened, and this should not occur.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is not that the very example the gentleman from Oklahoma mentioned?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes. The gentleman from Oklahoma wants the cases reopened.

There are two sides to the reason for this bill. I think I know one side, and the gentleman from New Mexico knows it, but there is also another side. One purpose is to reopen a lot of claims. I want to be on the side of keeping these claims down and doing something to protect the taxpayers of this country, even though my committee may not be with me unanimously. I think we have enough claims now, and I think any just claim will get a fair hearing in this Congress.

We do not need this bill. If we cannot defeat it, we must amend it so the claimants cannot go back 150 years to Manhattan Island and have some shyster lawyer dig up a descendant of some blanket Indian and make a million-dollar claim against the Government.

I hope the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the time of the House by discussing this amendment. I hope the Committee will not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin. If the Committee does adopt the amendment, it would mean that many Indian tribes who have just claims would be barred from receiving any consideration whatever in future Congresses, because the proposed commission would have no jurisdiction over finding the facts relative to their cases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The adoption of this amendment would practically nullify the bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. It would. I urge the Committee to vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma) there were—ayes 46, noes 20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: On page 3, line 2, after the semicolon, strike out all down to and including the semicolon on line 5.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the language I seek to strike out reads as follows:

And all claims of whatsoever nature on account of any breach of duty committed by any officer or agent while purporting to act in the name or on behalf of the United States.

Everyone has sympathy for the Indians because of fraud committed by Indian agents and representatives of the United States 50 to 75 years ago and prior to that time. The Court of Claims in its decisions refers to the treaties and the language of the treaties which were drawn up at that time. However, the Supreme Court of the United States has held time and time again that the Government is not responsible for the acts of its representatives or employees. If this language remains in the bill there is absolutely no telling the extent claims will be filed growing out of this provision. The language is plain and the objective is plain. I have nothing further to say with reference to the amendment, except that I think this language should be stricken out.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say that reading the amendment will not give the gentleman any information other than the fact that certain words will be stricken out.

Mr. NICHOLS. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. COCHRAN. The amendment provides for striking out the words on page 3, starting in line 2, and reading as follows:

And all claims of whatsoever nature on account of any breach of duty committed by any officer or agent while purporting to act in the name or on behalf of the United States.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. I should like to know what bill we are considering. The bill from which the gentleman from Missouri quoted and to which he has offered his amendment is numbered S. 1902, Report No. 810. The bill I have is also S. 1902, but the language in the bill I have is entirely different at the point where the gentleman offered his amendment from the language in the bill to which the gentleman offered his amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill from which I quoted is the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House. The bill to which the gentleman refers is the bill as passed by the Senate and as it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That is right.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am not trying to get into an argument with the gentleman; I just want to know what bill we are considering.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma should get a copy of the bill as reported by the committee, which contains the committee amendments.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is the Chair advising me in answer to my parliamentary inquiry that we are considering the bill accompanied by Report No. 810?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the bill which is being considered by the Committee of the Whole.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma that all debate on this section and all amendment thereto close in 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest this afternoon to the discussion of this bill. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I feel justified at this time in calling the attention of my colleagues to what I think are the existing conditions with respect to matters presented to the Indian Affairs Committee.

All Indian legislation is presented to us for consideration. As a member of the committee I believe I am dealing frankly and honestly with you when I say that there is very rarely an opportunity presented which gives me as an individual any definite or proper information upon which I can intelligently pass.

In my opinion the primary reason why this bill should have the favorable consideration of the Members of the House is because I believe any committee that is called upon to pass measures that involve millions of dollars should have at least some business basis on which to operate and should receive proper advice so they can present bills to the House with some degree of intelligence.

I think the committee is especially justified, under the administration's recommendations pertaining to coordination of departments for efficiency, to seek the establishment of intelligent sources of information so that the Congress may legislate wisely.

I may say that my objection to the gentleman's amendment is predicated upon the fact that I do not think as Members of the House we should be expected to excuse a Government agent or agency who has lent himself to bringing about a condition that is not fair or equitable, and I hope the committee will vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma) there were—ayes 48, noes 22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 4, line 15, after the word "consideration", strike out "and may inquire into" and insert in lieu thereof the words "as set-offs."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that by offering amendments to this piece of proposed legislation we can really make it a practicable or desirable measure. However, I do believe there are some things in the measure that possibly should be removed because of the possibility of the House approving the bill. Therefore I think the Committee has acted wisely in adopting the two preceding amendments.

I regret that when I spoke previously I neglected to discuss the proviso on page 4, as I believe the gentleman from South Dakota asked me to do. I had intended to call it to the attention of the Committee, and you will recall that preceding it the language waives all bars and all statutes of limitation and everything else, and then the proviso goes on to state:

Provided, however, That the commission, when ascertaining the merits of any claim, shall take into consideration, and may inquire into—all previous adjudications or settlements of such claims and all payments made by the United States on its account.

These are the four words I am striking out—

In other words, the commission may inquire into previous adjudications. It does not have to take them into consideration, but it may inquire into them. I have proposed to strike out the words "and may inquire into" and in place of those words I am inserting the words "as set-offs", so the provision will read that the commission shall take into consideration, as set-offs, all previous adjudications or settlements of such claims. In other words, there is no reason why we should authorize this commission to inquire into any previous judgment or any previous legislation we have passed paying to the Indians certain sums of money, if it sees fit, and then, after inquiring into the matter, ignore such payments.

This amendment, if adopted, will make it mandatory upon the commission to take into consideration these previous adjudications and use them as set-offs against any amount found due.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. In just a minute. I may call the attention of the Committee also to the fact that we have on our Consent Calendar from time to time numerous bills of this character.

There was one that was up for consideration on last Monday—Consent Calendar No. 306. It is an Indian bill that goes back to 1855 and 1863, going behind the treaties, but it is a minor bill and only involves the sum of about $500,000. However, going back to Consent Calendar 133, there is a bill which I believe was objected to and stricken from the calendar, introduced by the gentleman from Montana, involving the sum of $3,773,580. This would mean paying to four Indian tribes sums of money which they had agreed would not be reimbursable, but now they are coming in here with this proposed legislation and asking the United States Treasury to reimburse them for this money which was paid out for irrigation works on their reservations.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment.

Mr. COSTELLO. I am talking about the provisions of this measure and what will be the effect of this proposed legislation.

I now yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I thank the gentleman for referring to this proviso. As far as I am personally concerned, I think that this is the intent of the proviso, but I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the amendment will improve the bill. However, I do not believe that it will so improve this bill as to make of it desirable legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Commission shall make a detailed report to the Congress of its findings of the facts of each claim, the conclusions reached as to the merits of such claim and the reasons therefor, together with an appropriate recommendation for action or nonaction by that body. Such report shall show how each commissioner voted upon such claims. If any claim shall be ascertained to be without merit in law or in fact, the Commission shall so report. If any claim shall be found to rest on some legal, equitable, or sound moral obligation, the recommendation shall be for a direct appropriation by the Congress in a specific amount, or other adequate relief, or for the passage of an act giving jurisdiction of such claim to the Court of Claims.

In all proceedings brought pursuant hereto in the Court of Claims all determinations of fact by the Commission shall be admissible in evidence but may be reviewed by the court either on the basis of evidence taken before the Commission, or on additional evidence, or both.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I never object to what this House does, because I am used to taking it on the chin; but you have absolutely killed the Claims Commission bill in the amendment you just adopted in line 15 on page 4. You can inquire into these previous judgments for the purpose of hunting up some other set-off, but the Indian cannot inquire into them, and I just got through explaining to this House this afternoon what this section means—I want to show you what influence I have—that you rendered judgment in this Indian case I referred to and charged the Indians with $400,000 of advance that belonged to them on some other deal, and I think every man here who might sit as a juror would determine that those Indians have a right to their money, but that has been adjudicated, and you cannot go behind it if this amendment stands, at least the Indian cannot, but the language of this amendment offered by the ingenious gentleman from California, who has more Indians than I have in his State, prohibits the Indian from inquiring into those judgments, but lets the Government look into them for the purpose of offsets.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to correct him to the extent of saying that the only Indians my colleague from California has in his district are in the pictures.

Mr. BURDICK. I am glad of that. If you want to kill the bill, why not come out here and do it. The only purpose of this bill was to furnish information to this House, and I guess you do not want information. If that is your attitude, just destroy the bill.

When I sat on that Indian Committee time after time we had to dig out facts ourselves, because we had no source of getting the facts in these Indian cases, and we had to depend on the Members of Congress from the various districts telling us what the facts were, and time after time we passed legislation out of that committee that did not have the support of this House because when we got in here we found a different state of facts. If the Congress wants to be fair with the Indians, and do justice to all of them, in the name of the Lord why not form a commission which will give you the facts. Are you afraid that you will have to find judgment in favor of these Indians, but suppose you do? Suppose you have not done justice by them in the past, is there any reason why you should still hold to that doctrine?

I want to finish what I was going to say when I spoke before, that in the Black Hills claim the Government made a treaty with the Indians in 1868, promising faithfully that the white man would never settle beyond the Missouri River, that all land west of the Missouri River should be Indian territory, and the Government signed that treaty, and I have a copy of it with me today showing just what the Government agreed to. You had no sooner signed it, and the Indians had no sooner given up their country and started on west of the Missouri and left their homes of centuries behind them, before the white man moved into the country that was designed for the Indians, and took possession of the Black Hills, and there you found gold in abundance, and to this very day you have never paid the Indians a dime for that gold, or a nickel for the lands that the Government took. Do you want this record of deceit and fraud to stand as an eternal mark of bad faith in our dealings with the Sioux Nation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Commission shall be authorized to receive claims for a period of 3 years after the approval of this act and no claim existing before such period not presented within such period may thereafter be submitted to any Federal court or administrative agency for consideration or action, nor will such claim be entertained by Congress.

Any claim within the provisions of this act may be presented to the Commission by any member or members of an Indian tribe, band, or other communal group, as representative of all such members, regardless of the present status of such members as allottees, citizens, or unrestricted Indians; but wherever any tribal organization exists, recognized by the Secretary of the Interior as having authority to represent such tribe, band, or group, such organization shall be accorded the exclusive privilege of representing such Indians, unless fraud, collusion, or laches on the part of such organization be shown to the satisfaction of the Commission.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 5, line 17, strike out "three" and insert "five", and in line 21, after the word "action", strike out "nor will such claim be entertained by Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Immediately after its formation, the Commission shall send a written explanation of the provisions of this act to the recognized head of each Indian tribe and band, and to any other communal groups of Indians existing as a distinct entity, and shall request that a detailed statement of all claims be sent to the Commission, together with the names of aged or invalid Indians from whom immediate depositions should be taken and a summary of their proposed testimony.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 13, after the word "entity", insert "and to the superintendents of all Indian agencies who shall promulgate the same."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. The Commission shall give notice and an opportunity for a hearing to the interested parties before making any final determination upon any claim. A full written record shall be kept of all hearings and proceedings of the Commission and shall be open to inspection by the attorneys concerned. Whenever a final determination is reached by the Commission upon any claim, notice thereof shall be given to the tribe, band, or group concerned. Within 20 days thereafter written objections thereto may be filed with the Commission by any interested party. If such objections are not accepted by the Commission, they shall be recorded as a part of the report on the claim presented to the Congress.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PIERCE: Page 8, line 5, after the word "Commission", insert a comma and the words "copy of which shall be furnished interested bands and tribes or their representatives selected by them", and in line 5, after the word "inspection", strike out "by the attorneys concerned."

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. If the gentleman cares to save time, I will say the amendment is perfectly satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. PIERCE. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PIERCE: Page 8, line 9, after the word "within", strike out "20 days" and insert "1 year."

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. HONEYMAN] called our attention to these amendments before they were presented, and we have no objection to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. HONEYMAN] desire to offer an amendment?

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendments offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] covered what I had intended to offer, so I will withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. The Commission may adopt all such rules for its own procedure, for the organization of its work, and for the effectuation of the purposes of this act as it may deem appropriate. The Commission may employ, subject to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and fix the terms of employment of such experts, field investigators, and professional and clerical assistants as may be necessary to fulfill duties which cannot be properly performed by persons already engaged in the Government service.

At the Commission's request the General Accounting Office, the Land Office, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs may transfer or temporarily assign to the Commission such of their employees as are specially qualified to assist the Commission in the performance of any of its duties under this act.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

At the risk of intruding on your patience for just a moment, in all fairness and all candor, let me submit to you that this bill up to date as amended makes for orderly procedure and sound government. I am not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and have not been. There are a great many Indians in my district. There are some claims involved, and I have a bill in which I am intensely interested. The facts have been found in that case. But my interest in this bill for a claims commission is the general welfare, the public interest. Surely this bill makes for orderly procedure, as I said a moment ago, and for good government, to have these claims determined and the facts found by a commission.

The objectionable features seem to me to be out of the bill now. This procedure will simplify things, and for this Congress and Congresses yet to come findings by this commission will be extremely useful for many years. It will be a definite place where Congress can go to ascertain the facts. I make this plea on the theory that this does assist in orderly procedure and orderly government, and a general benefit, especially to the Members of the House of Representatives, who want to know what the facts are when they pass upon a bill that involves Indian affairs.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. All necessary expenses of the commission, including all reasonable traveling expenses incurred by the commissioners, or under their orders, upon official business in any place outside the city of Washington, and including necessary expenses for suitable rooms and equipment for the principal office of the commission in the city of Washington and for the performance of duty outside the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chief commissioner.

SEC. 11. Annual reports shall be submitted by the commission to Congress showing the progress of its work. The commission shall cease to exist on the fulfillment of its duties under this act; or, in any event unless extended by act of Congress, on the expiration of 10 years after the formal organization of the commission. When the commission shall cease to exist all its books, documents, letters, official records, and other papers shall be transferred to the Indian Office.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'MALLEY: Page 9, line 18, after the word "of" where it occurs the second time, strike out "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "five."

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, on page 5, section 4, the committee amended the provision that claims should be presented within 5 years instead of 3 years. Now, over at this part of the bill there is provided a life of 10 years for the commission, and my amendment reduces it to 5 years.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will yield, if the gentleman cares to save time, I think the amendment is satisfactory. As far as I am concerned, I would not oppose it.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. If you have 5 years for the submission of cases, you must have a little more time for this commission.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The Congress, of course, could extend it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It is my fear that this Congress may pass this bill and set up a commission for 10 years. There will be three job holders at $7,500 a year and there will be a lot of duplicated work, so just on the remote possibility that the bill, bad as it is, might pass, I would like to have another Congress, after these fellows have been drawing pay helping the Indians to file claims, justify their existence before the Congress after they have been on the pay roll for 5 years and worked on some claims.

Mr. BIERMANN. But to have a rational bill we should have the life of the commission extended for a little while after the claims are submitted.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This is not a rational bill, and I do not think any amendment could make the bill rational. All I am hoping is to try to protect the taxpayers against a permanent commission. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to have to oppose my colleague from Wisconsin, but in the first place if his amendment were adopted it would make it impossible for this commission to function, because this bill gives the Indians 5 years to file claims. Then we allowed 1 year to file objections to the findings of the commission.

We have just adopted an amendment to section 8, page 8, that would give the tribe a whole year to file objections to the findings of the commission; so you would have to give them at least an additional year after the expiration of the time during which the commission could consider claims. It would have to be at least 6 years, for it could not possibly be completed in 5 years. After all, they would probably work 5 years and, as the gentleman from Wisconsin said, they may have truck loads of records to examine and to make recommendation to Congress. Then you have got to give the Indians a year's time to file objections to the findings of the commission. It is impossible to do that in less than 6 years.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the gentleman will not object, I will accept his suggestion and ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment to make the time read 6 years.

Mr. GEHRMANN. I personally have no objection. I merely wanted to point out that the amendment would make the bill unworkable. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the gentleman should modify his amendment to extend the time for 2 additional years.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Now that this is bargain day, Mr. Chairman, six is agreeable to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I will not object if the gentleman makes it seven.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, this being bargain day, to modify my amendment by changing the figure "5" to the figure "7."

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield for the purpose of permitting the gentleman to submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then I will leave it at 5 years.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEHRMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. The commission is allowed 5 years within which it is authorized to receive claims, and after the commission makes its findings the Indians are allowed a year within which to file objections.

Mr. GEHRMANN. The gentleman from Iowa certainly has stated it correctly. The Indians have a period of 5 years within which to file claims. The commission then, of course, must have some time in which to investigate the claims. After they have investigated the claims and rendered their decision the Indians have an additional year within which to file objections to the commission's ruling. Under any circumstances, the time should be 7 or 8 years.

I have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs for 3 years. We hold hearings day after day all day long, and on many special days. We bring bills in here as a result of careful study.

I feel like resigning from the committee when I see more attention paid to others who do not happen to be on the committee, or to those that have not an Indian in their whole district, than is paid to the members of the committee. Surely they cannot know more about these problems than those who work so hard on this committee. We ought to be given some consideration. I insist, so far as I am concerned, that 10 years, the time provided in the bill, is not a bit too long for the commission to accomplish the work we have laid out for them. Under no circumstances can they continue longer than 10 years without a further act of Congress.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the sportsmanship of this House. Anyone, of course, who wants to be for or against this legislation has that inalienable right, as a Member, and no one will complain about his exercise of that right; but when it comes to the point of attempting to cripple the bill purely for the admitted purpose of fixing the legislation so that it probably would be inoperative if it were adopted by the House, then I appeal to the sportsmanship of this body not to support such an amendment.

Whether or not this commission should exist has been argued until probably no further argument is necessary. The Members have their minds made up by this time as to whether they will support the bill or not. Those of us who support the legislation want the bill passed with the 10-year period left in it so that the commissioners can do a proper job. I am sure that the House does not want to set up a commission which would have its hands tied to start with.

I am surprised that my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma would even for himself feel that the time should be reduced to 5 years. If 5 years is to be the life of this commission, then I doubt the necessity of setting up the commission. I think that that was the entire purpose of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I do not think that the amendment was submitted in good faith as a perfecting amendment to make this a better bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is questioning my good faith.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am questioning it because the gentleman said himself that the only reason he did it was because he did not think the bill was any good and he just thought that he would cripple it a little more.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman misstates my statement entirely.

Mr. NICHOLS. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. O'MALLEY. The stenographer can read what I said. The gentleman is questioning my good faith. I offered my amendment because I felt that 5 years was sufficient time for submitting claims.

I said I did not know whether the bill would pass or not, but that the commission ought to be limited. If the gentleman wants to read my remarks he may do so. When the gentleman questions the good faith of another Member he should have a basis for his charge.

Mr. NICHOLS. If I have offended the delicate senses of the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. O'MALLEY. I have no delicate senses.

Mr. NICHOLS. I withdraw the remarks and beg his pardon. I would not offend him at all.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. The bill now provides for 5 years for filing a claim.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is correct.

Mr. BIERMANN. And 1 year after that for filing objections?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. If the amendment prevails, there will be objections filed a year after the commission goes out of business?

Mr. NICHOLS. It will simply make this a silly bill if the amendment is adopted. It will provide that 1 year after the 5-year period objections may be filed and the bill itself would destroy the commission before objections could be filed. That is if the gentleman's amendment is adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 41, noes 40.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. NICHOLS and Mr. O'MALLEY to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 48 and noes 46.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. There is authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act such sums as the Congress may from time to time determine.

SEC. 13. This act may be cited as the "Indian Claims Commission Act."

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I feel the Members have emasculated this bill. There are quite a number of you on the floor of this House who have stated that you are friends of the Indians. Now, may I say that "by their deeds ye shall know them." What you have done here today shows that you are not friends of the Indians.

I believe the Indians want this bill. So the Indians are for it. Who besides the Indians are for the bill? All the departments that have anything to do with the administration of Indian affairs are for this bill.

It has been stated here that the President is for the bill.

Let us see some of those who are opposed to the bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin is opposed to the bill, and many of the amendments that have been approved here this afternoon were submitted by him. He does not represent any Indians, because he comes from the city of Milwaukee. The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] also submitted some amendments. Who does he represent? He represents those Indians in Hollywood who are on the screen, not the real Indians.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid my good friends of the House have allowed themselves to be misled. You have not read this bill; you have not read the hearings had before the Senate committee. If you had read those hearings, you would have found arguments against every proposition raised by the opponents of this bill.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. Has the gentleman ever supported, since he has been a Member of this House, any bill that provides such as this bill provides on page 4, which was stricken by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin? The gentleman never in his life supported such legislation on the platform, in the schoolroom, or anywhere else. Section 4 is enough to kill the whole thing.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech. All that this is is a fact-finding commission. Most of you have interpreted it as being a court, but it is a fact-finding commission only. The gentleman from Oregon has appeared before our committee time and time again. Those of you who have appeared before our committee know we have not the time nor the opportunity to find out all of these facts. All this does is to get the facts before a commission. These things should be known. You who are not on the committee and you who have nothing to do with the committee do not know these facts, but we who have been on the committee for four or five sessions know these facts are not available to us. You are denying us the opportunity to get the facts through the action which you have taken here today.

We can go on. But then, in view of the circumstances, do not say you are friends of the Indians. We will go on for years to come, if this bill is defeated, supporting the very men—the attorneys—referred to by the gentleman from New Mexico. They have been here for years. They have been here for decades. They will continue to be here. We have tried by this bill to eliminate this condition within the next 5, 10, or 15 years, but you are frustrating our efforts.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the Members understand, and that is why they are doing this. They have not studied the facts, and they do not know what the conditions are. I am sorry they have done this, but I am sure they do not realize what they have done in defeating this bill, and the membership will be sorry.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman who preceded me one question? I want to ask the gentleman if he will tell me the name of a single Indian tribe that has received a verdict in the Court of Claims for a certain amount of money from the Government that is willing to say to the Government, "We will let you retry the case"? Can the gentleman tell me one single tribe?

Mr. HILL of Washington. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then I want to know why this House or any Member of the House wants to say that the Government of the United States must let the Indians, who have been denied recognition by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court, reopen their case against the Government?

Mr. HILL of Washington. The case the gentleman just mentioned, having to do with the Seminole Indians, was a proposition in which they were a little late in bringing in their case. They were therefore ruled out, and now the gentleman wants to keep them out.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I know as much about the Indian claims as the gentleman does, who represents Indians, because I have been studying Indians for years.

Let us play the game fair. The Indians would not permit the Government to reopen a case in which they had judgment against the Government. Why should the Indians now ask the Government to reopen a case in which judgment has been rendered in favor of the Government?

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BEAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (S. 1902) to create an Indian Claims Commission, to provide for the powers, duties, and functions thereof, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on each amendment except the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole, excluding the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the semicolon, strike out all down to and including the semicolon on line 5.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will it be in order for the Clerk to read the language which has been stricken out?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk under the direction of the Chair will report all amendments that have been adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, except committee amendments. If an amendment refers to language stricken out, such language would be read.

Mr. COCHRAN. The amendment on which the House is now asked to vote is my amendment. The language of my amendment is such that no one can vote on it intelligently without knowing the language proposed to be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent that such language may be read.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma) there were—ayes 103, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 8, after the word "Congress", strike out the remainder of line 8 and all of lines 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, up to and including the word "parties."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 15, after the word "consideration", strike out the words "and may inquire into" and insert in lieu thereof "as set-offs."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURDICK) there were—ayes 104, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 5, after the word "Commission", insert a comma and the words "copy of which shall be furnished interested clients or tribes or their representatives selected by them"; and in line 5, after the word "inspection", strike out "by the attorneys concerned."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 9, after the word "within", strike out "20 days" and insert in lieu thereof "1 year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 18, after the word "of" where it occurs the second time, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma and Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 89, noes 47.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, nays 91, answered "present" 1, not voting 121, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma) there were—ayes 73, noes 176.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the bill was rejected.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey, for 1 day, to attend the funeral of the late Hon. Franklin W. Fort.

To Mr. RUTHERFORD, for tomorrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. GREGORY (at the request of Mr. SPENCE), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON, of Texas (at the request of Mr. THOMASON of Texas), on account of death in family.

To Mr. BOEHNE, for 2 days, on account of important business.

THE LATE HONORABLE WILLIAM P. CONNERY, JR.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a resolution adopted by the railway labor organizations on the death of our late colleague, Mr. Connery, of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS IN, OR IN THE VICINITY OF, THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H. Res. 256), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 256

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6547, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H. Res. 257), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 257

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2193, a bill to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H. Res. 258), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 258

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 363, a resolution to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Library, the resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules there will be filed tomorrow two more rules, one for the consideration of the farm-tenant bill and one for the consideration of the bill repealing section 213 of the Economy Act, the so-called married woman's bill. These reports will be filed tomorrow.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the legislative business of the day, and any previous special orders, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LABOR CONDITIONS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of the following telegram and I am unable to answer it. I think I might be enlightened by some Member of the House. The telegram is as follows:

Cannot Congress appropriate enough money to repay Lewis his campaign donations and loan before the administration gives him the country in part payment? Must every workingman pay tribute to Lewis for life to liquidate this debt? Did contribution also carry an agreement that Pennsylvania State police were to act as pickets for Lewis, or did he also buy Governor Earle?

This comes from one of my constituents, and I am unable to answer it. I should like to have somebody enlighten me.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Was that from a scab or from somebody that was trying to break up the union?

Mr. RICH. It is from one of my constituents, and I think he is a very good fellow.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. There is a previous order heretofore made, and the Committee on Indian Affairs still has the call. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Oklahoma to call up additional bills from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to call any more up today. I take this opportunity of asking unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just rejected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is entitled to recognition for 15 minutes. [After a pause.] The Chair does not see the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address I delivered on social security.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, on June 21 I was unavoidably absent. If I had been present, I would have voted "aye" on roll call no. 94, in regard to the Railroad Retirement Act.

JEFFERSON ISLAND

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the city of Worms, Germany, in the Republic of Hesse-Darmstadt, is situated on the left bank of the Rhine, 25 miles south of Mainz.

The diet was the legislative body of the free city of Worms. Over a long period bitter contention grew up between the people and certain privileged classes who had been invested by the rulers with power over the commerce of the city and lands occupied by the citizens. According to the Encyclopedia Britannica, the concordat of Worms agreed upon, under the guidance of Emperor Maximilian in the diet of 1495, is known in history as the diet of Worms concordat of perpetual peace.

With that explanation, Mr. Speaker, I now desire to offer some brief observations on another diet of worms that Franklin, the first, is going to convoke on Jefferson Island in the Chesapeake Bay, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, June 25–27, for the purpose, it is reported, of promulgating another "concordat of perpetual peace" in the Democratic Party.

This 1937 diet of worms is to be held on Jefferson Island, named, presumably, after Thomas Jefferson, because it is as far from the National Capitol and a pestiferous minority opposition as the New Dealers are from Jefferson's political philosophy of free government. And also because the island can be so effectively guarded that members of the press cannot get on it and then later tell the Nation what takes place.

Too many worms have turned recently to suit Franklin, the first, so he is convoking the diet to unkink them.

Only masculine Democratic worms are to be allowed. Democratic wormesses are not important enough to qualify. Republicans are not even considered in the worm class. Franklin, the first, merely regards them as insects.

Franklin will have his entire court—not the Supreme Court—present to pet the good worms and to enjoy watching the bad worms wiggle. "All in the spirit of good, clean fun", says he. Also, to spot any worms who may be suspected of being "snakes in the grass." Franklin does not want to be bitten again.

The big woolly worm of the other body of this National Legislature is the chief decoy. He is arranging the details of the diet.

Courtier Harry Hopkins and others will be on hand with many hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of special worm bait.

Since Jefferson Island will not accommodate all the worms at one time, Franklin, the first, has split the diet into three sessions to last 3 days. He has picked the names of the worms out of a hat, who, on each of the 3 days, will be allowed to bask in the sunshine of his smile or wiggle under the heat of his wrath, as the case may be.

The natural order is again reversed by Franklin, the first. The diet of worms will be fish.

But there will be one fine old gray worm missing. He has gone to Texas to fish on his own hook.

Franklin, the first, and his court hope this rendezvous with the worms may prove to be his famous "rendezvous with destiny."

Only time will tell.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman already has that permission.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein certain tables I have worked out myself on unemployment and wages.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

LAW AND ORDER

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Connecticut wish to renew his request to address the House?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I rise here at this time and place to address my colleagues on a proposition which I feel is paramount in America today, namely, the upholding of law and order. [Applause.] I yield to no man when it comes to my interest in the downtrodden of this country or of the world, and, if I may make this personal reference, my years in public life since I was first elected mayor of my city in 1922 bear me out in that statement. I yield to no man when it comes to my interest in the workingman, to use that phrase, and I yield to no man when it comes to my love for the American system of government, when it comes to my love for freedom, the right of free speech, the right of free assemblage, the right of a person to worship God as he was brought up to that worship at his mother's knee.

Now, at this time, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we stand at a parting of the ways. Path A is the American system of government as it has been developed over the years—not perfect, it is true; needing to be changed, we admit; but yet the American system of government.

Path B, as some of us see it, leads to a breach of law and order, the logical conclusion of which is a choice between either fascism or communism; and where is there any liberty under either one of those systems?

To its logical conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if this breach of law and order goes on, we will inevitably be forced to choose between fascism and communism—distasteful alike to anyone believing in liberty. What is the next step? Let me address myself to my Jewish friends. Attacks on the Jews. Let me address myself to the Catholics, my friends. What is the next step? Attacks on Catholics. What is the next step, my friends? Let me address myself to the Protestants. Attacks on outspoken Protestants; a breach of everything we have known; no freedom; no liberty; no religious liberty; no freedom of speech—that we have held dear under the American system of government.

So, Mr. Speaker, I call upon you, as a new man, if I may have that permission, and I call upon my colleagues in the House to call from the housetops a defense of the American system of government, a defense of law and order.

Now, may I address myself to a man whom I like personally, whom I admire, whom I respect—the President of the United States. O Mr. President, thousands of people listen to you; thousands of people have worshiped you; thousands of people have followed you. Speak out! Speak out! Call upon your followers to uphold law and order against everybody [applause], and thus to protect everything we have held dear in America. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR LOUIS MURPHY

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, a little less than a year ago an unusually distressing automobile accident occasioned the death of the then junior Senator from the State of Iowa, the Honorable LOUIS MURPHY, of Dubuque. There is no verbal tribute to his memory that I could here pay that would enhance in any way the esteem in which he was held by the Members of the Senate who were privileged to know him, or diminish in any way the intensity of the feelings of sorrow and loss that were universal among the people of our State on the occasion of the passing of this distinguished Senator.

He, more than any man I ever knew, would disapprove any attempt on the part of his unworthy successor to make public reference to the Senator's service here, in fulsome or even ordinarily eulogistic phraseology. Everyone who knew him in his home State and everyone who knew him as an associate in this Chamber knows that the intensely human, the exceptionally lovable LOUIS MURPHY would prefer the brief but forceful record of the life of Abou Ben Adhem: "Write me as one who loved his fellow men."

Holy Writ informs us that "no man liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself." Every man's life is a contribution to the well-being and happiness of those with whom he comes in contact, or it serves to lower the average of clean and noble living in the community where that life is lived. No one whose life was touched by association with this departed Senator has any doubt of the helpful contribution he made in his home, his city, his State, and in his public service. His untimely death did not destroy that influence. He liked to think that every life was a tiny element in the upward struggle of mankind to its high destiny, and I know he would want me to close this brief reference to him with a quotation that he loved:

Dead; and the sun still shines,
Just dead; but the soft breeze is blowing,
Dead; and the blue lake dimples and smiles,
And the rowers sing at their rowing.
The world moves on just the same,
Scarce a leaf on the elm tree flutters,
And the balmy air of the blooming spring
Sifts in through the half-open shutters.

CONFEREES ON WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the conferees on House bill 6692, the War Department appropriation bill, have had a meeting and have found there are two absentees among the conferees appointed to represent the Senate. I ask the Chair if he will not appoint two more?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints as additional conferees on the part of the Senate the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

OPERATIONS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION IN CALIFORNIA (PT. 2, S. DOC. NO. 77)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution 135 (submitted by Mr. MCADOO and agreed to May 20, 1937), data setting forth the names, titles, salaries, and addresses of employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in its California offices during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934, and stating that similar data for the fiscal years 1935 and 1936, and for the regional office personnel, will be transmitted as soon as such information is received and assembled, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a meeting of Local No. 79, Workers' Alliance of America, at Lincoln Park, Pittsburgh, Pa., endorsing the requests of sit-in strikers, composed of W. P. A. workers at the old post office, Pittsburgh, Pa., for a 20-percent wage increase and recognition of the Workers' Alliance, the C. I. O., and American Federation of Labor unions as exclusive bargaining agencies for all W. P. A. workers, and protesting against mass lay-offs, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of New York City, favoring the enactment of House bill 6841, relative to extending the time for filing claims for refunds under section 15 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (processing tax), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York City and vicinity, praying for the enactment of House bill 238, known as the Ellenbogen textile bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Adirondack Resorts Association of New York State, requesting that the International Joint Commission withhold its approval of the application made by the Dominion of Canada to that Commission for permission to dam the outlet of Lake Champlain and to control the level of certain lakes in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 1216) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain land to the State of Montana to be used for the purposes of a public park and recreational site, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 816) thereon.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

As in executive session,

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of Harry W. Witters, of Vermont, to be State administrator for Vermont in the Works Progress Administration.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2702) for the relief of James A. Ellsworth;

A bill (S. 2703) for the relief of the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Co., Inc.; and

By Mr. MCADOO:

A bill (S. 2707) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171) relating to the employment of personnel and expenditures made by the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission; to the Committee on the Library.

FREEDOM AND RESPONSIBILITY OF SEAMEN—ARTICLE FROM SEAMEN'S JOURNAL

[Mr. COPELAND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article published in the Seamen's Journal for June 1937 entitled "Freedom Implies Responsibility", which appears in the Appendix.]

RETIREMENT OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I at this point address an inquiry to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, for the purpose of the RECORD?

Yesterday when the railroad employees' retirement bill was presented, the able Senator from Montana, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, stated that there had been some understanding satisfactory to both sides, the employers or the heads of the railroad companies and the unions. I had previously stated on the floor of the Senate that such was the condition as reported to me. Today I am in receipt of a telegram from members of the unions at my home protesting against what the Senate did yesterday and protesting also against my statement that the action taken by the Senate was a result of an agreement between the parties honestly carried out here on the floor. I ask the Senator from Montana, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, is it not true that it has been given to the Senate to understand, and the statement was made and it was our belief that there was an understanding between the unions themselves and the heads of the railroads to carry out the program presented and adopted yesterday?

Mr. WHEELER. I may say that the Senator is entirely correct, according to my information. Representatives of the four brotherhoods, including Mr. Harrison, Mr. Manion, and Mr. Johnson, and also the representative of the railroads themselves, Mr. Pelley, representing the class 1 railroads, told me that they had an understanding and agreement; that they had submitted it to the President; that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury had approved it; and that it was a mutual understanding between the railroads and the four or five large brotherhoods.

Mr. LEWIS. Am I authorized by the able Senator to so quote him in the reply to the telegrams I have received?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say that when the matter came up there was some question as to the amount agreed upon and whether the taxes provided would be sufficient.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator is now making a response to my inquiry, is he?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The question was whether or not the rate of tax that had been agreed upon by the brotherhoods and the railroad companies——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. When the unanimous-consent agreement was entered into yesterday it was understood that we would have opportunity during the time before 12:30 o'clock to discuss the pending committee amendment to the joint resolution extending certain taxes, and I suggest that, inasmuch as the Senator from Michigan seeks recognition, that the Senate proceed with the subject matter which we had under discussion rather than to discuss something foreign to it.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator from Oregon is right, but I may say to the Senator from Illinois that I think the information he obtained from the Senator from Montana is exactly correct.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee to strike out "2 years" and insert in lieu thereof "1 year" as the time for the extension of the taxes.

Mr. BORAH. I offer an amendment to the pending joint resolution and ask that it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and lie on the table.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, when the Senate recessed last night it was under a unanimous-consent agreement to vote today at 12:30 o'clock on the committee amendment to the joint resolution extending the nuisance taxes, so-called. The Senate Finance Committee reported an amendment to amend the House joint resolution to reduce the time of the extension from 2 years to 1 year.

I was somewhat amazed in the late hours of the session yesterday to discover that this committee amendment is to be resisted. Many Senators were not present at that time. I, therefore, desire to repeat what I believe to be not only the persuasive but the irresistible reasons why the Finance Committee proposes to reduce the extension period from 2 years to 1 year and why the committee should be sustained.

Mr. President, this joint resolution extends the excise taxes on copper, coal, oil, and lumber. I fully understand the feelings of those Members of the Senate who wish that those particular taxes could be indefinitely extended, and I would join them in wishing they might be extended for 2 years or 5 years, but I submit that that is not a sufficient reason—and I say it in spite of my own deep local interest in the copper situation—to justify Senators in voting to extend for 2 years $650,000,000 of what are virtually sales taxes resting upon the whole body of the people of the United States.

I doubt if any tax bill that comes before the Senate reaches a larger number of American people than does this one, because it puts what is nothing more nor less than a sales tax upon numerous commodities which enter into the daily life of every man, woman, and child in the land.

Mr. President, what happened when the joint resolution to extend these taxes for 2 years appeared in the Congress? It appeared first in the House. It was held back until the very last possible moment that it could be acted upon prior to the expiration of the existing taxes on June 30. I do not charge that that was willful. I say that was the situation.

Therefore, when the measure proposing the extension appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee, and when numerous taxpayers of the country sought a chance to be heard on the question whether or not this $650,000,000 burden should be extended upon them, they were told there was no time for them to be heard; that "time is the essence of the extension of the act", and that the legislation must be concluded without permitting a single taxpayer in the land to be heard in protest against the exactions involved. Therefore the House passed this extension of 2 years without having heard a soul.

The joint resolution came over to the Senate. In the Senate Finance Committee it was moved that the matter be opened to hearings because again we were notified that many taxpayers wanted the chance and the right to be heard. Many of them were prepared to argue that a change in the tax schedule would produce more revenue rather than less. But again we were met with the argument that there was no time to hear anybody, that the matter had to be completed within a week or 10 days. The motion to permit hearings therefore was defeated.

After that motion was defeated the Senate Finance Committee, including the distinguished chairman, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], unanimously agreed, with 14 members present, that since all hearings to all taxpayers had to be denied under the circumstances the least we could do would be to confine the extension of the $650,000,000 burden to 1 year instead of 2 years, so that in the interim the subject might be explored and taxpayers might be heard in respect to the proposed exaction. I repeat, the committee voted unanimously to confine the extension to 1 year.

It is said upon the other side that even though we vote to extend these taxes for 2 years we can intervene in the course of the 2 years and act spontaneously in changing the law if we see fit. That begs the question, and every Senator knows it begs the question. If the joint resolution is passed and these taxes are extended for 2 years they will stay extended for 2 years, in spite of anything, and there will be no intervening action. This is the time when the Senate ought to decide whether it is fair to levy this $650,000,000 of sales taxes without ever giving the American people a chance to be heard in respect to them, whether this is the time to extend them for 2 years, when the committee recommends 1 year, on the theory that at the end of the 1 year, if the revenue is still required, another extension of another year can be had.

Let us not mistake what these taxes are. These are sales taxes which, I repeat, fall upon all the people of the country.

They are sales taxes upon gasoline.

They are sales taxes upon electrical energy.

They are sales taxes upon lubricating oil.

They are sales taxes upon telegraph, telephone, cable, radio facilities, and leased wires.

They are sales taxes upon toilet preparations.

They are sales taxes upon the transportation of oil by pipe lines.

They are sales taxes upon mechanical refrigerators.

They are sales taxes upon matches.

They are sales taxes upon sporting goods.

They are sales taxes upon radio sets.

They are sales taxes upon articles made of fur.

They are sales taxes upon firearms, shells, and so forth.

They are sales taxes upon brewer's wort and malt sirup.

They are sales taxes upon chewing gum.

They are sales taxes upon cameras and lenses.

They are sales taxes on crude petroleum.

They are sales taxes on coal and coke.

They are sales taxes on copper and copper concentrates.

They are sales taxes upon lumber.

They are sales taxes upon paraffin and other petroleum wax products.

They are sales taxes on gasoline and lubricating oil.

They are stamp taxes on transfers of bonds and upon deeds of conveyance.

They are further sales taxes upon automobiles and motorcycles, upon tires and tubes, upon automobile accessories, and upon automobile trucks.

We could not have taxes that come closer to the whole body of American experience than do these; we could not have taxes that come closer to the family budget than do these. There is no excuse on earth for the extension of the $650,000,000 burden for 2 years when by extending it 1 year we will have provided subsequent opportunity for a rational and deliberative study of the whole situation and the chance of giving the American taxpayer an opportunity to do something besides just be "soaked."

This is an issue which the Senate Finance Committee unanimously raised, and I submit the Senate owes it to the committee and to the taxpayers involved to sustain and adopt the amendment now pending.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the measure which imposed the taxes which the joint resolution proposes to extend was originally considered by Congress in 1932. The party with which I am affiliated was not then in control of the Government. I was a humble member of the minority on the committee, but we accepted the suggestions of the Treasury Department, then in charge of Mr. Mills, and we wrote them into the law. Because of the depression and the economic situation, we have been forced to extend this law three times, I believe, on one occasion for 2 years, on another occasion for 1 year, and on still another occasion for 2 years.

I know not what prompted the House to pass the joint resolution fixing the extension for 2 years. I presume it was because of the condition of the Treasury.

The President has expressed the hope that he can balance the Budget in 1938, excluding, of course, requirements for the sinking fund. There may be a deficit of $481,000,000, but the President has stated he is going to try to curtail and reduce expenditures and wipe out that deficit of $481,000,000. However, in all the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget it is made clear that the Government must have the $650,000,000 revenue derived from these so-called nuisance taxes.

The House passed the joint resolution extending the law for 2 years, so that we may not have the question confronting us next year when Members of the House and Senate, I presume, will want to return home and conduct their political campaigns, and also because the requirements of the Treasury make the 2-year extension necessary.

The Senator from Michigan said the Finance Committee, including the chairman, was unanimously in favor of making the extension 1 year, the vote being 14 to 0. The Senator from Michigan is one of the smartest gentlemen on this floor. He always entrances me when he speaks and almost convinces me against my own position. However, the Senator knows the Committee on Finance, when this matter came up, immediately proceeded to its consideration. I do not know why it was delayed in the House. That is not for us to say here. I do not know why the delay occurred, and I am not going to criticize the House. The House passed the joint resolution and immediately, I think the next day, the Senate Committee on Finance was called together to take it up for consideration. The committee felt that if we opened up the measure for amendment it would not be possible to get it before the Senate by the 30th of June. It must be passed by the Senate before the 30th of June unless we want the $650,000,000 income for next year to lapse.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has not the Finance Committee repeatedly in years past had hearings on all these matters?

Mr. HARRISON. I am coming to that point.

Mr. CONNALLY. Anyone who would read the old hearings would know all about the matter, would he not?

Mr. HARRISON. In the hearings in the past we have covered every question involved in the various items on which there is an extension of taxes. Representatives of all interested parties have appeared before the committee and have been given every consideration. The committee, wisely in my opinion, said that because we were not going to amend the joint resolution, we would not have hearings upon it. It would have been perfectly foolish to have hearings when the committee had decided not to amend the joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has referred to the fact that these excise taxes were levied originally in 1932.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I recall when we were considering the tax bill of 1932 it finally came down to a question of being required to raise a certain amount of money. The then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, came before the committee repeatedly, and it was found that we were short several hundred million dollars. Accordingly these taxes were levied in order to make up the shortage, which the Treasury insisted should be done in order that it might carry out its financial program.

The point is that there has not been an hour since that time when these taxes were not just as badly needed as they were when they were originally levied, and they are just as much needed now as they were in 1932. If we might balance the Budget next year by the collection of these taxes for one more year and automatically allow them to lapse, it would be well to do so, in order that we might not be required in the middle of the summer next year to consider them and reenact them for another year and have the Treasury in almost as embarrassing a situation as it was in 1932.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator is absolutely correct.

As to what happened in the committee, 14 members voted for this amendment. I was pretty much "on the spot" the day the amendment was considered, because, unfortunately, by reason of the press of business, many of the majority members were not present. My friend from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] was there, enthusiastically working with all the minority, and, of course, they have a large number. We had two or three votes, and because of the absence of many Senators on my side the vote was 7 to 7.

I wanted to get the joint resolution out of the committee, and so there was no roll call upon this amendment making the period of extension 1 year. We reported the joint resolution. I am not going to ask the Senate to vote one way or the other. My personal view was that the taxes should be extended for 2 years. I wish the committee had taken that action. Now I am embarrassed, because my committee has brought out a provision for an extension of 1 year. The Senate can vote as they please on it; but I think, in all wisdom, the tax ought to be extended for 2 years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. To complete the record in respect to the action in the committee, I will ask the Senator if it is not true that after I had raised the question of 1 year the suggestion respecting the ultimate action of the committee was made by the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct; but the Senator did not hear the Senator from Mississippi say anything about it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I certainly did not hear the Senator from Mississippi vote "no."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee, found on page 1, line 6, to strike out "1939" and insert "1938."

Mr. McNARY and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and will vote. I vote "yea." I am advised that the Senator from Texas would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRAZIER. My colleague [Mr. NYE] is absent. He is paired on this amendment with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea", and I understand that if the Senator from Maryland were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that on this question the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. If present and voting, the Senator from Utah would vote "yea", and the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] are necessarily absent. Their pairs have been announced.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] are detained in important committee meetings.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 50, as follows:

So the amendment reported by the committee on line 6, page 1, was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the agreement, the similar amendment reported by the committee on line 2, page 2, is now before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced an amendment relating to whale oil and its exemption from tax. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi what his attitude is regarding that particular matter?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the tax on whale oil is not involved in this joint resolution. That tax is permanent law. It is not affected one way or the other by this joint resolution.

Mr. COPELAND. I assumed that that was so, but I wished to be on sure ground.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment may be dispensed with, because in the course of my remarks I shall be able to indicate to the Senate what the amendment provides, and dispensing with the reading may save some time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was, after line 2, page 2, to insert a new section reading as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Section 12 (b), relating to rates of surtax, of the Revenue Act of 1936 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Rates of surtax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax as follows:

"Upon a surtax net income of $3,000 there shall be no surtax; upon surtax net incomes in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $4,000, 4 percent of such excess.

"$40 upon surtax net incomes of $4,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $6,000, 6 percent in addition of such excess.

(b) The provisions of this section shall apply only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1936. Income taxes for taxable years beginning prior to January 1, 1937, shall be levied, collected, and paid as if this section had not been enacted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there has been a long struggle in this country in an effort to secure the enactment of the principle that taxes should be levied in accordance with the ability of the taxpayer to carry the burden. Following the Supreme Court decision in the nineties, it was not until 1913 that the Constitution was amended to give Congress the power to tax incomes from whatever source derived.

On each occasion when the Congress had the responsibility of enacting tax legislation there has been a contest between those on the one hand who have believed that the tax burden should be levied in accordance with ability to pay, and those who have resisted and opposed the application of that principle. During the World War there was a very important and a very bitter contest between those who believed that the war should be financed, insofar as possible, by graduated taxes upon individual and corporate incomes derived from war profits, and those who believed that a larger percentage of the cost of the war should be passed on to future generations through the sale of bonds.

After the war Mr. Andrew W. Mellon became Secretary of the Treasury, in 1921, and during the three administrations under which he served he consistently espoused the theory that graduated taxation should be reduced. He succeeded to such an extent that when we entered the present economic crisis the rate of tax upon the highest bracket of the individual income-tax schedule was at 20 percent.

It has been stated on the floor of the Senate before, and I have never heard it contradicted, that if the taxes which were in force in 1921, although they were a reduction from the higher levels of the war taxation, had been continued upon the statute books until 1929, a sufficient amount of revenue would have been obtained to retire the entire indebtedness attributable to the war.

Those who supported the position taken by the former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, during the period of the boom contended that the constant reduction of high surtax brackets was contributing to the increased business activity which manifested itself in the period between 1923 and 1929. There is a large group of experts and economists who hold that the policy of reducing the high individual income-tax rates contributed to many of the excesses of a speculative nature which manifested themselves during the boom, and that, in part, the policy of reducing high individual income surtax rates was responsible for the uncontrolled speculative mania which swept over the country in the latter period of the boom. It should be stated that the progressives in the Senate fought to the best of their ability to resist the bipartisan drive under Mr. Mellon's leadership to reduce income taxes in the surtax brackets.

After we entered the present economic crisis there were many who argued that if we would but balance the Budget, bring the revenues and expenditures of the Government into balance, it would check the deflationary spiral of the depression and bring about a restoration of prosperity. By 1933, however, it became apparent that if this economic crisis, the most serious in the written history of the world, was to be stemmed, and if the economic structure of this country was to be preserved, it was necessary for the Government to expend large sums of money and to extend large credit facilities in order to accomplish two purposes—one, to support the crumbling debt and capital structure, and the other, to provide relief and purchasing power to a portion of the people of this country.

As one of those who early in the depression advocated a huge program to stem the tide of the economic crisis, I have also been one of those who have taken the position that at the time we were making these expenditures we should, insofar as possible, finance those expenditures through taxation. In other words, an economic crisis and a crisis of war are similar, in that in both situations huge expenditures of money must be made. They are alike in that during both war and an economic crisis of this magnitude a sufficient amount of revenue cannot be obtained from taxation to provide for all of the necessary expenditures. I believe they are alike also in that a sound policy of taxation requires that in the crisis of both war and depression, insofar as possible, government should secure as large an amount of revenue from taxes as possible.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to state to the Senator that I do not quite agree with his analogy between periods of depression and periods of war, and therefore the same or similar necessity for levying heavy taxes. What would the Senator have to say to this suggestion: Of course, in time of war, when inflation is threatened and heavy expenditures required, it is necessary that there should be heavy taxation in order that we may get all we can get not only to produce revenue necessary to run the Government but also to present or divert to the Treasury the inordinate profits made during such a period. But in a time of depression, when everyone is deflated already, and it is hard to make business go, does not the Senator think the better plan is to finance most of the operations, or at least a substantial part of them, on credit or through loans? Then, when prosperity returns and inflated profits return, to levy heavier taxes to reduce the indebtedness rather than to impose on depressed values and depressed income a still heavier load than we otherwise would?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In the first place, Mr. President, in response to the Senator's suggestion, I grant that in the case of a major war or major depression it is not possible to secure the necessary revenues in order to meet the extraordinary expenditures which have to be made in both instances. In the second place, however, it is my contention that we should tax during a period of economic crisis as heavily as possible in order that we may not pass on to the future taxpayers and to future generations any greater proportion of the load than is necessary. In the third place, my answer to the Senator is that both in war and in depression, when the Government is expending huge sums of money, inevitably they flow out through the economic system and increase the incomes of corporations and individuals in proportion to the claim of those individuals and corporations upon the entrepreneurial income of the country.

Therefore, at the time when expenditures are being made we should endeavor, insofar as possible, under an equitable system of graduated taxation, to tax those who benefit from the expenditures.

Mr. President, I think no one will deny that the huge expenditures which have been made since 1933 have contributed in a very large measure to the increase in economic activity and to the partial recovery which we now enjoy. I shall not take time to argue the proposition further than to point out that, through April 1937, out of a total of $2,900,000,000 spent by the W. P. A., $2,500,000,000 went to W. P. A. workers. Of this amount it is estimated that $950,000,000 was used by W. P. A. workers to buy food, $200,000,000 for clothing, and $910,000,000 for rent, heat, and light.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator refers to W. P. A. workers. They were not paying income taxes?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, sir.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think it would be interesting for the RECORD to show that when Mr. Irvin, of the United States Steel Corporation, testified in the hearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate he estimated that the increase in production and business which the general steel industry and the cement industry had enjoyed, due to Government expenditures under this public-works program, was at least 50 percent over what it would have been without the Government expenditures. That is interesting to know in view of the fact that steel prices have gone up 30 or 40 percent under this program. They were high enough before. These people still get a great deal of this money out of the taxpayers' pockets, and if they do not make extraordinary profits they will not have to pay such high surtaxes. If they make extraordinary profits, they ought to return some part of those profits in taxes to the Treasury in order to relieve the tax burden of those who have furnished the money for the public-works program.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for his interruption. His statement serves to emphasize the point which I was trying to make. Extraordinary expenditures result in increasing the incomes of individuals and corporations. I have fought to increase these taxes in 1934, 1935, and 1936, just as I am doing now in order that we may require those who are large beneficiaries of the Government's spending program to help carry some of the burden of it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It would only be fair to Mr. Irvin to say that his estimate was based upon the expenditures not only of the Federal Government but of the State, county, and municipal governments—all government departments. He did not consider only those which were made by the Federal Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Therefore, Mr. President, on every occasion when we have had tax legislation under consideration since the economic crisis began I have endeavored to secure increased taxation based upon the principle of ability to pay.

This principle has been recognized in part, so far as the individual income-tax brackets are concerned, because in the Revenue Acts of 1935 and 1936 the individual income-tax rates on incomes of $50,000 or more were substantially increased. There are, however, all of those surtax income-tax payers in the brackets below $50,000 who have never been required by the Government in this economic crisis to contribute in accordance with the ability to pay their proportionate share of the cost of this program which has produced partial recovery. I for one have never been able to see the justice of calling upon those taxpayers in the brackets above $50,000 for an increase in taxes and at the same time not asking those who are enjoying net taxable income of $50,000 a year or less, likewise in accordance with a graduated schedule and in accordance with the ability to pay, to come forward and make their proportionate contribution to the expenditures which have so largely been responsible for their improved economic conditions and their larger incomes.

In order that Senators may understand my amendment I want to make a comparison between the taxes paid under the existing law and the taxes which would be paid if the amendment were adopted and the taxes which are now being paid by taxpayers in Great Britain. For the purpose of this illustration and because a comparison of rates is difficult to understand, I shall take the example of the net income of a married person without dependents and entitled to the maximum earned income allowance under existing United States and British laws.

Under this amendment, Mr. President, a married person with no exemption would pay no tax on net income of a thousand dollars, $1,500, $2,000, or $2,500.

On a net income of $3,000 a married person with no dependents would pay under the existing law $8, and under this amendment $8.

On net income of $4,000 this individual would pay $44 under the existing law, and under this amendment he would pay $44.

Upon net income of $5,000 this individual in the situation described would pay $80 under the existing law, and $80 under my amendment.

But a married person with no dependents who had a net income of $6,000 would pay under the existing law $116, and under my amendment $136.

So it will be clear to Senators that a married person with no dependents would have to enjoy a net income of $6,000 before such an individual would be asked to contribute any more in taxes under my amendment than he now contributes under the existing law.

In order to get some understanding of the difference in burden imposed under our law and that imposed under the British income-tax law I may point out that under the British law a married person with no dependents, who receives a net income of $6,000 would pay $1,062.50. At $10,000 of net income an individual situated as I have described would pay $415 under our existing law and $540 under my amendment.

At $20,000 an individual would pay $1,589 under existing law, while under my amendment he would be required to pay $2,274.

At $50,000 of net income such an individual would pay $8,869 under existing law, but would be required to pay $12,024 under the amendment.

At $100,000 a married man with no dependents would pay $32,469 under the existing law, and under my amendment would pay $37,524.

At $1,000,000 an individual married person with no dependents would pay under existing law $679,044, while under my amendment he would pay $684,124.

At $5,000,000 of net income such an individual would pay $3,788,994 under existing law, and under my amendment would be required to pay $3,794,074.

Mr. President, a great deal of discussion took place during the consideration by the Senate of the joint resolution providing appropriations for relief and work relief for the fiscal year 1938. During the course of that discussion many Senators indicated that they were determined to balance the Budget. I do not believe that the Budget can be balanced by a reduction of expenditures. I think time will demonstrate that the $1,500,000,000 which was recently provided in the joint resolution passed by the Senate will prove to be inadequate, and that Congress will be confronted before the next session adjourns with a deficiency appropriation to make up the sums which will be required to be expended because of the inadequacy of the appropriation.

However the situation may eventuate, may I point out that in the most recent estimates which have been submitted—and they are to be found in the message of the President dated April 20, 1937—this statement appears:

> The revised estimates of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1938 as here presented indicate an estimated net deficit of $418,000,000. There is included in the estimates of expenditures the $1,500,000,000 for work relief hereinafter recommended.

The Treasury estimated under date of May 13, 1937, that if the amendment now proposed by me were adopted it would provide $247,800,000 additional revenue from the individual income tax schedule.

Therefore, Mr. President, I appeal to those Senators who have said that they desire to balance the Budget to support this amendment, for it will be a long step in that direction on the basis of the most recent estimates which we have received. I also appeal for the support of those Senators who believe, as was so well expressed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] in his very excellent address a few days ago, in the extension of the social frontiers. Every serious economic problem now confronting the American people involves the problem of social finance.

I care not whether we are considering the problem of farm tenancy or whether we are considering the problem of housing, urban and rural; I care not whether we are considering the problem of providing work for those who are able and willing to work, but who, through no fault of their own, are unable to obtain it; I care not whether we are considering the problem of social security and the inadequacy of the standards now provided under existing law, on every single front we are squarely faced with the problem of finance. It confronts us as well in connection with the task of preserving and restoring the resource base in order that oncoming generations may have a foundation upon which to build a decent society.

Each and every one of these problems involves the question of finance; and if we are sincere in our determination to meet and solve even some of the pressing economic problems now confronting the people of this country, I say that the time has come when, upon the sound principle of taxation in accordance with ability to pay, we should ask those who are in a more fortunate position in our society to contribute their proportionate share to the achievement of these objectives.

I know it will be said that this is not the time to adopt this amendment. I have met that argument upon the floor of the Senate ever since 1934. First, the argument was advanced by the Senator from Texas that taxes were deflationary in their character, and, therefore, in the downward spiral of the crisis within the crisis we could not afford to increase taxation. I doubt the soundness of that argument, and I attempted at the time to meet it. I shall not burden the Senate by repeating the contentions I then made. However sound the argument may have been, it prevailed, and no increase in taxes was asked of individuals in the income-tax brackets.

Then, Mr. President, in 1935, when I attempted to secure the enactment of an amendment similar to the one now offered, I was confronted upon the floor of the Senate with the argument that the time had not yet arrived when we could afford to increase taxes in the individual income-tax brackets. Again in 1936 the same argument was made, and I anticipate that it will be repeated upon the floor of the Senate in the year 1937.

Mr. President, if we are ever going to increase taxes upon those who have ability to pay, now is the time to do it. It is always easy to defer taxation; and I recognize that the cause which I espouse is not a popular one. The time has come when the people of this country must be made to understand that if we are to attain essential social objectives, if we are to put our economic system under a sufficient degree of social control so that it may function and provide a more equitable distribution of annual income we can only carry on that program, we can only achieve those objectives by providing the necessary revenue.

Everyone is aware of the fact that individual incomes increased in 1936, and everyone anticipates that they will still further increase in 1937. The time when we are making these extraordinary expenditures, when we are helping to increase the income of individuals, is the appropriate time when we should ask them, through increased taxes, to provide the necessary revenue.

Mr. President, if this amendment shall be adopted, it is my purpose to offer another amendment which will provide for lowering the exemptions. The second amendment, if adopted, would provide for a reduction in the exemption enjoyed by a single person in the United States from $1,000 to $800. It would provide a reduction in the exemption of a married person from $2,500 to $2,000.

Bear in mind that the amendment would not provide for the payment of any surtax. Only the normal tax of 4 percent would apply. For example, a married person with no dependent who now enjoys a net taxable income of $2,500, and therefore pays no Federal income tax, would, under the second amendment, if adopted, pay a normal tax upon that portion of the income between $2,000 and $2,500, namely, $500, which, under existing rates, would amount to a Federal income tax of $20.

A single person who now enjoys a net income of $1,000, and therefore pays no tax under our present exemption, would be asked, under my amendment, to pay a normal tax upon $200 of his present income, or a tax of $8.

Mr. President, the reason I predicate the offering of the second amendment upon the fate of the first amendment relating to the surtax brackets is that it does not seem fair, until the Congress has increased taxes upon those who enjoy incomes sufficient to put them into the surtax brackets between $3,000 and $50,000, to ask those in the lower income brackets to bear increased taxes.

In connection with the exemption amendment, I wish to point out that at a time when we are providing these relief and employment measures, when we are extending credit, we can with justice require those who enjoy the privilege of a net taxable income of $2,500 a year or $1,000 a year to make a small contribution toward carrying forward the program.

In addition I want to drive home the fact that, although the Treasury estimated on May 13 that this amendment, lowering the exemption for married people and single persons, would produce $110,000,000 of additional revenue, the increase in revenue, or the greater proportion of it, would not come from individual income-tax payers who would be brought into our income-tax system but from a reduction in the exemptions for those who are in the higher brackets. I estimate that about 20 percent of the increase would come from individuals who would be brought into the tax system and that about 80 percent of the $110,000,000 would be obtained from those in the higher brackets who would likewise suffer a reduction in their exemption.

The reason for this is that the effect of the exemptions in the higher brackets is to reduce the tax bracket where it carries a heavy rate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a table which was printed in the RECORD day before yesterday relating to these amendments.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] New surtax schedule, applying to surtax net incomes in excess of $3,000 (see attached amendment); personal exemptions reduced $500 for married persons and $200 for single persons.

[2] Same surtax schedule as in plan no. 1; personal exemptions as in existing law.

[3] Same surtax schedule and personal exemptions as in plan no. 1; normal tax rates are 2 percent on the exemption reduction and 4 percent on the balance.

[4] Same personal exemptions and normal tax rates as in plan no. 3; new surtax schedule, applying to net incomes in excess of $4,000. (See attached amendment.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for a record vote on my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the amendment was not read, but I understand the Senator from Wisconsin has two or three amendments. May I inquire which amendment this is?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is the amendment which establishes the first surtax bracket at $3,000 with rates graduated from 4 percent to 75 percent. I wish to point out, however, that if the taxpayer is a married person with no dependents, he must enjoy a net taxable income of $6,000 before my amendment would require him to pay any additional increase in surtaxes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not delay the Senate nor shall I discuss the merits or demerits of the pending amendment. The same arguments which are now presented by the Senator from Wisconsin have been made on numerous other occasions when revenue bills were before the Senate. There may be some merit in his proposal, but I wish to confine myself merely to the question of the advisability of attaching the amendment to the pending joint resolution.

I repeat that the law, under which the nuisance taxes extended by the pending joint resolution are made effective, will expire on June 30. If an amendment such as this should be incorporated in the joint resolution, naturally it would have to go back to the House and go to conference, and probably the House would want to take it up and consider it in Committee of the Whole on the floor of the House. It involves a question of rates about which many people differ. Rates which are proposed to be adopted are always well considered by the committees first. Under our form of government revenue legislation must originate in the House. While this is a revenue measure which originated in the House, it seems to me only fair to the House that the Ways and Means Committee should first consider a question which involves so many rates as are proposed here on incomes and involving also a reduction in the exemptions.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the proposal was considered at any time by the Finance Committee?

Mr. HARRISON. No; it was not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Finance Committee considered a similar amendment in 1934, again in 1935, and again in 1936. I point out to the Senator that at one time, in 1935, a majority of the Finance Committee voted to incorporate such an amendment in the bill; but on reconsideration it was defeated.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has advanced the same suggestions heretofore. They are not, however, incorporated in the law. It will be recalled that the head of the Government, the President, on numerous occasions has expressed the thought that he would not ask for increased taxes at this time. In the last message delivered by him to Congress he repeated that statement. The pending amendment involves increased taxes upon certain taxpayers within the groups proposed to be affected.

I had hoped very much that an amendment such as this would not be proposed, and certainly I hope it will not be adopted by the Senate, because it would greatly complicate the matter. If we are going to take up such a proposal it should first be considered by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and then by the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Without any discussion of the merits, I appeal to the Senate, not only in this instance, but in other instances that may arise, that such amendments shall not be placed upon the joint resolution either to increase taxes at this time or to reduce some of the taxes carried in the joint resolution through the provision to extend them, so that we may send the joint resolution to the President and have it become a law and the taxes continued at least until the committees have taken up the general subject of revenue in January of next year, as we hope to do.

The President has suggested that next January the Congress should consider a revenue bill. If his suggestion is complied with, these matters may be considered then. While it is not apropos right now, the experts are studying the proposal to modify the undistributed profits tax, and they expect their work along that line to be finished in September or October. We can then take up this matter and consider it.

These remarks are directed to the amendment which will be presented by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], as well as to the pending amendment. So far as the amendment now before us is concerned, offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, without any discussion of its merits at all, I hope it will not be placed upon the joint resolution, which merely seeks to extend the present so-called nuisance taxes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and will vote. I vote "yea." I am not advised how these Senators would vote if present.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and its transfer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], I vote "nay."

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. NYE] is absent. On this amendment he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea", and I understand that if the Senator from Pennsylvania were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. ROBINSON's name was called). The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber on important matters.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is temporarily detained. He has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is detained in a committee hearing. He has a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on departmental business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained in a committee meeting. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 31, as follows:

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert a new section reading as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) Section 25 (b) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to the personal exemption) is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$800"; and by striking out "$2,500" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,000."

(b) Section 25 (b) (2) of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to credit for dependents) is amended by striking out "18 years of age" and inserting in lieu thereof "20 years of age."

(c) Section 51 of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to individual returns) is amended by striking out "$1,000" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$800"; and by striking out "$2,500" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,000."

(d) Section 142 of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to the filing of fiduciary returns) is amended by striking out "$1,000" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$800"; and by striking out "$2,500" wherever it appears therein and inserting "$2,000."

(e) Section 147 of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to information returns) is amended by striking out "$1,000" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$800."

(f) Section 214 of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to nonresident aliens) is amended by striking out "$1,000" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$800."

(g) Section 251 (f) of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to citizens of possessions of the United States) is amended by striking out "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$800."

(h) The provisions of this section shall apply only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1936. Income taxes for taxable years beginning prior to January 1, 1937, shall be levied, collected, and paid as if this section had not been enacted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I discussed this amendment in connection with the one just acted upon by the Senate. The one that has been agreed to will provide $248,000,000 of increased revenue, according to the Treasury estimates made on May 13. The pending amendment, if adopted, according to the Treasury estimates, will produce $110,000,000 of additional revenue. So the two amendments taken together would increase the yield from the income tax $367,400,000 which, according to the estimates given in the President's message to which I recently referred, would come within $60,000,000 of a balanced Budget.

Mr. President, I wish to state very briefly what the effect of the amendment would be if it should be adopted. Under existing law a married person with no dependents has an exemption of $2,500 a year. For each dependent a married person has, he has an additional exemption of $400 a year. The amendment proposes to raise the age limit of the dependents from 18 years to 20 years, in order that people who are married and who are attempting to educate their children may enjoy the exemption for those children until the children reach 20 years of age.

If we take the case of a married man with no dependents, we find that under existing law he can enjoy a $2,500 net income and pay no tax. Under the amendment a person with no dependents, having a net income of $2,500, would pay the normal tax, namely, 4 percent, on $500 of taxable income. In other words, he would be asked to pay an income tax of $20 per annum to the Federal Government.

A single person today may have a net income of $1,000 and not pay any tax to the Federal Government. Under the amendment a single person with no dependents having a net income of $1,000 would be asked to pay the normal tax upon $200 of the net income, the difference between $1,000 and $800, or a tax of $8 per annum.

It is my contention that in the light of the current expenditures, and in the light of the credit facilities which have been extended, people today who are enjoying net incomes of $2,500 per annum for a married person with no dependents should be asked to contribute $20 a year to help carry on the program of the Federal Government. Likewise I feel that we are justified in asking the single person with no dependents, who has a net income of $1,000 a year, to pay $8 as a contribution, in accordance with ability to pay, to help meet the cost of the program which has produced partial recovery.

Mr. President, the amendment will accomplish another purpose which I think is very desirable; that is, to sufficiently broaden the base of the income tax so that in years of diminishing national income it may yield more consistently than does our present income-tax structure. Senators are no doubt familiar with the fact that in the year 1932, although we had very substantially increased taxes, we received very much less in revenue. I think nearly everyone is agreed that the reason why the British income tax is much more stable in its yield in years of diminishing national income than ours is that their income tax has a broader base.

One more point and then I shall be through, because I know the Senate is impatient to dispose of the joint resolution. I wish to drive home the point that the $110,000,000 of additional revenue, which the Treasury estimates this amendment will produce, will not come entirely from the new income-tax payers who will pay if the amendment shall be adopted. The largest proportion of the increased revenue will come from those in the surtax brackets, who now enjoy, as does every other taxpayer, the $2,500 exemption if married, and the $1,000 exemption if single. I estimate that about 20 percent of the $110,000,000 will be obtained from the new income-tax payers who will come in under the amendment, and that approximately 80 percent of the $110,000,000 will come as a result of reducing the exemption in the brackets where people now pay surtaxes, and where those exemptions often have the effect of pulling the taxpayer's net income into a lower surtax bracket than it would be in if he did not enjoy the larger exemption.

In conclusion, I reemphasize the importance, as I see it, of increasing revenue at this time. I further reiterate that these two amendments in conjunction will produce an additional $367,400,000 of revenue, which will be within $60,000,000 of wiping out the deficit, which the President estimated in his message on April 20 would be $418,000,000 for the fiscal year 1938.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I dislike very much to take issue with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Usually we find ourselves in agreement on tax bills, but we work them out usually in the committee. I wish to sound here a note of protest against the United States Senate legislating on these important tax matters on the floor, without proper consideration in the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the Senator was called from the Chamber at the time I ventured to interrupt the Senator from Mississippi when he made the point the Senator has just suggested. I am sure the Senator will recall that both these amendments now being considered were offered in the committee in 1934 and were debated on the floor of the Senate and voted on; that they were offered in the committee and voted on in the Senate in 1935, and in 1935 there was a sufficient amount of consideration, I may remind the Senator, so that on one occasion the amendments were all voted into the bill then under consideration, and another meeting of the committee and a reconsideration were required in order to remove them from the bill. So the committee has really had a great deal of time to consider the amendments and have given some attention to them. I merely wished to make this statement for the sake of the RECORD. I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not take any issue with the historical aspects of the matter; I am speaking of the present aspect. Revenue bills originate in the House of Representatives; the control of taxation, under the Constitution, is lodged in the House of Representatives, and in this instance that body sends to the Senate a little joint resolution providing for the continuation of the so-called nuisance taxes. Then the Senate of the United States, using that little measure as a pretext, proceeds, without recommendation of the Committee on Finance or any other committee, to rewrite the whole income-tax structure of the United States. That is what the Senate did a while ago. It adopted an amendment relating to practically the entire income-tax structure of the American people after a debate of but half an hour or an hour.

Mr. President, we all know that next winter Congress will give consideration to a general tax measure. In the drafting of that measure we hope to have the aid of experts from the Treasury, we hope to have hearings, at which all interested parties may appear, and why not await that time, instead of taking a bite at this matter at this time?

The taxes affected by the joint resolution now pending will expire on the 30th of June. Today is the 24th of June. Is it the purpose of the Senator to have the Senate undertake to rewrite the entire joint resolution and fight it out with the House of Representatives in 4 days—when we are to spend 3 of those days down at Jefferson Island? [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I protest against the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, now pending. What does he propose to do? Under the present income-tax law a single man has an exemption of a thousand dollars, a married man has an exemption of $2,500. The Senator from Wisconsin wants to reduce the exemption in the one case to $800 and in the other case to $2,000.

I submit that as a result of the Senator's amendment—although I know he does not intend it—a large part of the money we would get because of the reduction of these exemptions would come out of the little fellow. Costs are now rising. The cost of living is now increasing, it is becoming higher all the time, and in addition to that burden, the Senator from Wisconsin would put another burden on the little man in the form of a reduced exemption.

Further, Mr. President, the amendment adopted by the Senate today relating to surtaxes would increase the tax on the income of everyone for the year 1937. It is a retroactive tax. We can do it; we have the power to do it. We would be taxing men whose incomes have already been earned for half of the year. The Senate has done that by the amendment it adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment. I am astonished that Senators on this side of the aisle should so far forsake the leadership of the chairman of the Committee on Finance and vote recklessly for the amendment which has already been adopted, and now be on the point of voting to tax the small man with a $800 income.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator will acknowledge, I am sure, that whenever we are considering a revenue bill we always make the tax apply to the year in which the bill is under consideration.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is nothing novel about it.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I stated that we could do it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We always do it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am just telling the Senate what it is doing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We do it every time we consider a tax bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. A man never commits a wrong but what he can cite a precedent for it. There was never a man who climbed a porch and went into a second-story window of a house who could not cite the record to show that there had been a man in there before he was.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why has not the Senator from Texas raised his voice in protest against previous revenue bills, in view of the fact that it is always the practice of the committee and the Congress to impose a tax upon the income earned in the year in which the bill is passed?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not saying that we cannot do it and that we have not done it. I do not think there is any reason, though, why we should do it again.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why has not the Senator raised his voice in protest? He has been on the Finance Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senator from Texas does not wish to raise his voice in protest all the time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have served on the Finance Committee with the Senator from Texas for a great many years, and this is the first time I ever heard him argue that there was anything wrong or anything unfair, or that it was not the usual practice for the Congress, when it enacted revenue legislation, to make the taxes enacted apply to the income of that year.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that there is no crime in it. We can do it. We have done it. However, I am reminding Senators that that is what they are doing. If they want to do that, the votes are theirs, and they can vote to do it; but I am protesting against the Senate of the United States, in an hour's time, revising and rewriting the entire income-tax law structure of this country in this sewing-circle fashion, without committee action or committee recommendation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is the Senator from Texas aware of the fact that when I offered these amendments, and we debated them in the committee, they lost on a tie vote?

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, when a man loses, he loses. [Laughter.]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am well aware of that, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further; but, apropos of the Senator's contention that this matter has not received committee consideration, I wish to have the RECORD show that after these amendments were debated in the committee they lost by a vote of 7 to 7.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I do not think it would be good policy, even if the committee had favorably reported the amendments, for the Senate to undertake to rewrite the whole tax structure when the House sends to the Senate a revenue measure of this kind, simply extending a few little taxes. Under those circumstances I do not think it is good policy for the Senate to rise up and undertake to rewrite the whole tax structure. We owe the comity toward the House that when it comes to the consideration of a general tax bill we shall at least respect the theory of the Constitution, and let the House send a tax bill over here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, as I understand the Senator does not feel that the fact that the committee failed to adopt this amendment is any argument against it. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will answer the Senator. I never did like to be interrogated with a limitation of answering "yes" or "no." I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the committee could not have considered the matter very thoroughly. I shall ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] if it is not true that the joint resolution came over from the House, and the committee acted upon it almost immediately.

Mr. HARRISON. It did, Mr. President; yes. It acted upon it almost immediately. The amendments were presented by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand.

Mr. HARRISON. But I think some six or seven Democrats were absent; and the vote on the amendments of the Senator from Wisconsin was 7 to 7.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; the vote was 7 to 7.

Mr. President, who now pays the bulk of the State and county taxes in the United States? The little fellow who receives a thousand-dollar income does not escape taxation. If we exempt the thousand-dollar individual income of a clerk, or a blacksmith, or an automobile mechanic, or anybody else, let us not labor under the delusion that he is escaping taxes. He pays taxes on the little house which he owns, and if he does not own it he helps to pay the landlord's tax on it. He pays taxes in many of the States in all sorts of ways; he pays sales taxes, consumption taxes, and myriad other taxes. He will pay the taxes that we are continuing here today. He will pay the gasoline taxes, and he will pay the taxes on copper, the production of which goes to help restore the prosperity of Arizona and other States. He will pay part of the tax on lumber that goes into the house in which he is living.

The little fellow with the $1,000 income is now paying taxes in a larger proportion than the man with the big income, even with the surtaxes piled on him, because the man who has a big income usually has stocks and securities, and has liquid assets, and frequently pays very little, if any, State and county tax. The tax collector does not have a radio eye so that he can locate all of the intangibles and put them on the county tax roll. But if some fellow has a little flea-bitten mule and a single-horse plow, the tax collector can locate him every time; and he is on the county tax roll, and he is on the State tax roll. So the man with the small income is already paying more in proportion than the man with the high income.

Mr. President, I protest against the Senate rushing headlong and revising all of the income-tax laws here on the Senate floor, without at least some consideration of the fact that we have only 3 days in which to do what we propose to do, yet now we are undertaking to revamp and revise the whole income-tax structure.

With reference to the $2,500 exemption, I do not say that on a general tax bill we might not revise somewhat the $2,500 exemption. Take the case of a married man with two or three children: He receives an exemption of $2,500 before he pays any Federal tax. He is now doing just what the man with an exemption of $1,000 is doing. He is paying his taxes on his home, and the myriad of other taxes, and the more children he has the more sales taxes he pays, because the more clothes they wear and the more food they eat.

So, Mr. President, we ought to undo what the Senate has already done. I feel that the Democrats on this side and the sane, conservative, free-thinking Republicans on the other side should sustain the chairman of the committee in this regard, and vote down the entire proposal to revise the tax structure; and when we come back in January I pledge the Senator from Wisconsin that I shall do what I can to have a comprehensive measure presented to the Senate for its consideration. I said when I rose that the Senator from Wisconsin and I usually vote right on tax matters. However, I should like at least to think about the matter for a few minutes before I sock the taxpayers of the United States—how much? How many millions?

Mr. BARKLEY. Three hundred and seventy-eight million dollars.

Mr. CONNALLY. Three hundred and seventy-eight million dollars. Let me see. How long have we been debating this question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The amount is $247,800,000 on the surtax amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. On the one we have already agreed to?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; and $110,000,000 on the pending amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. We have been debating this matter not quite 2 hours, because we had some other business to discuss before we took up this subject. Two hours is 120 minutes, and we get how many million dollars? It is over $300,000,000. That is about $3,000,000 a minute. [Laughter.] At least I believe we ought to think about it longer than 2 hours when we undertake to extract—how much is it? My mind wanders when I get to considering these big figures.

Mr. BARKLEY. Three hundred and eighty-eight million dollars.

Mr. CONNALLY. Three hundred and eighty-eight million dollars—out of the taxpayers' pockets. We have been passing tax laws piecemeal, and so forth, and so on. That is one trouble with the tax laws. Why not wait until next winter, when everyone knows we are going to consider a new tax bill? Why not wait until that time, and then have a comprehensive, well-digested, well-considered measure?

I know that many Senators want to bait the income-tax payers, and it is very tempting to chase them all around with a sharp stick; but when you do it you are chasing the little fellows, too. I desire to suggest to Senators, furthermore, that when we reach a certain point in the collection of these small amounts of income taxes we spend more money collecting them than we get out of the taxes. That will probably happen in the case of some of the $1,000 incomes. A man receiving $1,000 will pay on only a few hundred dollars. He will probably pay a few dollars in tax, and it will probably cost the Government more than it receives to collect the tax.

So, Senators, let us wait until next winter and then pass properly on these matters. Let us not now undertake in this slipshod manner to revise the entire income-tax law structure of the United States.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I am for increasing taxes. I am not only in favor of increasing taxes in the higher brackets but I am in favor of broadening the base of taxation in order that millions of persons who have never had any acquaintance with the Federal tax collector shall in the future become intimately acquainted with him. I have been trying from time to time to warn the Senate that it is inevitable that we shall increase taxes very much more than is involved in the propositions of the Senator from Wisconsin; and I want it done in order that the big fellows and the little fellows, too, may know what we are doing to them here in our fabulous and extravagant expenditures of the public revenues; and when they shall have been brought to a realization of what we are doing to them, they will do something to us. However, I agree with the Senator from Texas, it ought to be done in an orderly way and not in the haphazard way now proposed. For that reason, I voted against the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, but not because I think or could think that we have not got to do something of that kind in a very much more extensive way than he has suggested; not that I think or could think that we have not got to broaden the basis of taxation so as to bring everybody within the range of the tax collector. We have either got to do that or we have got to repudiate the enormous indebtedness of nearly $40,000,000,000 that we have uselessly incurred.

But, as I have said, I shall vote against the pending amendment for the same reason I voted against the other one, with the thought that it all ought to be done at once and in the customary, orderly way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in considering tax bills I have always endeavored to follow the rule which was announced by the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] this morning, that taxes ought to be laid in accordance with ability to pay. I think it can be demonstrated that the pending amendment is in violation of that rule. In fact, it needs no demonstration; it is under present conditions as to the cost of living self-evident.

A family of four or five persons, or a family of two or three persons, in view of the manner in which prices are going up, cannot live upon any decent standard upon an income of $2,500 a year, and if sickness overtakes them, even for a short period of time, they are thrown into debt and deprived of what ought to belong to any citizen who works and labors in the way of a decent standard of living.

We are now proposing to consider a minimum-wage bill. A minimum wage based upon a standard of decent living would give a higher income than the amount which is proposed to be credited to a person under this amendment for the purpose of computing a deduction in income-tax payments.

What is happening is that we are pushing up on the small man with an increase in prices and bearing down on him with an increase of taxes. We are making it impossible for him to live upon a standard which we ought to accord, if it is possible to do so, to every citizen who is trying to earn his living.

One may sit down and take his pencil and figure out the annual living cost, and put meat upon the table twice a week and sugar three or four times a week, and make allowance for the most ordinary kind of clothing, leaving out all question of education, and, under the present increase of prices, it is impossible for a man with an income of $2,500 a year to meet it. The able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] placed in the RECORD a few days ago a statement by Leon Henderson. In that statement we find this comment:

> But I say, with all seriousness, that the rise in retail prices alone has probably nullified the wage gains, and that the prospective rise for the fall of from 5 to 7½ percent, when applied to all workers, will undoubtedly reduce purchasing power, which, as retail sales show, is even now faltering a bit.

So we really get no place if we insist upon reducing the purchasing power of the great mass of the people who have an income of $2,500 a year and less. It reacts against the entire business structure of the country and makes it impossible for an increase of business to occur. Again, Mr. Henderson says:

> This brings me logically to the most important and serious phase of my topic. I mean the complete annihilation of labor's wage gains by higher prices. Workers resist, sometimes at great personal loss, any reduction in money wages or wage rates—yet they offer, and seemingly can offer, no resistance to advancing prices.

So long as prices continue to rise, and through artificial means at that, it cannot be justly assumed that a person with a $2,500 income can take care of a family according to American standards.

It may be that the Government can extract from people in this income group a few dollars more, a little amount here and a little amount there, which, in the sum total, will run up to about $168,000,000, but when that has been done there has been taken something away from the citizen that which he needs in order properly to sustain himself and his family. That is not in accordance with the principle of ability to pay; that is not in accordance with the sound rule which has been announced and to which in my judgment we ought to adhere.

Mr. President, at one time in England there was levied a tax according to the number of windows there were in a house; a man was taxed according to the amount of sunlight which he was permitted to receive in his home. We will have before us in a short time a housing bill, and, whether we design it or not, the houses will be built in accordance with what we think the people who will occupy them will be able to pay to hold them. That will be the design; whether it is practicable or not, I do not now say. A few days ago, however, the Federal Trade Commission submitted a report upon the glass industry to the effect that there was a complete Glass Trust in the United States, and that they were raising prices. So, as a matter of fact, when we build houses for the poor people of this country every window will pay a tribute to the Glass Trust in the United States, instead of to the Government.

Mr. President, the man with a small income of a thousand dollars a year or $2,500 a year has got to meet this constant increase in prices, this constant increase in the cost of living, and in order to do so he must deny himself here and deny himself there and deny his family here and there of actual food or clothing which is needed. It means a great deal to put an extra load upon him, however small it may be, comparatively speaking.

There is another thing, Mr. President, to be taken into consideration. The small man who has an income of $2,500 a year with which to take care of his family is in a position where vicissitudes in his economic life are very constantly occurring these days. Every time he is thrown out of work or every time the storms sweep away his crops he is compelled to draw on any meager savings he may have been able to accumulate with his income of $2,500 a year. The only way in which a person with $2,500 a year can secure even a decent standard of living is upon the present prices of living, and we know that they are constantly rising; we know that they are rising through artificial means; we know that he has a load placed upon him in addition to any taxes through these artificial methods of increasing the cost of living. It seems to me, under such circumstances, signally unjust to place an additional burden upon him.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said that he was in favor of increasing taxes for the small man in order to bring him in contact with the Government of the United States, and that then he would do something to us for what we were doing to him. Well, if he had the power to do to us as we have the power to do to him, he might punish us, but he has not the power to do that.

Mr. GLASS. He has the right to reject our demagogy and act in a sensible way; and when he is taxed, he will take pains in the selection of his United States Senators and his Representatives in the Congress and not send men here who will plunge the Government heels over head in debt and necessitate this taxation of him.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. That was demonstrated in the last campaign. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. No.

Mr. BORAH. The highest spending administration in the history of the Government was overwhelmingly reelected.

Mr. GLASS. The last election was carried by people who were getting favors from the Government, people who were subsidized by the Government, people who were on relief rolls, and people who were sanctioning the invasion of private property and its occupation, as is being done now. We have got no government in Washington and we have got no government in some of the States, because government has surrendered to mob violence.

Mr. BORAH. I was speaking of the last campaign. If we could have a straight tax issue before the people of the United States, we might get somewhere, but campaigns are not fought on the issue of taxation. They are fought entirely upon other issues. The man whom we are going to tax today, with his $2,500 income or his $1,000 income, the way the issue will be made up, will not be permitted to express himself upon the question of whether there should be any more taxes. Besides, if a tax issue should be involved in the campaign, both political parties would agree to reduce taxes, so the man whom we are going to tax has no chance by which to determine how to protect himself.

Mr. GLASS. In that event we will have to agree to repudiate the national debt.

Mr. BORAH. That is a possibility. I do not think it is a probability, but it is a possibility.

Mr. President, what we are proposing to do here is to lower the exemption from $1,000 to $800 with reference to a single individual, and from $2,500 to $2,000 for the man with a family. My contention is that that will take from the persons who have the small incomes the possibility of maintaining themselves upon American standards. It clearly violates the fundamental and just rule that taxes should be levied in accordance with the ability to pay.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have heretofore expressed the hope that the amendment just adopted would not be adopted. I pointed out that it would add confusion to the situation and make it necessary for the joint resolution to go back to the House, that the House would probably send it back to the Ways and Means Committee, and that the adoption of such an amendment under such circumstances is contrary to orderly procedure.

I have no personal interest in this matter at all. I am merely the instrument of the Senate, as chairman of the Finance Committee, to present the matter. I believe, after 26 years of service in the Congress, that it is always better for these matters to be considered in an orderly way and that the committee should give careful consideration to them in the first place. Especially is that true with reference to matters affecting the revenue of the Government. The amendment which has just been adopted changes the whole revenue structure of the Government. It seemed to me it was right for the House to be given the opportunity first to consider the matter since, under the Constitution, revenue legislation must originate over there.

Because of the fact that the taxes covered by the pending measure will expire June 30, if we complicate the measure by the adoption of these amendments, it will delay its passage and the Government may lose at least a part of the $650,000,000 for which the joint resolution provides.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Complaint has been made because the House Ways and Means Committee did not hold extensive hearings on the extension of the excise taxes, and complaint has been made because the Finance Committee of the Senate did not hold hearings on the extension of the excise taxes now in existence. If those who are now paying excise taxes are entitled to be heard before either of those committees, or if either of the committees is subject to just criticism because no hearings were had, would it not be just as unjust and unfair to impose these particular taxes now being asked without giving the taxpayers a chance to be heard?

Mr. HARRISON. The same argument could be employed. The same matter has been presented before the Finance Committee in the past, although not to the committee as at present constituted. It was not discussed very extensively, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] knows. He presented his reasons why the amendment should be approved and we took a vote and his proposal was defeated—not upon its merits, in my opinion, but because we did not believe it is wise to attach such an amendment to the pending joint resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am sure the Senator from Mississippi does not wish to leave the impression that every Senator present in the committee did not well know the effect of the rates contained in the amendment, and did not know all there was to know about them. As a matter of fact, when we hold hearings such as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has referred to, after the hearings are over the committee passes upon the rates which are to be adopted in accordance with the necessity for raising revenue. Rate schedules are not complicated portions of tax bills, and especially is that true of the individual income taxes.

Mr. HARRISON. It is true the Senator from Wisconsin made his statement to the committee, and I have no fault to find. I am merely explaining that I believe that those who voted against his proposal did so largely because they believed the amendment ought not to be placed on the pending joint resolution.

Senators are moved in these matters by various reasons. I am opposed to increasing taxes at this time for several reasons. I believe if taxes are going to be increased the question should be considered by the House first, and that the proposal should originate there, as the Constitution provides.

Certain Senators want to cut down this and that item of taxes. I sympathize a great deal with such desires. For instance, the match producers presented, not to the committee but to individual members, the fact that there is a difference between the tax on the wooden match and the tax on the paper match. They think the two ought to be equalized, but we did not believe it should be done in this measure.

If we opened up the question as it relates to matches, we would have to open it up as it relates to other taxable objects.

The sporting-goods manufacturers presented their brief to the individual members of the committee in behalf of certain changes in the taxes on the articles in which they are interested. However, the committee declined to open up that question because that would have involved opening up the matter of taxes on other articles, and that was something the committee did not want to do at this time. There are at least 20 different items as to which reasonable arguments have been presented to the committee why the taxes should be reduced.

No doubt some Senators voted for the La Follette amendment believing perhaps in that way more money would be raised and some of the taxes carried in the joint resolution could be reduced. One Senator, I know, has the idea of cutting down the postal rate, which would lose $90,000,000 of revenue to the Government. I hope it will not be done.

However, by the action of the Senate in adopting this amendment today, with the little discussion we have had here, I have been deprived of the argument that there ought not to be any more amendments attached to the joint resolution. Since it is my belief that we ought to proceed in a more orderly way, rather than transform our whole revenue structure here upon the floor of the Senate without the House having first considered it, I hope that some Senator who voted for the amendment will see fit to make a motion to reconsider it, and that Senators who voted for it will change their votes so we may proceed in an orderly way without making it necessary for the joint resolution to go back to the House and to the Ways and Means Committee, and thus run the risk of losing a considerable portion of the $650,000,000 of revenue involved.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator just alluded to a proposal to equalize the taxes on matches. I am sure he does not want to leave the impression that the suggestion was to reduce any taxes? The equalization of the taxes on matches would increase the amount of revenue.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not go into details. It is true that the claim is made that the taxes should be increased on paper matches in order to equalize them with the wooden matches.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Senator discussed it in connection with some other matters as to which there were requests for reduction of taxes, and I did not want the situation misunderstood.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true. I cannot argue now that no more amendments should be placed on the joint resolution. As I said, I hope that some Senator who voted for the amendment which has just been adopted will move to reconsider it and that we can have another vote upon the question. Likewise I express the very earnest hope that the pending amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BORAH. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Copeland	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Davis	Lewis	Robinson
Austin	Dieterich	Lodge	Russell
Bailey	Duffy	Logan	Schwartz
Bankhead	Ellender	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Frazier	Lundeen	Shipstead
Black	Gerry	McAdoo	Smathers
Bone	Gillette	McGill	Smith
Borah	Glass	McKellar	Steiwer
Bridges	Green	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Utah

Byrnes	Herring	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Capper	Hitchcock	Overton	White
Caraway	Holt	Pepper
Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Clark	Johnson, Colo.	Pope

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on this amendment, I think it might be well for some member of the Committee on Finance to make a brief statement with respect to what I think, so far as it affects me, is a matter of good faith in reference to all these amendments.

When the House passed the joint resolution extending these taxes, and dealing with no other subject, and the joint resolution came over here, all of us on the committee were approached by different persons asking that we change this tax and that tax, either by repealing it entirely or by modifying it. Not only those interested in watches but those interested in furs and those interested in sporting goods and the representatives of probably a dozen other products taxed under the joint resolution by reason of the extension appealed to the committee and to individual members asking for changes in the rates, or for outright repeal of the taxes imposed. All of us, I am sure—I know I did—advised these persons, some of them from my own State, that it was necessary or urgently desirable not to complicate this mere extension by undertaking to open up the whole tax structure for amendments, or for repeal, or for changes in rates. We were able, I think, to pacify those who were asking for hearings on the ground that this was an extension, and that of necessity the whole subject of the tax structures would be taken up at the next session of the Congress, and I myself do not think there is any way to postpone it beyond the next session of Congress.

I am in sympathy with the objects sought to be effectuated by the Senator from Wisconsin, and in a general tax bill I feel pretty sure he will find me voting with him on these rates and on the reorganization of the tax structure. However, so far as I am concerned, in view of the importunities of large numbers of those who appealed to us for hearing and for reconsideration of some of the existing taxes, and in view of the statement that we were not going to attempt to change these taxes or to go into any other field of taxation, I feel that under the circumstances it is seriously to be doubted whether we are justified in going out into another field, not included in the present tax structure or in this joint resolution, to impose any other taxes at all.

As one member of the Committee on Finance, I feel within the bounds of propriety in assuring Members of the Senate that at the next session of Congress, or at any session subsequent to this, when we go into the whole tax structure, the representations and policy and objectives of the Senator from Wisconsin will be considered; and I have no doubt that in any reorganization of our tax legislation substantially what he is now asking for as an amendment to this joint resolution may be brought into the Senate from the committee, if not from the other House, after due consideration, after giving everybody an opportunity to be heard, and after debating and arguing around the table, where it is always possible to come closer than anywhere else to reaching an amicable and a just decision—the very situation to which the Senator has just alluded.

For that reason I voted against the amendment which the Senator offered awhile ago, and I share the feeling of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that that amendment ought to be reconsidered and eliminated from the joint resolution. For the same reason I am against this amendment; and I hope we may pass the joint resolution and send it to the President without complication.

If the amendment should be adopted and the joint resolution should go back to the House, of course, theoretically it would be easy to send the measure to conference, and it might be easy for the conferees to eliminate the amendment; but instead of sending the joint resolution to conference, they might send it to the Ways and Means Committee for further consideration, and that might prolong the discussion beyond the 1st day of July, when these taxes expire.

For that reason I hope we shall eliminate these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the vote now is about to be taken on the second amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk; and inasmuch as I can probably explain the amendment more briefly than it can be read, I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered without formal reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG's amendment was, after the amendment last agreed to, to insert a new section reading as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) Section 26 of the Revenue Act of 1936, relating to credits of corporations, is amended by adding a new subsection reading as follows:

"(f) Debts:

"(1) An amount of the adjusted net income equal to the amount of the debt excess specified in paragraph (2) divided by the number of years specified in that paragraph (or, if no specification, then by 10).

"(2) If the sum of all the debts computed under paragraph (3) of this subsection is in excess of the accumulated earnings and profits of the corporation as of the day before the first day of its first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1936, and, if the corporation, in its return for such first taxable year specifies the number of consecutive taxable years (not less than 5) over which such debt excess shall be amortized for the purposes of this subsection, then for such number of consecutive taxable years, beginning with such first taxable year (or, if no such specification is made, then for the first 10 taxable years) a debt credit shall be computed as provided in paragraph (1).

"(3) As used in this subsection the term 'debt' means an indebtedness of the corporation existing at the close of business on June 1, 1937, and evidenced by a bond, note, debenture, certificate of indebtedness, mortgage, or deed of trust, issued by the corporation and in existence at the close of business on June 1, 1937, or by a bill of exchange accepted by the corporation prior to and in existence at the close of business on such date; to the following extent:

"(A) If having a maturity at the time of issue of 3 years or more, then to the full amount thereof;

"(B) If having a maturity at the time of issue of less than 3 years, then to the extent shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner (whose decision shall be final) to represent indebtedness incurred by the corporation prior to June 1, 1934; or

"(C) If having a maturity at the time of issue of less than 3 years, then to the extent shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner (whose decision shall be final) to evidence indebtedness of the corporation incurred in the acquisition of capital assets, except (1) shares of stock in any corporation, or (2) rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares, or (3) bonds, debentures, notes, or certificates or other evidences of indebtedness, issued by any corporation, with interest coupons or in registered form, or (4) certificates of profit, or of interest in property or accumulations, in any investment trust or similar organization holding or dealing in any of the instruments mentioned or described in this paragraph, regardless of whether or not such investment trust or similar organization constitutes a corporation within the meaning of this act.

"(4) This subsection shall not be applied in any case in which such application would operate to increase the tax which would be payable without its application, and, if subsection (c) applies also, only the one of such subsections which allows the greater credit shall be applied.

"(5) Every corporation shall accompany its return for such first taxable year with an itemized list (prepared in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary) of the bonds, notes, and other instruments which it claims evidence indebtedness coming within the meaning of the term 'debt' as defined in subsection (a). For the purposes of this subsection no debt shall be included in computing debts under paragraph (1) unless the instrument evidencing such debt is included in such list."

(b) Section 14 (a) (2) of the Revenue Act of 1936 is amended to read as follows:

"The term 'undistributed net income' means the adjusted net income minus the sum of the dividends paid credit provided in section 27, the credit provided in section 26 (c), relating to contracts restricting dividends, and the credit provided in section 26 (f), relating to debts."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, will he permit a motion to be made before he offers his amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I prefer to proceed with this amendment before a vote is taken on the other matter.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator's amendment a long one?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is four pages long, and very technical; and I think probably the explanation will suffice to acquaint the Senate with its contents.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to provide a minimum measure of relief from what I believe is now universally recognized to be the excessive burden of the Revenue Act of 1936 with respect to the tax on undistributed profits.

I doubt if there is today any disagreement that in the form in which the undistributed-profits tax was finally adopted, it not only has worked an inequitable hardship but it involves a very serious threat to the maintenance particularly of small industry in this country.

Before I explain the amendment itself, I desire to say that textually it is almost precisely in the language which the House itself wrote into the undistributed-profits tax law last year, and which the Senate eliminated. Therefore we are offering no affront to the House, even by indirection, when we now confess that the Senate erred 1 year ago when it declined to put into the undistributed-profits bill the precise language which I am now offering by way of amendment. The precise language which I am offering had complete consideration in the House, and was adopted. It had complete consideration in the Senate, and was rejected. It is not subject to the complaint that it has not been debated. It is not subject to the attack that it should originate in the House rather than in the Senate, because it originated in the House in the first instance.

I may add that technically I have submitted the amendment to the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and in its pending form it has the approval of the staff insofar as its mechanics is concerned. I desire to make it clear that I am not undertaking to commit the staff to the purpose of the amendment or to the equities involved.

I think I can dispose of the matter most quickly if I read a brief statement of explanation regarding the amendment itself.

The amendment which I propose to the joint resolution is designed to correct, at least to a considerable extent, one of the major inequities brought about by the new undistributed-profits tax as levied by the Revenue Act of 1936. This law, as now existing, puts a tremendous tax penalty on corporations who are trying to pay their honest debts. The amendment which I propose aims to give relief, under certain limitations, from the undistributed-profits tax in respect to amounts used for the retirement of indebtedness.

It is true that under existing law a corporation receives certain credits from the undistributed-profits tax when it has a written agreement not to pay dividends or when it has a written agreement to devote a certain proportion of its current earnings and profits to the payment of debts. However, these situations are unusual and operate to give relief in very few cases, although there is equal justice in giving relief in many other cases where debts exist.

The amendment has been designed, as I have previously stated, to give only limited relief. This is because of a desire to protect the revenue. I realize that this is necessary, because the total indebtedness of corporations is approximately $60,000,000,000, and to allow a full deduction for all amounts paid on all debts would undoubtedly seriously affect the revenue. I do not claim, of course, that my amendment will not theoretically reduce the revenue, but I do not believe that the mathematical reduction will exceed $25,000,000. Moreover, I believe the indirect effect of the amendment will be to encourage business and to stimulate expansion, so that in the long run I believe the revenue will be benefited, instead of adversely affected. That is not only my own judgment but it is the judgment of those official experts with whom I have consulted.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the Senator propose to quote these experts? Are they meddling in legislation? If they are, I should like to know their names.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to state expressly——

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator at first said the experts approved the mechanics. Now he says these experts—and he uses it as an argument—tell him that the proposal will get the revenue, and get more revenue, perhaps. I want to know who these experts are who are seeking to advise the Senate, not in a committee hearing but in secret around here.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would the Senator question my right as a member of the Committee on Finance to ask the staff of the joint committee to make an estimate for me with respect to a hypothetical case?

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is all I am talking about.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the Senator is employing what they told him as an argument for his amendment. I do not want to be rough about it, but it does seem to me that if we start that kind of practice here, every time we have a bill before us we will be quoting some little fellow in some department as being for it. These gentlemen should go before the committee in a hearing and publicly state their position.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not propose to have the Senator from Texas put any words in my mouth which did not originate there.

Mr. CONNALLY. There were plenty there without my adding any.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; and when the Senator undertakes to multiply them, he frequently multiplies them in a fashion which is not acceptable. Just before he sat down he complained that these experts were being quoted as favoring legislation. I specifically stated, and it would be a great injustice to the staff of the joint committee to have it otherwise understood, that they specifically declined to recommend anything, and have only responded to my rightful inquiry as a member of the Committee on Finance for advice respecting the purely mechanical phases of the problem.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the RECORD may be read, it will be found that the Senator from Texas did not undertake to misquote the Senator from Michigan. What the Senator from Michigan said was that this amendment, by stimulating business and industry, according to his opinion, would produce more revenue than we were getting now. The Senator from Michigan does not question that, does he?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; that is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. And he says it is also the view of these experts whom he has consulted.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Which is a mechanical calculation, which I am entitled to ask for.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas then said that the Senator was using that as an argument for his amendment. That is all I said. I think the RECORD will so show. I did not say he quoted them as favoring it. I said the Senator from Michigan was using that statement as an argument for his amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sorry, but the Senator will find, when he reads the RECORD, because I listened very carefully, that his concluding statement was precisely in the form I have quoted.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did say that if they were making recommendations I wanted to know it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am saying they made no recommendations, and that they were within their rights, and that I am within my rights, and that I shall continue to consult the staff just so long as I am a member of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONNALLY. I commend that in the Senator. The more consultation he has with the staff the better off he will be.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; but I shall not seek the consent of the Senator from Texas before I do it.

The amendment which I propose is not new. It is very nearly the same as the provision carried in the revenue bill of 1936 when it passed the House of Representatives. The House saw the necessity for giving relief to debt-ridden corporations, and provided for such relief in practically the same way as is now proposed in my amendment. Unfortunately, when the bill was ultimately enacted into law, this feature of the House bill was discarded.

Let me explain my amendment more in detail.

In the first place, we define debt in paragraph (3) for the purposes of this provision as the indebtedness of a corporation existing at the close of business on June 1, 1937, and evidenced by a bond, note, debenture, certificate of indebtedness, mortgage, or deed of trust, issued by the corporation and in existence at the close of business on June 1, 1937, with the following limitations:

(1) The debt must have had a maturity at time of issue of 3 years or more; or (2), if it had a maturity at time of issue of less than 3 years then to the extent that it represents indebtedness incurred by the corporation prior to June 1, 1934. (This is to take care of short-term indebtedness which has been continuously renewed.) Or (3), if it had a maturity at time of issue of less than 3 years then to the extent that the indebtedness was incurred in the acquisition of capital assets, such as plant, machinery, and so forth, excluding shares of stock, bonds, notes, and so forth.

Thus, it is seen that we have very considerably restricted the amounts of debts which will be taken into account in giving corporations relief. In the first place, the debt must have been in existence on June 1, 1937. This limitation is deemed necessary in order to prevent future tax avoidance by the creation of unnecessary debts. Second, we have in general taken care only of long-term indebtedness having a maturity at time of issue of 3 years or more. Where we do take account of short-term debts, we take care of such debts only where they really represent a debt of more than 3 years' standing or where they represent an investment in plant, machinery, and so forth.

Having arrived at a basis for the debts which we will take into account, we proceed to further limit the relief. This is done by the wording in paragraphs (1) and (2). In the first place, a corporation cannot get the debt relief which I propose unless its debts exceed its accumulated earnings and profits; that is to say, unless they exceed its surplus. In the second place, a corporation must amortize these debts over a series of not less than 5 years. A corporation may amortize over a longer period if it so desires, but in any event it cannot reduce its net income which is subject to the undistributed-profits tax in any one year by more than 20 percent of the total amount of its debts.

Thus we arrive at the result that a debt-ridden corporation with insufficient surplus to meet its debts can subtract from its adjusted net income which is subject to the undistributed-profits tax an amount equal to 20 percent of its debts. No relief is proposed in respect to the normal tax on corporations.

The amendment does not go nearly as far as I would wish, but in view of the present financial situation of the Government I have felt it wise to propose the amendment in essentially the same form in which it was contained in the House bill of last year. The loss of revenue will be relatively small. I believe the amendment will take care of the hardest cases.

Moreover, I believe it to be imperative that action be taken at this time in order to protect our debt-ridden corporations and to allow them to pay their honest debts without incurring a surtax penalty running up to 27 percent. I do not see how we can possibly justify the present situation. This amendment will affect only the hard cases and will be of no benefit to the big corporation with a huge surplus which may happen to have some bonded indebtedness.

I realize that there are other improvements which should be made to the undistributed profits tax law. Undoubtedly, we should take care of corporations with deficits and also make some provision so that a corporation could make necessary plant expansion, thus creating employment. However, I believe the situation of the debt-ridden corporation to be the most serious of all, and, therefore, I am limiting myself to the debt-relief proposal at this time, to which proposal I can see no logical objection.

Mr. President, to show the calculation and the prospectus under this amendment, I ask that the example which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A corporation on December 31, 1936, had a surplus of $10,000. It had outstanding a 10-year bond issue of $100,000 maturing on December 31, 1937. During 1937 the corporation had a net income of $100,000. It used this money to pay off its bond issue on December 31, 1937. Under existing law, the tax on the corporation would be as follows:

Normal tax	$13,840.00
Undistributed-profits tax	17,662.80
Total tax	31,502.80

Under my amendment and the same set of facts the tax would be as follows:

Normal tax (as before)	$13,840.00
Undistributed-profits tax	12,802.80
Total tax	26,642.80

Thus, through the amendment, this debt-ridden corporation will have its tax reduced by $4,860 and will pay an aggregate tax rate of about 26½ percent instead of the 31½ percent under existing law. It will also be allowed to take off one-fifth of the debt credit allowable in each one of the following 4 years. Surely this is not too great relief.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in conclusion.

A critical situation exists in the small industries of the United States in respect to the final burden of the undistributed-profits tax. I think that is universally recognized. We may say that we will wait another year before we remedy it; but if we wait another year before we remedy it, we shall have put a tombstone over the grave of many a small industry which cannot survive under the existing circumstances.

The undistributed-profits tax was an assault upon thrift and prudence. It was an attack upon the reserves upon which in time of depression industry must depend in order to provide employment. It was a serious innovation. I am seeking to correct it only at the final point where it is utterly insufferable in respect to the small debt-ridden corporations of the country.

I remind the Senate again that this is not my amendment. It is the amendment which the House of Representatives, in its own wisdom, thought it essential and wise to insert into the undistributed-profits tax law in the first instance; and we are but now notifying the House that we belatedly agree.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have been very much in sympathy with some modifications in the tax structure which we passed last year. I have many times talked about them to those in authority. The Treasury Department, as well as our joint committee experts, are now trying to work out some plans.

As the Senate will recall, the President in his recent message said:

> In regard to that subject I have already suggested to the Congress that at this session there should be no new taxes and no changes of rates. And I have indicated to the Congress that the Treasury will be prepared by next November to present to the appropriate committees information on the basis of which the Congress may, if it chooses, undertake revisions of the tax structure.

So we are working on this matter. I hope we may have a modification of the law to suggest at some future date, and that the time will not be too remote.

I do not think amendment should be placed on the pending joint resolution, and I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the technical application of the corporation surplus tax is far beyond the understanding of the average person. Indeed, the disappointment found among Treasury officials today might seem to indicate that it has proven to be too difficult even for experts to understand. The mysteries of taxation as of the present time are so involved that they constitute a menace to our popular institutions of government; and among all the tax measures of which I have any knowledge the corporation surplus tax set in operation last year is in this respect "exhibit A." The rates of this tax have been so multifarious and cumbersome that no citizen lacking professorial distinction in mathematics has been able even so much as to examine the law.

This tax measure relates to more than 500,000 corporations in this country. The corporate structure has become the industrial structure of the Nation. Corporations pay gross taxes of $2,800,000,000 annually, and thus provide an important source for Government revenue. Bernhard Ostrolenk is authority for the statement that 504,000 corporations filed income-tax returns in 1933. Of these, only 594 had assets of $50,000,000 or more, and 211,586 had assets of less than $50,000. Of all corporations, only one-tenth of 1 percent were big corporations and 42 percent were relatively small enterprises. Ordinarily, two-thirds of all corporations earn less than $5,000 annually. Therefore it must be apparent that most corporations are virtually one-man or small-scale enterprises.

Mr. President, there are 200 large nonfinancial corporations, consisting of 42 railroads, 52 utilities, and 106 industrial enterprises which in 1933 controlled almost two-fifths of all business wealth and almost one-fifth of all the wealth in the United States. But while these large corporations own and control an important part of the Nation's wealth they in turn are owned by a large section of the public. There are not less than 5,000,000 different owners of corporate securities. Although ownership of corporate wealth is so widely held the control of these great corporations is concentrated in a few hands. Circumstances, supported by complex legal devices, have brought about a situation whereby management has been dissociated from ownership; whereby those in control frequently are secure in their operations, irrespective of the wishes of the great majority of stockholders. This condition has both advantages and disadvantages with respect to the public welfare and is not subject to a quick word either of commendation or of criticism.

Mr. President, in the light of these facts we observe an attempt to direct public attention to a few persons, representing a small class, who apparently are to become the targets of administration wrath because the Government's revenues have been curtailed. Such a maneuver at the present moment of general embarrassment may justly be regarded as having a psychological advantage. Someone must be the "goat." Last year, speaking on this subject, I said of this measure that it would increase tax litigation, as it would mean more tax complexities. Within less than 12 months this prediction has been fulfilled.

If this were the only difficulty born of this measure, it might be endured. However, objections to it have been raised on every hand. Many have asserted that it will raise the peaks of Federal revenue in years of prosperity, and deepen the valleys in years of depression; that it will halt the accumulation of reserves by those corporations which should retain such of their earnings as may be necessary in order to build up working capital or provide for expansion and growth; favor the well-established, fully financed corporations at the expense of the smaller industries; hamper the capital-goods industries whose progress depends largely upon the availability of capital in the hands of other industries; substitute public control for private management in important fiscal operations of business; arrest the establishment and development of new enterprises; place an unfair burden on corporations engaged in long-term business and place small corporations with impaired credit at a great disadvantage, forcing them to borrow. Not being able to borrow from the banks, they will be forced to turn to the ever-growing paternalism of the Government.

These are the objections voiced by small businessmen, rather than by the few who soon will be haled before an investigating committee because of their vast holdings.

This measure was passed under high pressure last year. It was quite generally conceded at the time that in point of difficulty of application and calculation of its uncertain levies, the measure was intricate, complicated, and in structure a distinct departure from any preceding revenue measure. Today it remains, as it was then dubbed, "The Mystic Maze."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the first amendment offered by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was agreed to. I am in entire sympathy with the object sought to be attained by the amendment; but after listening to the statement of the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I think the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is not the proper way to reach the objective.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Holt	Pepper
Andrews	Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Ashurst	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pope
Austin	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bailey	Davis	Lee	Robinson
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lewis	Russell
Barkley	Ellender	Lodge	Schwartz
Black	Frazier	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Bone	Gerry	Lundeen	Shipstead
Borah	Gillette	McAdoo	Smathers
Brown, Mich.	Glass	McGill	Smith
Bulkley	Green	McKellar	Steiwer
Bulow	Hale	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Harrison	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hatch	Moore	Truman
Byrnes	Hayden	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Herring	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Caraway	Hitchcock	Overton	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was adopted. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and its transfer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], I vote "nay."

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. LOGAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. LOGAN] is absent from the Chamber on an important matter. He has a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I understand that if present he would vote as I am about to vote. Therefore, I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. FRAZIER. I announce that my colleague [Mr. NYE], who is necessarily absent, is paired on this vote with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay"; and I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. MCKELLAR. Making the same announcement as to my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and its transfer that I made awhile ago, I vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who is detained in a committee hearing, is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. I am not advised how either Senator would vote if present.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in committee meetings.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—45

Adams	Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Andrews	Clark	Johnson, Colo.	Pope

So Mr. TRUMAN's motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of Mr. LA FOLLETTE was agreed to was reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE.]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). Announcing my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], and being advised he would vote as I intend to vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. LOGAN's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is unavoidably absent. He has a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is necessarily absent. He is paired on this vote with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If present, my colleague [Mr. NYE] would vote "yea", and I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH]. Were he present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is detained in a committee hearing. He has a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

Mr. MCKELLAR. Making the same announcement as before with respect to my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and its transfer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], I vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] are detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained in committee meetings.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—29

Andrews	Frazier	Lundeen	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Gerry	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I assume the last two votes indicate that the Senate does not want to place any amendment on the pending joint resolution. I cannot assume that Senators were really voting on the merits of the amendment.

Earlier in the day I submitted an amendment dealing with the subject of tax-exempt securities and had intended to offer it in case there was any disposition to deal with the question upon a broad scale. However, I have concluded, in view of the vote just had, that it would be useless to urge it, and so I shall not do so. I can see no hope of doing anything with it. I ask, however, to have the amendment printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BORAH was, at the end of the joint resolution, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Section 22 (b) (4) of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to tax-free interest) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917 (other than postal-savings certificates of deposit), and in the case of obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, the interest shall be exempt—

"(1) Only if such obligations were issued or reissued prior to the date of enactment of the Excise Tax Act of 1937; and

"(2) Only if and to the extent provided in the respective acts authorizing the issue thereof, as amended and supplemented; and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title."

(b) Section 25 (a) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to interest on United States obligations) is amended by inserting after the words "United States" the words "issued or reissued prior to the enactment of the Excise Tax Act of 1937."

(c) Section 25 (a) (2) of the Revenue Act of 1936 (relating to interest on obligations of instrumentalities of the United States) is amended by inserting after the words "normal tax" a semicolon and the following: "and (D) such obligations were issued or reissued prior to date of enactment of the Excise Tax Act of 1937."

SEC. 3. This joint resolution may be cited as the "Excise Tax Act of 1937."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 6, beginning with the word "section", it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 2, on page 2, as follows:

Section 1001 (a), as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes", approved June 16, 1933, are further amended by striking out "1937" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1939."

Mr. RUSSELL. In 1932, in a desperate effort to secure needed revenue, the Congress hastily enacted a law imposing what are known as nuisance taxes. Among the nuisance taxes was included an increase in the cost of postage stamps on ordinary letters from the time-honored rate of 2 cents to a rate of 3 cents. This represents a tax increase of 50 percent on every person who mails a letter in the United States. It is my personal view that this was an unjust and unscientific method of raising revenue, and the authors of the bill did not undertake to justify it except on the grounds of imperative necessity for revenue at the time the bill was passed.

These taxes, including the 50-percent increase in the price of postage stamps, have been extended from time to time. Some of them are not so irksome, but to my mind the fact that it costs 3 cents instead of 2 to mail an ordinary letter is one of the most irritating reminders of the Hoover administration. It is very apparent that the continued extension of these nuisance taxes will only delay the date when we may hope to have a thorough revision of our entire tax system so as to carry out the pledge of the Democratic platform, which pledges us to levy taxes only in accord with the ability of the taxpayer to pay.

It is a source of deep regret to me that the President in his message on this question has seen fit to specifically recommend to the Congress that we should pass a bill which would extend the 3-cent charge for postage stamps for 2 years beyond the expiration of the present law. I yield to no man in this body in my respect for and confidence in the President of the United States. It is always a pleasure to be able to agree with him in all legislation which he sees fit to suggest, but I cannot agree with him in this instance that we should continue this tax of 50 percent upon the people of the United States who purchase postage stamps. It is unscientific and not based on the ability of the taxpayer to pay. It is as heavy on the poor who are compelled to use the mails as it is on the rich. It is my earnest conviction that the people of the country should be relieved of this burden and that, now that the worst of the emergency is over, the 2-cent rate of postage should be allowed to come about on the 1st of July of this year, as it will under existing law if this part of the recommendation of the President be rejected by the Congress.

The purpose of my amendment is to strike from the joint resolution that provision which would continue the 3-cent postage on first-class matter for the next 2 years.

Due to the depleted condition of the Treasury, I fully realize the impelling reasons for increased revenue at this time. I appreciate the attitude of the Senate against any changes whatever, be they merely changes in verbiage, in the joint resolution. In spite of these circumstances, I think we should return to 2-cent postage on first-class matter.

Mr. President, at the present time first-class mail revenue, largely derived from 3-cent postage, is paying for the deficit arising from the carriage of all the other classes of mail matter by the Post Office Department. We have heard a great deal about subsidies to those who carry the mails. A Senate committee investigation developed some bad practices which did not reflect any credit upon the Post Office Department, which disclosed the fact that in some instances as much as $50 or $60 was paid for the transporting of one letter by a ship.

In the case of the 3-cent postage now in effect, I submit it really amounts to an indirect subsidy to the publishers of newspapers and magazines and to those who mail parcel-post packages, because the difference in the profits of the Post Office Department, as disclosed by the cost-ascertainment report, is shown to equal almost to the dollar the amount of the loss that is involved in carrying newspapers and magazines.

Mr. President, we have had a number of implied assurances that we would go back to the 2-cent postage rate at the earliest possible moment. Only twice in the history of the Republic has there been a tax levied upon the right to send letters through the mails. Once was during the War of 1812. The other time was during the World War. Only on two occasions, when the Nation was faced with a great emergency or crisis, have we imposed this tax upon stamps and upon the right of the people of the United States to use the mails.

I submit that the condition of the country today cannot justify the continuance of this tax. It is paid by those in this country whose voices are seldom heard in these halls. I was glad to see the abolition of the tax which was levied upon cashing checks at the banks. I was glad that the time had come when we could afford to do away with that source of income to our Treasury; but this was done under pressure from the banking group. That tax fell upon a smaller class of citizens than does the tax which increased from 2 cents to 3 cents the rate of postage upon first-class mail, which is used by rich and poor alike in this land.

We have no way of knowing whether or not a reduction of the first-class rate to the normal rate of 2 cents will decrease the revenues of the Post Office Department. It is an established fact that there are today many concerns, particularly large utilities that have a wide operation in many cities, that are sending out their statements to the various towns by trucks, and having them delivered by hand, rather than pay the 3-cent postage rate. I venture to say that if the 2-cent rate on first-class mail were restored, no very large loss in revenue would result, because of the increase that would take place in the sending of mail.

I hope the amendment may be accepted.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia what the reduction in revenue would be if his amendment should be adopted?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no direct figures on that subject. It has been estimated that it would be somewhere between $80,000,000 and $90,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the amount.

Mr. RUSSELL. I submit, however, that it is impossible to tell whether there will be any reduction, because of the fact that at the lower rate the mail will be more widely used.

I have just pointed out that today, in many cases, those who were formerly large users of the mail are sending their statements of account, or other matter that ordinarily goes through the mail, by truck or by parcel post to its destination, where it is delivered by hand. If there should be a material increase in the use of the mails as a result of the reduction in postage, there would be no loss whatever in revenue.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am sure the entire Senate wishes very much the time would come when it could reduce the first-class postage rate from 3 cents to 2 cents; but the President in his message has asked that the present rate be continued, and there is in the record a letter from the Postmaster General saying it is absolutely necessary that the present rate be continued unless there is to be a deficit of $90,000,000 in the postal receipts.

I hope, therefore, the amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which is pending. I offer the amendment and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. That effective on the date of enactment of this act, section 601 (c) (6) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: Provided, That in determining board measure, no deduction shall be made on account of planing, tonguing, and grooving, as provided in paragraph 401 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as interpreted and applied by the Bureau of Customs and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury prior to and in effect on November 15, 1935. As used in this paragraph, the term 'lumber' includes timber."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I do not wish to take long on this amendment. The Senator in charge of the joint resolution has advised me that it is the sincere desire of the administration not to have amendments added to the measure, and apparently the Senator has been very successful in keeping them off.

It will be observed that this amendment has to do with an interpretation by the Customs Bureau in the matter of lumber imports into the United States; and, if I may take just a moment to explain it, I think that will be sufficient to enlighten Senators as to the purpose of the amendment.

Due to a court decision, which I think was very unfortunate, the Customs Bureau now uses two different methods to determine the board measure of lumber imported into this country. The amendment would establish a single method, which is the ordinary method used in lumber measurement. Canada assesses duty on lumber imports on the basis of the original rough board measure. That is identically the basis of measurement which is sought by this amendment.

The practice suggested here is followed by Canadian customs offices, and this practice was followed by customs offices in the United States until, in the Myers case, the court reached what I think was a rather absurd and illogical conclusion, wherein it laid down the rule which required one kind of measurement to assess the tariff on lumber, and another kind of measurement to assess on lumber the excise tax which we fixed in the excise bill of several years ago. The result of the Myers decision is to base the excise tax on approximately 82 percent of the total amount of the dressed lumber. The tariff duty is paid on the entire amount.

The standard grading rules for eastern Canadian spruce lumber provide for measurement on the basis of rough green lumber without reductions on account of planing, tonguing, and grooving. This amendment would not change the financial aspects of the joint resolution at all. It would merely define in a legislative way the regulations which the Customs Bureau should apply to lumber coming into the United States, both under the tariff and under our excise law.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BONE. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ascertain whether the effect of this definition would be to raise or lower the excise taxes or to raise or lower the tariff taxes on lumber coming into the United States.

Mr. BONE. I do not think it would affect the tariff at all. There is a double basis here for assessment of the excise taxes.

Mr. WHITE. I suppose any method of measurement must have relation to the tariff.

Mr. BONE. It does, in a way.

Mr. WHITE. Would the Senator's proposal result in a higher or a lower duty being paid by importers?

Mr. BONE. I think it might have a tendency to raise the amount actually collected on dressed lumber. It would follow the practice of the Canadian authorities in assessing the import duty on lumber, and it would also follow the tariff practice.

Mr. WHITE. If it would increase the duty, I should be entirely content with the amendment; but if it would result in a reduction of duty, I should be opposed to it.

Mr. BONE. It certainly would not lower the duty. It simply provides that where tonguing and grooving and finishing are part of the lumber that is imported, those importing it shall pay on the basis of the rough lumber.

I do not think it is necessary to make any further statement about the amendment. I have talked to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in charge of the joint resolution, and he has expressed to me a desire not to have this amendment adopted. I do not know whether or not he has changed his mind.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Washington that I am very much interested in this suggestion, so much so that I talked with three of the ranking members of the House Ways and Means Committee in regard to it; and I very much hope they will take up the proposal over there. I trust, however, it will not be adopted as a part of this joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375), as passed, is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That title IV, as amended, and parts I, II, III, and IV, of title V, as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, are further amended by striking out "1937" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1939." Section 1001 (a), as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes", approved June 16, 1933, are further amended by striking out "1937" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1939."

AUTHORITY TO APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE TO SUBMIT REPORTS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to follow this session, the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to submit reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes on Monday next, it proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6692) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, Mr. DOCKWEILER, Mr. TERRY, Mr. STARNES, Mr. COLLINS, Mr. POWERS, and Mr. ENGEL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7589) to levy an excise tax upon carriers and certain other employers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 3687. An act to extend the period during which the purposes specified in section 7 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act may be carried out by payments by the Secretary of Agriculture to producers;

H. R. 6551. An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7328. An act to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484), and for other purposes;

H. R. 7519. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935;

H. J. Res. 380. Joint resolution to provide for the publication and sale by the Northwest Territory Celebration Commission of certain historical and educational material; and

H. J. Res. 415. Joint resolution making an appropriation to defray expenses incident to the dedication of chapels and other World War memorials erected in Europe, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7589) to levy an excise tax upon carriers and certain other employers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ENLARGEMENT OF YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

Mr. McADOO. With the permission of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 5394, Calendar No. 809, providing for the acquisition, for addition to the Yosemite National Park, of approximately 7,000 acres of sugar-pine trees, a matter upon which the Senate heretofore has favorably passed. The amendment reported by the committee would result in making the House bill conform to the bill heretofore passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, is this the bill which has been passed by the House and has recently been reported from the committee in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The House bill has now been taken up for action.

The clerk will state the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was to strike out section 2 as printed in the bill and in lieu thereof to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable—otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, on behalf of the United States under any fund or moneys available for such purpose, at the time of the passage of this act, except from the general fund of the Treasury, any of the following-described lands in the State of California now in private ownership, to wit: Section 25, lots 3, 4, 5, 8, and 9, section 34, northeast quarter, southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, lots 1 to 10, inclusive, section 35, section 36, township 1 south, range 19 east; southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, southeast quarter, lots 2, 3, and 4, section 30, section 31, township 1 south, range 20 east; sections 1, 2, and 3, east half section 10, sections 11 and 12, north half section 14, northeast quarter section 15, township 2 south, range 19 east; southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, lots 3 to 7, inclusive, section 6, township 2 south, range 20 east, Mount Diablo meridian.

SEC. 2. When title to the aforesaid privately owned lands has been vested in the United States, all of the lands described in section 1 hereof shall be added to and become a part of the Yosemite National Park and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any valid existing rights.

SEC. 3. The provisions of the act approved June 10, 1920, as amended, known as the Federal Water Power Act, shall not apply to any of the lands added to the Yosemite National Park pursuant to the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GRAND LAKE-BIG THOMPSON PROJECT

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2681, being Calendar No. 793.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may we understand what the bill is? Let it be read by title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2681) to authorize the construction of the Grand Lake-Big Thompson transmountain water-diversion project as a Federal reclamation project.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment of the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on line 4, page 1, to strike out the words "Grand Lake" and insert the word "Colorado", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to construct the Colorado-Big Thompson transmountain water-diversion project, in the State of Colorado, as a reclamation project in accordance with the plan set forth in Senate Document No. 80, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session.

SEC. 2. That there is authorized to be appropriated and expended from the reclamation funds the sum necessary to construct such project. That the cost of said project shall be repaid to the reclamation funds and said project shall be constructed under the conditions and in accordance with the provisions of the Reclamation Act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to submit an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 5, before the word "project" to strike out "transmountain water diversion."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after the word "session", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the construction of said project shall not be commenced until the repayment of the cost thereof shall have been assured, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, by appropriate contracts (a) with irrigation districts or water users' association organized under the laws of the State of Colorado, or with water-conservancy districts organized under Colorado house bill no. 714, approved May 13, 1937, or (b) with one or more of such districts or associations, as the said Secretary may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber. What is the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill to authorize the construction of the Grand Lake-Big Thompson transmountain diversion project as a Federal reclamation project.

Mr. McNARY. It is a bill on the calendar, reported by the committee favorably?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes. In order to save the time of the Senate, I should like to have printed as a part of my remarks the short report of the committee giving the substance of the bill and the details for the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report (No. 775) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2681, being a bill to authorize the construction of the Grand Lake-Big Thompson transmountain water-diversion project as a Federal reclamation project, having been referred to the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, was carefully considered by that committee and is now reported to the Senate with the recommendation that the bill be passed.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended in order to describe the project in accordance with the designation of the Interior Department that in line 4, page 1, the words "Grand Lake" be stricken out and the word "Colorado" inserted in lieu thereof.

The committee further recommend for the same purpose the title of the bill be amended by striking out the words "Grand Lake" and inserting the word "Colorado."

COLORADO-BIG THOMPSON RECLAMATION PROJECT

The project, the construction of which this bill seeks to authorize, has been surveyed and studied with great care by the Reclamation Service and full and elaborate reports, plans, designs, and detailed estimates have been made. A summary of the nature and character of the project is set forth in Senate Document No. 80 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, which document is referred to the bill for the purpose of describing the project.

In the synopsis of the report of the Colorado-Big Thompson project, filed with the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior, it is stated:

"The pioneer settlers in this western area came here originally to find gold. Large numbers, when they did not find it, drifted on to other "diggings." A few saw the possibilities of the combination of land and irrigation water to produce foodstuffs needed by the gold miner and gold seeker. While their income was not as speculative, it was far more certain. Others encouraged by the example of these earlier pioneers followed in their footsteps until in the year of highest gold production, 1900, the total mineral production of the State was $50,614,000, while her total agriculture amounted to only $25,500,000. In the year 1916, however, the mineral production was $49,200,000 and the products of agriculture amounted to $75,300,000.

"This project is in need of supplemental water not because of land exploitating for speculation, but through the gradual change to a more permanent type of agriculture requiring more and later water, and to the gradual diminishing stream flow over the last 16-year period.

"It is not the object of this project to bring new lands under cultivation but to stabilize and make secure the production on lands already now under the irrigation system which are provided with inadequate water supplies.

"There are 175,000 people living within the boundaries of this project, a greater portion of whom derive their livelihood either directly or indirectly from the irrigated lands and the attending industries. The counties of Boulder, Larimer, Weld, Morgan, Logan, Sedgwick, and the portion of Washington County that is irrigated, in 1936 had an assessed valuation of $186,000,000 which does not include the $34,239,000 that has been put into their irrigation systems, which are not taxable.

"This area feed-lot fattens about one-fourth of all the sheep and one-eleventh of all the cattle in the United States, and during the 10-year period, in addition to the crop raised and fed in the area, an average of $3,500,000 per year was spent outside the area for fattening feeds, mostly for corn from the Middle West and cottonseed from the South.

"Because this project is now well settled, having developed its necessary institutions that make up a going social and economic state, it has the following outstanding features:

"The annual losses in crop value now due to lack of supplemental water measures one-sixth of the cost of this project.

"The agricultural and livestock resources are developed to their highest degree with water available.

"The supplemental water supply is adequate and dependable. There would be one season's requirements stored in advance of use.

"There would be an increase in tax income for both State and Nation.

"The area affords ample security for repayment.

"Adequate protection is provided for water users on the Colorado River.

"Greater social stability is assured through increased income due to the reduction in drought hazards and higher-priced crops.

"The cost of this project is insignificant when compared to the wealth created for the generations to come.

"In time the mineral wealth of this great State will be exhausted but her lands, if properly farmed, and her waters, if properly conserved, will be an ever-increasing means for the production of wealth and social security for all her people."

The engineers of the Reclamation Service in their report make the following statement in reference to the effect of the construction of this project upon the Rocky Mountain National Park:

"Every effort has been made in the survey and design of this project to not disturb the natural beauties of the Rocky Mountain National Park and its surrounding areas. The Continental Divide tunnel was lengthened 1.6 miles in order that its extremities should fall outside the boundaries of the park. The conduit leading from the east portal of the tunnel to power plant no. 1 is to be buried and the surface landscaped, through the area authorized by Congress to be added to the park. The waste from the east portal of the tunnel placed in this area is to be terraced and planted with evergreen trees. The waste from the west portal is to be used to fill up some low areas and render the area suitable for the building of summer homes.

"The approach to the western gateway of the Rocky Mountain National Park will be along the shores of Shadow Mountain Lake with its fluctuation of only 1 foot instead of the swampy area that now breeds mosquitoes and exposes mud flats in low water.

"The bill authorizing the creation of the Rocky Mountain National Park reserved the right for the Bureau of Reclamation to survey and construct an irrigation project within the boundaries on the park."

It may be added to what has been said by the engineers in their report that this project will deprive the Rocky Mountain National Park of no water whatsoever. The major portion of the water to be diverted by the project falls outside of the park area and that portion which falls within the park is only diverted from streams after they have left the boundaries of the park on their way to the Gulf of California. The tunnel through which the water is carried will be on an average several thousand feet below the surface of the park. The tunnel will pass through solid granite rocks of the Continental Divide. It will not, therefore, be observable nor will it have any effect upon any part or aspect of the park surface.

The report of the Bureau of Reclamation upon this project closes with the following conclusions:

"(1) There is a large area (615,000 acres) of irrigated land in northeastern Colorado, the major portion of which has an inadequate water supply.

"(2) The feasible storage possibilities with the available water supply in the drainage area have been exhausted.

"(3) There is at least an available water supply of 310,000 acre-feet on the upper drainage area of the Colorado River that can be diverted to supplement the present water supply on the eastern slope.

"(4) That the diversion of this quantity of water from the Colorado River watershed will not interfere with or encroach upon the present or future irrigation along the Colorado River and tributaries within the State with the protection provided in the Green Mountain Reservoir.

"(5) That the plan for the project here laid out appears entirely feasible from a construction point of view.

"(6) That the cost of construction estimated at $2 per acre-foot per annum over the repayment period of 40 years is less than storage water is now commanding and that it will increase the crop values five or more times this annual cost, showing its economic worth.

"(7) That the power developments that may be made in the six power plants will produce a large quantity of cheap hydroelectric power that will materially benefit Denver and a large surrounding territory.

"(8) That the revenues from power plant no. 1 will pay for the power features as set up under the initial power development and furnish energy for pumping at Granby pumping plant free and will also pay for the operation of the system to the point where the water is diverted from the Big Thompson to the storage reservoirs.

"(9) That the cost of the irrigation feature of the project is within the ability of the water users to pay."

The Senate, in the Seventy-fourth Congress, passed an amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill authorizing the construction of this project. This amendment, however, was not accepted by the House of Representatives. There have been for some years differences between the citizens and water users on the eastern and western sides of the Continental Divide in Colorado as to the terms and conditions under which this project should be constructed. These differences have been completely adjusted and representatives of both sections in the State of Colorado interested in this matter have agreed in not only approving but urging its construction. The following letters evidence this agreement:

JUNE 11, 1937.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: There is attached hereto the portion of the report on the Colorado-Big Thompson project in Colorado covering the principles and stipulations governing the construction and operation of said project for the protection of the rights and interests dependent on the Colorado River in Colorado.

The provisions contained therein have been considered by the Northern Colorado Water Users' Association, representing the irrigation and other interests on the eastern slope in Colorado, and we respectfully submit that they are satisfactory and meet the approval of said association.

We ask that acknowledgment be made of this communication.

Respectfully yours,

NORTHERN COLORADO WATER USERS' ASSOCIATION,
CHAS. HANSEN, President.
MOSES E. SMITH, Vice President.
THOMAS A. NIXON, Attorney.

JUNE 11, 1937.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: There is attached hereto the portion of the report on the Colorado-Big Thompson project in Colorado covering the principles and stipulations governing the construction and operation of said project for the protection of the rights and interests dependent on the Colorado River in Colorado.

The provisions contained therein have been considered by the Western Slope Protective Association, representing the irrigation and other interests on the western slope in Colorado, and we respectfully submit that they are satisfactory and meet the approval of said association.

We ask that acknowledgment be made of this communication.

Respectfully yours,

THE WESTERN SLOPE PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION,
SILMON SMITH, Secretary.
CLIFFORD H. STONE, Director.
A. C. SUDAN, Special Representative of Grand County.

In the synopsis of the report which is printed as Senate Document No. 80, certain general principles governing the manner of construction and operation of the project are set forth. The report summarizes these primary purposes as follows:

"The project, therefore, must be operated in such a manner as to most nearly effect the following primary purposes:

"1. To preserve the vested and future rights in irrigation.

"2. To reserve the fishing and recreational facilities and the scenic attractions of Grand Lake, the Colorado River, and the Rocky Mountain National Park.

"3. To preserve the present surface elevations of the water in Grand Lake and to prevent a variation in these elevations greater than their normal fluctuation.

"4. To so conserve and make use of these waters for irrigation, power, industrial development, and other purposes, as to create the greatest benefits.

"5. To maintain conditions of river flow for the benefit of domestic and sanitary uses of this water."

These primary purposes and the manner of their accomplishment are set forth in detail in the report.

The committee therefore recommends that the bill (S. 2681) be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of the Colorado-Big Thompson project as a Federal reclamation project."

PISCATAQUA RIVER BRIDGE, NEW HAMPSHIRE-MAINE

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there are two bills on the calendar, Senate bill 2661 and Senate bill 2662, introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], in behalf of the congressional delegations from those two States. One of the bills gives the consent of Congress to a compact between the two States for the construction of an interstate bridge. The other bill authorizes the construction of the bridge over the navigable waters of the United States.

I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 2661.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2661) granting the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Maine and New Hampshire for the creation of the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to an interstate compact for the creation of The Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority, executed on the 14th day of April 1937 by the representatives of the States of Maine and New Hampshire, which compact has been deposited in the Department of State of the United States and reads as follows:

"INTERSTATE BRIDGE AUTHORITY FOR THE PORTSMOUTH-KITTERY BRIDGE AND APPROACHES THERETO

"COMPACT

"BETWEEN THE STATE OF MAINE AND THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

"Whereas the single highway bridge serving as the sole facility for vehicular traffic over and across the Piscataqua River between the State of New Hampshire and the State of Maine is wholly inadequate to care for and accommodate such traffic over said river between the said two States and therefore causes such traffic congestion in and upon the streets and highways of the city of Portsmouth, N. H., and the town of Kittery, Maine, that the lives and property of the citizens of said communities and the travelers on said streets and highways are constantly endangered; and

"Whereas the antiquated and obsolete wooden pile bridge serving as the sole facility for railroad traffic over and across the Piscataqua River between the State of New Hampshire and the State of Maine is wholly inadequate to care for and accommodate the railroad traffic between the said two States; and

"Whereas the narrow draw-span of said wooden pile railroad bridge, the sole facility permitting passage of water traffic up and down said river, is wholly inadequate to permit the passage of steamers and vessels of broad beam from the sea inland to serve the large industrial plants now situate on the banks of said river and therefore constitutes an obstacle to further enlargement of these industries and the development of numerous other industrial sites located so that passage through said bridge is absolutely necessary; and

"Whereas the only remedy for the conditions now existing is the construction of a bridge across said river which by coordinating the facilities required by vehicular and railroad traffic will remove the obstacle to water traffic; and

"Whereas the solution of this problem will result in great economy and benefit not only to the States of Maine and New Hampshire but to the Nation and will require the cordial cooperation of the States of New Hampshire and Maine in the encouragement of the investment of capital as well as the formulation and execution of the necessary plans and such result can best be accomplished through the joining of the two States of Maine and New Hampshire by and through a common agency:

"Now, therefore, the said States of New Hampshire and Maine do hereby agree and pledge each to the other as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"Said States agree to and pledge, each to the other, faithful cooperation in the planning, execution, and construction of a suitable vehicular and railroad bridge with suitable highway approaches thereto and draw-span therein; holding the same in high trust for the benefit of the Nation and of the said two States.

"ARTICLE II

"There is hereby created 'The Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority', which shall be a body corporate and politic, having the powers and jurisdiction hereinafter enumerated and such other and additional powers as shall be conferred upon it by the legislature of either State concurred in by the legislature of the other State, or by act or acts of Congress as hereinafter provided.

"ARTICLE III

"The authority shall consist of six members, three residents of the State of New Hampshire and three residents of the State of Maine; the New Hampshire members to be chosen by the State of New Hampshire and the Maine members to be chosen by the State of Maine in the manner and for the term fixed and determined from time to time by the legislatures of either State, respectively. Any member may be removed or suspended from office as provided by the law of the State from which he shall be appointed.

"ARTICLE IV

"The members of the authority shall, for the purpose of doing business, constitute a board and may adopt suitable rules and regulations for its management.

"ARTICLE V

"The authority shall constitute a body both corporate and politic with full power and authority (1) to sue and be sued; (2) to have a seal and alter the same at pleasure; (3) to adopt from time to time and amend bylaws covering its procedure, rules and regulations governing use of the bridge and any of the other services made available in connection with said bridge, to publish the same, if such publication is necessary or advisable and to cause records of its proceedings to be kept; (4) to construct, maintain, reconstruct, and operate an interstate toll bridge over the Piscataqua River between the city of Portsmouth in New Hampshire and the town of Kittery in Maine and for this purpose; (5) to acquire, hold, and dispose of personal property for its purposes; (6) to acquire in the name of the authority by purchase, condemnation, lease, or otherwise, any real property and rights or easements therein, deemed by it necessary or desirable for its purposes, and to use such property; (7) to acquire any such real property by the exercise of the power of condemnation in the manner provided by laws and statutes of the said two States or otherwise; (8) to charge and collect fees, fares, and tolls for the use of said bridge and other services made available in connection with the said bridge; (9) to make contracts with the United States, the State of New Hampshire, the State of Maine, public corporations or bodies existing therein, and private corporations and individuals; (10) to accept grants and the cooperation of the United States or any agency thereof in the construction, maintenance, reconstruction, operation, and financing of the bridge and its highway approaches and to do any and all things necessary in order to avail itself of such aid and cooperation; (11) to employ such assistants, agents, and servants as it shall deem necessary or desirable for its purposes; (12) to exercise any of its powers in the public domain of the United States unless the exercise of such powers is not permitted by the laws of the United States; (13) to borrow money, make and issue negotiable notes, bonds, and other evidences of indebtedness or obligations of the authority and to secure the payment of such obligations or any part thereof by pledge of any part of the revenue of the bridge; and (14) to do all other lawful things necessary and incidental to the foregoing powers. All property of the authority and all property held in the name of either State pursuant to the provisions hereof shall be exempt from levy and sale by virtue of any execution and no execution or other judicial process shall issue against the same. No judgment against the authority shall be lien upon its property held in the name of either State pursuant to the provisions hereof. No property now or hereafter vested in or held by either State, by any county, city, town, village, district, township, or other municipality thereof shall be taken by the authority without the authority and consent of the State, county, town, village, district, or township or other municipality in which it is located; nor shall anything impair or invalidate any bond, indebtedness of either State, any county, city, town, village, district, or township or other municipality nor impair the provisions of law to regulate the payment into sinking funds of revenue derived from municipal property or dedicate the revenues derived from any municipal property to a specific purpose.

"ARTICLE VI

"The authority shall have such additional powers and duties as may hereafter be delegated to and imposed upon it from time to time by the action of the legislature of either State concurred in by the legislature of the other. Unless and until otherwise provided, it shall make a biennial report to the legislatures of both States, setting forth in detail the operations and transactions conducted by it pursuant to this agreement and any legislation thereunder. The authority shall not pledge the credit of either State except by and with the expressed authority of the legislature thereof.

"ARTICLE VII

"Nothing in this agreement or compact is intended or shall be construed to affect the laws now existing which vest jurisdiction over or control of railroads in the Public Service Commission of the State of New Hampshire, or the Public Utilities Commission of the State of Maine, or the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, or any agency of either State or the United States.

"ARTICLE VIII

"The authority shall elect from its members a chairman, vice chairman, clerk, and treasurer, and may appoint such officers and employees as it may require for the performance of its duties and shall fix and determine by resolution their qualifications and duties.

"ARTICLE IX

"Expenses incurred by the authority in the interim between execution of this agreement or compact and the date money received from grants, bonds, or revenues shall be available shall be borne by the said two States in equal shares and shall be raised as each State shall determine.

"ARTICLE X

"Unless and until otherwise determined by the action of the legislatures of the two States, no action of the authority shall be binding unless taken at a meeting at which at least two members from each State are present and unless four votes are cast therefor, two from each State. Each State reserves the right hereafter to provide by law for the exercise of a veto power by the Governor thereof over any action of any commissioner appointed therefrom.

"ARTICLE XI

"Unless and until otherwise determined by the legislatures of the two States, the bridge authority shall not incur any obligations for salaries, office or other administrative expenses within the provisions of article IX prior to the making of appropriations adequate to meet the same.

"ARTICLE XII

"The bridge authority is hereby authorized to make suitable rules and regulations not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States or of either State, which shall be binding and effective on all persons and corporations affected thereby.

"ARTICLE XIII

"The two States shall provide penalties for violations of any order, rule, or regulation of the Bridge Authority, and for the manner of enforcing same.

"ARTICLE XIV

"Definitions: 'Transportation facility' shall include railroads, steam or electric, motor truck or other street or highway vehicles, bridges, highways, and every kind of transportation facility now in use or hereafter designed for use for the transportation or carriage of persons or property. 'Facility' shall include all works, buildings, structures, stations, appliances, and appurtenances necessary and convenient for the proper construction, equipment, maintenance, and operation of such facility or facilities, or any one or more of them. 'Real property' shall include land under water, as well as uplands, and all property either now commonly or legally defined as real property or which may hereafter be so defined. 'Personal property' shall include choses in action and all other property now commonly or legally defined as personal property or which may hereafter be so defined. 'To lease' shall include to rent or to hire. 'Rule or regulation' shall include charges, rates, rentals, or tolls fixed or established by the Bridge Authority. Wherever action by the legislature of either State is herein referred to, it shall mean an act of the legislature duly adopted in accordance with the provisions of the constitution of the State. Plural or singular. The singular wherever used herein shall include the plural. Consent, approval, or recommendation of municipality, how given. Wherever herein the consent, approval, or recommendation of a 'municipality' is required, the word 'municipality' shall be taken to include any city, town, or village district. Such consent, approval, or recommendation whenever required in the case of the city of Portsmouth shall be deemed to have been given whenever the City Council of the City of Portsmouth or any body hereafter succeeding to its duties shall by majority vote pass a resolution expressing such consent, approval, or recommendation; and in the case of the town deemed to have been given whenever at a regular town meeting, or special meeting called for that purpose, shall by majority of votes of persons present and voting therefor; and in all other cases whenever the body authorized to grant consent to the use of the streets or highways of such municipality shall by a majority vote pass such a resolution.

"In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals under chapter 18 of the Private and Special Laws of 1937 of the State of Maine and chapter 4 of the Laws of the Special Session of 1936 of the State of New Hampshire this 14th day of April 1937.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal the provisions of the first section of this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. WHITE. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 2662.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2662) authorizing the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Piscataqua River at or near Portsmouth, State of New Hampshire, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority (hereinafter referred to as the authority) is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Piscataqua River, from a point at or near Portsmouth, State of New Hampshire, to a point at or near Kittery, State of Maine, suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the authority all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The authority is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 45 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization and for the maintenance of said bridge and the approaches thereto shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches; the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same; and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SILVER JUBILEE CAMP OF GIRL GUIDES AND SCOUTS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7206, relating to the silver-jubilee camp of the Girl Guides and Girl Scouts.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7206) to permit the temporary entry into the United States, under certain conditions, of alien participants and officials of the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts' Silver Jubilee Camp to the held in the United States in 1937 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That alien Girl Guides and Girl Scouts participants, officials, and executives who are accredited members of delegations to the Silver Jubilee Camp to be held in the United States in 1937, all of whom are nonimmigrants, if otherwise admissible into the United States under the immigration laws, shall be exempted from payment of the tax of $8 prescribed by section 2 of the Immigration Act of 1917 and exempted from the fees prescribed by law to be collected in connection with executing an application for a visa and visaing the passport or other travel document of an alien for the purpose of entering the United States as a nonimmigrant, and such aliens shall not be required to present official passports issued by the governments to which they owe allegiance: Provided, That aliens shall be in possession of official Girl Guide or Girl Scout identity cards issued by their own governments or issued by the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts indicating their Girl Guide or Girl Scout status and nationality, and duly visaed without charge by American consular officers abroad: And provided further, That such aliens shall comply with regulations not inconsistent with the foregoing provisions which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor and Secretary of State: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall relieve an alien from being required to obtain a gratis nonimmigration visa if coming to the United States as a nonimmigrant, or an immigration visa if coming to the United States as an immigrant.

SEC. 2. That such aliens shall be permitted free entry of their personal effects and their equipments to be used in connection with the Silver Jubilee Camp, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2664, relating to the matter covered by the bill just passed, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is indefinitely postponed.

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on the Library Senate Joint Resolution 164, to amend the joint resolution establishing the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, approved May 23, 1928, as amended, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 8 of the joint resolution establishing the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, approved May 23, 1928, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The Commission shall cease and terminate June 30, 1939."

SEC. 2. The unexpended balances of the appropriations heretofore made for carrying out the purposes of such joint resolution, as amended, shall be available until June 30, 1939.

TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, several months ago I called the attention of the Senate to the terrible toll of death on our streets and highways—more than 38,000 men, women, and children killed in auto accidents in 1936. I also called attention to the educational and traffic enforcement campaigns being conducted throughout the country in the effort to reduce this alarming highway slaughter. There was some encouragement in the 1936 casualty lists from the fact that while the total killed and maimed was the highest in history, the city death totals were slightly lower. But the report of the National Safety Council for the first 4 months of 1937 shows an increase of 21 percent in automobile deaths over the first 4 months of 1936. If that rate of killing is maintained throughout the year, more than 46,000 persons will meet death on the highways and streets of the United States this year, and more than one and one-half million persons will be either killed or injured.

Mr. President, there are 15 sovereign States in this Union with populations smaller than the number of persons killed or injured annually on the streets and highways of the United States.

We are stricken with horror at the possible death toll of our boys and young men if this country should engage in another war. But in all the six major wars in which the United States has taken part since it became a nation, the total loss of life, including those killed in action and those who died of wounds, has been less than one-quarter million persons. In 15 years more than 400,000 have been killed in automobile accidents in the United States.

Something will have to be done to stop this highway slaughter, and the answer is not as simple as some suggestions would indicate. Some of the suggestions, for instance, are these:

Better highways and better cars, and accidents will stop.

But we are building better highways and betters cars, and fatalities increase.

There are others who believe we can pass a law, and that if it is enforced that will solve the problem.

Others say:

Cut down speed and you will cut down accidents.

Still others assert:

Eliminate the drunken drivers and you will eliminate most of the accidents.

The answer is not as simple as any of those suggestions, worth while as each of them is. There are 40,000,000 automobile drivers in the United States, three times that many pedestrians; some 28,000,000 automobiles, fit and unfit, on the streets and highways; 3,000,000 miles of highways; and 1,500,000 traffic casualties a year.

Pedestrians and drivers will have to be educated; drivers will have to learn to exercise more self-restraint and observe the traffic rules as well as traffic laws; enforcement will have to be more strict; manufacturers will have to build safer cars, with special reference to driver visibility; highway engineering can be improved. Lower speeds would cut down materially highway accidents.

What I wanted especially to call attention to at this time is the plight of the pedestrian in our larger cities. I have before me a letter from Mr. M. O. Eldridge, acting director of vehicles and traffic for the city of Washington. He reports to me that since January 1 this year 49 persons have been killed in traffic accidents in the District of Columbia. Of the 49 killed, 40 were pedestrians. Of the 40 pedestrians killed in these traffic accidents, 24 were crossing streets at some other points in the block than a cross walk; in other words, what generally is called "the middle of the block." Twelve were killed at cross walks—five of these were walking against the red light or a stop signal, while seven apparently were killed at cross walks where theoretically they had the right-of-way. One was killed coasting, one was walking in the street, one was standing in the roadway, and one was intoxicated.

There is the record for the District of Columbia, Mr. President, for 5 months and 11 days of this year. Probably all over the Nation the same situation prevails—that in every large city pedestrians are the victims in from five to six of every seven auto accident fatalities.

The record also shows that 7 out of every 10 pedestrians killed were killed at places where they plainly should not have been, for instance while trying to cross streets between cross walks.

Various safety campaigns are under way. We are trying to educate drivers to drive more carefully. We are trying to persuade makers of cars to change their designs so as to give better driver visibility. And those are good programs.

But in the light of the record, I think it plain that unless the pedestrians in our cities can be educated or compelled to keep off the streets except at cross walks, fatalities will continue to increase. As Mr. W. A. Van Duzer, director of vehicles and traffic for the District, puts it:

> The pedestrian is the forgotten man, and in the District of Columbia in 7 out of every 10 fatal accidents, he is the dead man.

In a Topeka, Kans., newspaper the other day, editorial attention was called to the fact that automobile accidents last year cost a little more than eight-tenths of a cent for every mile driven in the United States. That is as much as the cost of gasoline per mile for many cars these days.

Mr. President, in order to stop the highway slaughter, which killed 38,000 persons on streets and highways of the United States last year, it seems we are going to have to educate and control pedestrians in our cities. I can see no other solution of the city traffic problems. But in return I say the city authorities owe it to the pedestrian to give him a break at the intersections. Under present conditions a pedestrian who starts across on the green signal is fair game for autoists making right or left turns at the intersection. Some way must be found to declare a closed season on pedestrian hunting at street intersections.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a timely article by Mr. W. A. Van Duzer, director of vehicles and traffic, Washington, D. C., on Pedestrian Signals. I find valuable suggestions in his article.

I also ask to have printed in the RECORD, in this connection, an article by Mr. M. O. Eldridge, assistant director, giving statistics which point to the same conclusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULKLEY in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PEDESTRIAN SIGNALS

(By W. A. Van Duzer, director of vehicles and traffic, Washington, D. C.)

The pedestrian is the forgotten man, and in the District of Columbia in 7 out of every 10 fatal accidents he is the dead man. The pedestrian himself is partly responsible, but to a large extent municipal traffic authorities are equally responsible. These authorities have adopted formal regulations for the control of vehicular traffic; they have installed many signs, signals, and markings, warning, regulating, and informing the motorist, but what have they done for the pedestrian? Let us see.

They have established so-called safety islands for the exclusive use of the pedestrian. Safety islands—false name—painted on the roadway in the turbulent eddies of the sea of traffic, unlighted, unmarked, except by a painted line 6 inches in width and, perhaps, a button or two, invisible in rain or darkness, unprotected save by a commandment to the motorist of "Thou shalt not enter." Is the motorist who, when visibility is lessened by rain or darkness, runs through such a "safety island" and kills the pedestrian standing there to blame, or does the moral responsibility lie with the man who placed and named that alleged "safety island"? The pedestrian who uses such an area must be either foolhardy or betrayed. Betrayed is the word for it—betrayed by the constituted protectors of his life.

There is no doubt in the minds of the Commissioners and the other authorities of the District of Columbia who have to do with traffic problems that the time has come when all drivers and all pedestrians, especially the pedestrians, should cooperate in bringing about a reduction in traffic accidents and traffic fatalities. Pedestrians, both young and old, could do this by adopting the following simple rules:

1. Never cross a street except at a crosswalk, where you have a legal right to cross and legal protection.
2. Never cross a street or walk or run into traffic from behind a parked car.
3. Teach your children not to use the streets as playgrounds and to refrain from skating or sledding or other activities in streets which are not roped off for this purpose.
4. Never cross the street where there are traffic lights or traffic policemen except on proper signal.
5. Never walk on a roadway which has no sidewalk except on the left-hand side facing on-coming traffic.

If the pedestrian would adopt and practice these simple rules, he would not be so likely to die young as a result of a traffic accident.

Numerous rules of the road have been set up for drivers of motor vehicles, and through the enforcement machinery, the prosecuting officials, the police, and the courts, drivers are subject to certain penalties for violating these rules. Some of these penalties are severe.

If every driver would adopt a set of simple rules of driving and live up to them, he would be able to stay out of traffic troubles without having to be arrested and penalized for his shortcomings. A simple set of rules that will keep the average driver out of traffic troubles might be as follows:

1. Approach all intersections under control so as to avoid an accident.
2. Drive with particular caution and care through any street where cars are parked on both sides, so as to avoid striking a pedestrian who may walk out or run out from behind a parked car.
3. Give pedestrians right-of-way at all crosswalks, whether or not you are making a right- or left-hand turn.
4. Avoid blowing your horn except in cases of extreme danger, as the horn is likely to annoy or frighten other drivers or pedestrians.
5. Make right turns from the right lane and left turns from the left lane.
6. Keep your car within the speed limit—save a life instead of a second.
7. Keep your headlights properly focused and your brakes properly adjusted and your windshield clean and free from dust for night driving.
8. Always give a hand signal to indicate your intention to change your course, turn, or stop.
9. If you are drinking (intoxicating liquor), don't drive—if you are driving, don't drink.

SHOULD PEDESTRIAN TRAFFIC BE REGULATED?

(By M. O. Eldridge, chairman, traffic committee, City Officials' Division)

A recent pedestrian study in Washington made at every signal-controlled intersection in the congested area indicates that 36 percent of the pedestrians cross or attempt to cross the street against the red signal. Out of a total of 664,497 pedestrians who were checked, 240,611 crossed the street against the red signal.

Each year in Washington, and in other cities of comparable size, a large percentage of injuries and deaths is received by persons who cross the streets not at crosswalks. A survey conducted in Washington on blocks of various lengths with and without signals at intersections indicates that only 6.2 percent of the pedestrians using the sidewalks cross the street not at the crosswalk, but during the fiscal year 1934, 37 deaths and 443 injuries were sustained by persons crossing the street in the middle of the block, while only 11 deaths and 320 injuries were sustained by pedestrians who crossed at intersections. Our studies indicate that a pedestrian who crosses in the middle of the block is 21 times more likely to be injured and 51 times more likely to be killed than the person who crosses at intersections.

These facts clearly indicate that the real answer to this problem lies as much, or more, with the pedestrian as with the driver. Until the pedestrian learns that it is extremely dangerous to walk out from behind parked cars and cross the street in the middle of the block or to cross at a controlled intersection against the signal, and until the parents of small children learn that they cannot permit their offspring to play in the street, this annual slaughter is bound to continue.

It is exasperating, as a pedestrian, to attempt to cross the street at a controlled intersection and be repeatedly forced back to the curb by drivers making right- and left-hand turns, blowing their horns and overlooking the fact that the pedestrian who crosses the street on proper signal has the right-of-way. This practice on the part of selfish motorists forces many pedestrians to cross the street in the middle of the block.

On the other hand, as a driver of a motor vehicle, it is annoying to approach an intersection where all right- and left-hand turns are prohibited and where the pedestrian is fully protected by proper signal to find the intersection crowded with pedestrians crossing the street against a red light. The drivers of motor vehicles will have to learn to recognize the rights of pedestrians, and at the same time the pedestrians should learn to recognize the rights of drivers.

The only conclusion that we can draw from the facts above presented is that sooner or later a definite regulation will have to be adopted which will make it illegal for a pedestrian to cross the street in the middle of the block or to cross at a controlled intersection against the signal. At the present time we are only regulating vehicular traffic. In order to have complete regulation and complete protection, we must regulate the pedestrian as well as the driver, and when this is done we must see to it that the pedestrians' rights are absolutely protected at controlled intersections and at crosswalks.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, June 28, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 24, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Msgr. C. F. Thomas, of St. Patrick's Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Father of light and power, we believe in Thee, in Thy Son and Holy Spirit. We are united with Thy divine Spirit. We are daily and have been assembled daily since the foundation of this American Republic. There have at times been differences on subjects of minor and of major importance. Yet, in the main, we have been united in one and indissoluble republic. Keep us, O Lord, thus linked in Thy love and justice. Love and justice to all cannot be separated. What good things Thou hast prepared for them who love Thee. Pour forth into our hearts such a sense of Thy love that we may obtain fulfillment of Thy promises, which exceed all we can desire.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6692. An act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. AUSTIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7519. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935; and

H. J. Res. 380. Joint resolution to provide for the publication and sale by the Northwest Territory Celebration Commission of certain historical and educational material.

BRIDGE SUBCOMMITTEE OF COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bridge subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may sit during the sessions of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

MARRIED PERSONS IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 1087), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 260

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 3408, a bill to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

FARM SECURITY ACT OF 1937

Mr. GREENWOOD, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (Rept. No. 1088), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 261

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7562, a bill to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman kindly state what the situation is?

Mr. RAMSPECK. We have only one matter that is to be attended to. It is a clarification of the language of the bill as sent back to the Senate with reference to the pay of leaders and assistant leaders. It does not change the purpose of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 10, strike out all after "regulations" down to and including "leader", in line 15, and insert "Provided further, That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month except for not more than 10 percent who may be designated as assistant leaders and who shall receive not more than $36 per month: Provided further, That not to exceed an additional 6 percent of such enrollees may be designated as leader and may receive not more than $45 per month as such leaders."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RAMSPECK moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendment to the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, the bill as we sent it back to the Senate a few days ago had restored the language of the House bill which provided that not more than 10 percent of the enrollees might be designated as leaders and receive not more than $36 per month. It contained an additional proviso that not to exceed 6 percent shall receive $45 as leaders.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. How do these provisions compare with present law?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The present law gives the President the right to designate the pay of enrollees without limitation.

Mr. PATMAN. How has he designated their pay?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Exactly in accordance with the figures in this amendment; but there is no limitation on the President as to percentages or as to the pay. The language of the House was not clear as to whether the total number of leaders and assistant leaders should be 10 percent or 16 percent. They cannot operate on 10 percent, they say under present regulations; so the Senate in clarification permits 10 percent to be assistant leaders at not more than $36 a month and an additional 6 percent to be leaders at not more than $45 per month.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the general purpose it is that there be certain limitations, there being none now in regard to these matters.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct; there are no limitations in the present law.

Mr. SNELL. But under this amendment there will be definite limitations.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I simply want to observe that I think that the gentleman, under the parliamentary situation and the difficulties in which he was placed by the death of the chairman of the committee, has done a wonderful job in this conference and retained largely what the House wanted.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CARRIERS' TAXING ACT OF 1937

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7589) to levy an excise tax upon carriers and certain other employers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee whether he is going to request some time so that this bill might be discussed for a few minutes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I shall be glad to yield some time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Under my reservation of objection, I should like to have the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee take 5 minutes, if I have that much time at my disposal, to explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say that if consent is granted to consider this bill debate will be had under the 5-minute rule. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio if he desires recognition. The Chair has been informed there was practically a unanimous agreement among all members of the committee on this bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There is.

The SPEAKER. And that it would take only a few minutes to consider. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. That as used in this act—

(a) The term "employer" means any carrier (as defined in subsection (i) of this section), and any company which is directly or indirectly owned or controlled by one or more such carriers or under common control therewith, and which operates any equipment or facility or performs any service (except trucking service, casual service, and the casual operation of equipment or facilities) in connection with the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, refrigeration or icing, storage, or handling of property transported by railroad, and any receiver, trustee, or other individual or body, judicial or otherwise, when in the possession of the property or operating all or any part of the business of any such employer: Provided, however, That the term "employer" shall not include any street, interurban, or suburban electric railway, unless such railway is operating as a part of a general steam-railroad system of transportation, but shall not exclude any part of the general steam-railroad system of transportation now or hereafter operated by any other motive power. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized and directed upon request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or upon complaint of any party interested, to determine after hearing whether any line operated by electric power falls within the terms of this proviso. The term "employer" shall also include railroad associations, traffic associations, tariff bureaus, demurrage bureaus, weighing and inspection bureaus, collection agencies and other associations, bureaus, agencies, or organizations controlled and maintained wholly or principally by two or more employers as hereinbefore defined and engaged in the performance of services in connection with or incidental to railroad transportation; and railway labor organizations, national in scope, which have been or may be organized in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, as amended, and their State and National legislative committees and their general committees and their insurance departments and their local lodges and divisions, established pursuant to the constitution and bylaws of such organizations.

(b) The term "employee" means any person in the service of one or more employers for compensation: Provided, however, That the term "employee" shall include an employee of a local lodge or division defined as an employer in subsection (a) only if he was in the service of or in the employment relation to a carrier on or after August 29, 1935. An individual is in the employment relation to a carrier if he is on furlough, subject to call for service within or outside the United States and ready and willing to serve, or on leave of absence, or absent on account of sickness or disability; all in accordance with the established rules and practices in effect on the carrier: Provided further, That an individual shall not be deemed to have been on August 29, 1935, in the employment relation to a carrier not conducting the principal part of its business in the United States unless during the last pay-roll period in which he rendered service to it prior to said date, he rendered service to it in the United States.

(c) The term "employee representative" means any officer or official representative of a railway labor organization other than a labor organization included in the term "employer" as defined in section 1 (a), who before or after the enactment hereof was in the service of an employer as defined in section 1 (a) and who is duly authorized and designated to represent employees in accordance with the Railway Labor Act, as amended, and any individual who is regularly assigned to or regularly employed by such officer or official representative in connection with the duties of his office.

(d) An individual is in the service of an employer whether his service is rendered within or without the United States if he is subject to the continuing authority of the employer to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of his service, which service he renders for compensation: Provided, however, That an individual shall be deemed to be in the service of an employer not conducting the principal part of its business in the United States only when he is rendering service to it in the United States.

(e) The term "compensation" means any form of money remuneration earned by an individual for services rendered as an employee to one or more employers, or as an employee representative, including remuneration paid for time lost as an employee, but remuneration paid for time lost shall be deemed earned in the month in which such time is lost. Such term does not include tips, or the voluntary payment by an employer, without deduction from the remuneration of the employee, of the tax imposed on such employee by section 2 of this act. Compensation which is earned during the period for which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall require a return of taxes hereunder to be made and which is payable during the calendar month following such period shall be deemed to have been paid during such period only.

(f) The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense means the States, Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

(g) The term "company" includes corporations, associations, and joint-stock companies.

(h) The term "employee" includes an officer of an employer.

(i) The term "carrier" means an express company, sleeping-car company, or carrier by railroad, subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act.

(j) The term "person" means an individual, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, or a corporation.

INCOME TAX ON EMPLOYEES

SEC. 2. (a) In addition to other taxes, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the income of every employee a tax equal to the following percentages of so much of the compensation of such employee as is not in excess of $300 for any calendar month, earned by him after December 31, 1936—

1. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939, the rate shall be 2¾ percent;

2. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1940, 1941, and 1942, the rate shall be 3 percent;

3. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1943, 1944, and 1945, the rate shall be 3¼ percent;

4. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1946, 1947, and 1948, the rate shall be 3½ percent;

5. With respect to compensation earned after December 31, 1948, the rate shall be 3¾ percent;

(b) The tax imposed by this section shall be collected by the employer of the taxpayer by deducting the amount of the tax from the compensation of the employee as and when paid. If an employee is paid compensation by more than one employer with respect to any calendar month, then, under regulations made under this act, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe the proportion of the tax to be deducted by each employer from the compensation paid by him to the employee with respect to such month. Every employer required under this subsection to deduct the tax is hereby made liable for the payment of such tax and shall not be liable to any person for the amount of any such payment.

(c) If more or less than the correct amount of tax imposed by this section is paid with respect to any compensation payment, then, under regulations made under this act by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, proper adjustments, with respect both to the tax and the amount to be deducted, shall be made, without interest, in connection with subsequent compensation payments to the same employee by the same employer.

EXCISE TAX ON EMPLOYERS

SEC. 3. (a) In addition to other taxes, every employer shall pay an excise tax, with respect to having individuals in his employ, equal to the following percentages of so much of the compensation as is not in excess of $300 for any calendar month paid by him to any employee for services rendered to him after December 31, 1936: Provided, however, That if an employee is paid compensation by more than one employer with respect to any such calendar month, the tax imposed by this section shall apply to not more than $300 of the aggregate compensation paid to said employee by all said employers with respect to such calendar month, and each such employer shall be liable for that proportion of the tax with respect to such compensation which his payment to the employee with respect to such calendar month bears to the aggregate compensation paid to such employee by all employers with respect to such calendar month:

1. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered during the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939, the rate shall be 2¾ percent;

2. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered during the calendar years 1940, 1941, and 1942, the rate shall be 3 percent;

3. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered during the calendar years 1943, 1944, and 1945, the rate shall be 3¼ percent;

4. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered during the calendar years 1946, 1947, and 1948, the rate shall be 3½ percent;

5. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered after December 31, 1948, the rate shall be 3¾ percent.

(b) If more or less than the correct amount of the tax imposed by this section is paid with respect to any compensation payment then, under regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, proper adjustments with respect to the tax shall be made, without interest, in connection with subsequent excise-tax payments made by the same employer.

REFUNDS AND DEFICIENCIES

SEC. 4. If more or less than the correct amount of the tax imposed by section 2 (a) or 3 (a) of this act is paid or deducted with respect to any compensation payment and the overpayment or underpayment of the tax cannot be adjusted under section 2 (c) or 3 (b), the amount of the overpayment shall be refunded, or the amount of the underpayment shall be collected in such manner and at such times (subject to the statute of limitations properly applicable thereto) as may be prescribed by regulations under this act as made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

INCOME TAX ON EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVES

SEC. 5. In addition to other taxes, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the income of each employee representative a tax equal to the following percentages of so much of the compensation of such employee representative as is not in excess of $300 for any calendar month, earned by him after December 31, 1936:

1. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939, the rate shall be 5½ percent;

2. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1940, 1941, and 1942, the rate shall be 6 percent;

3. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1943, 1944, and 1945, the rate shall be 6½ percent;

4. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1946, 1947, and 1948, the rate shall be 7 percent;

5. With respect to compensation earned after December 31, 1948, the rate shall be 7½ percent.

The compensation of an employee representative for the purpose of ascertaining the tax thereon shall be determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if the employee organization by which such employee representative is employed were an employer as defined in section 1 (a) of this act.

DEDUCTIBILITY FROM INCOME TAX

SEC. 6. For the purposes of the income tax imposed by title I of the Revenue Act of 1936 or by any act of Congress in substitution therefor, the taxes imposed by sections 2 and 5 of this act shall not be allowed as a deduction to the taxpayer in computing his net income.

COLLECTION AND PAYMENT OF TAXES

SEC. 7. (a) The taxes imposed by this act shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as internal-revenue collections.

(b) The taxes imposed by this act shall be collected and paid quarterly or at such other times and in such manner and under such conditions not inconsistent with this act as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. If a tax imposed by this act is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax (except in the case of adjustments made in accordance with the provisions of this act) interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date the tax became due until paid.

(c) All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to any tax imposed by section 600 or section 800 of the Revenue Act of 1926, and the provisions of section 607 of the Revenue Act of 1934, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by this act.

(d) In the payment of any tax under this act a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

(e) Any tax paid under this act by a taxpayer with respect to any period with respect to which he is not liable to tax under this act shall be credited against the tax, if any, imposed by title VIII of the Social Security Act upon such taxpayer, and the balance, if any, shall be refunded. Any tax paid under title VIII of the Social Security Act by a taxpayer with respect to any period with respect to which he is not liable to tax under such title VIII shall be credited against the tax, if any, imposed by this act upon such taxpayer, and the balance, if any, shall be refunded.

COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 8. The several district courts of the United States and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, respectively, shall have jurisdiction to entertain an application by the Attorney General on behalf of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to compel an employee or other person residing within the jurisdiction of the court or an employer subject to service of process within its jurisdiction to comply with any obligations imposed on such employee, employer, or other person under the provisions of this act. The jurisdiction herein specifically conferred upon such Federal courts shall not be held exclusive of any jurisdiction otherwise possessed by such courts to entertain actions at law or suits in equity in aid of the enforcement of rights or obligations arising under the provisions of this act.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 9. (a) The term "employment", as defined in subsection (b) of section 811 of title VIII of the Social Security Act, shall not include service performed by an individual as an employee as defined in section 1 (b) or service performed as an employee representative as defined in section 1 (c).

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury at intervals of not longer than 3 years shall estimate the reduction in the amount of taxes collected under title VIII of the Social Security Act by reason of the operation of subsection (a) of this section and shall include such estimate in his annual report.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 10. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

REPEAL OF PRIOR TAX ACT

SEC. 11. The provisions of this act are in substitution for the provisions of the act of August 29, 1935, as amended, entitled "An act to levy an excise tax upon carriers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes", which is hereby repealed. All moneys payable as and for taxes under such act of August 29, 1935, and not heretofore paid shall cease to be payable and all proceedings pending for the recovery of any such moneys shall be terminated. All sums paid into the Treasury of the United States as and for taxes under such act shall be refunded, except so much of the sums so paid as and for taxes with respect to compensation earned after December 31, 1936, as equals the taxes imposed by this act with respect to the same persons and the same period, and the sums not required to be so refunded shall be retained in the Treasury of the United States and credited on taxes due and payable under this act. All sums deducted by employers from the compensation of employees as and for taxes under such act of August 29, 1935, which have not been paid into the Treasury of the United States shall be repaid by such employers to such employees, except so much of the sums so deducted as and for taxes in respect of compensation earned after December 31, 1936, as equals the taxes imposed and required to be deducted by this act with respect to the same persons and the same period, and the sums not required to be so repaid shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and thereupon shall be credited on taxes due and payable under this act. No interest shall be allowed or paid with respect to any sum refunded, credited, or repaid under the provisions of this section.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 12. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make and publish such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this act.

SHORT TITLE

SEC 13. This act may be cited as the "Carriers Taxing Act of 1937."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration, H. R. 7589, has for its purpose the levying of an excise tax on carriers and certain other employers and an income tax on their employees. A similar act is now on the statute books, having been enacted in August of 1935, I believe, but that act is now being challenged in the courts. This is the only tax bill that I know of or have had anything to do with which all parties who would have to pay the tax favor. The employers are agreeable to the tax and are in favor of the legislation. The employees are also in favor of the legislation. About the only changes I know of in the pending bill involve three changes in the present law. The proposed legislation changes the date when the act goes into operation. The prior act provided for August 29, 1935, and this bill provides for the taxes to be effective as of January 1, 1937. Another change is a lowering of the rate. It begins at 2¾ percent on the pay roll of the employer and 2¾ percent on the pay roll of the employees up to $300 per month. Under the present bill the rate is lowered. There is at present a flat rate of 7 percent, 3½ on the employers as an excise tax and 3½ on the employees as an income tax.

This proposed act begins at 2¾ percent for the first 3 years on the employer and 2¾ percent on the employees. In 1937, 1938, and 1939 the rate will be 2¾ percent. In 1940, 1941, and 1942 the rate will be 3 percent. In 1943, 1944, and 1945 the rate will be 3¼ percent. In 1946, 1947, and 1948 the rate will be 3½ percent, which goes up to 1949, at which time and afterward there is a flat rate provided of 3¾ percent on the employers and employees, or an aggregate of 7 percent.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the situation that confronts us in connection with this legislation, the employers and employees are both agreed on the provisions of this bill and there is no tax on the Federal Government?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is agreed by all concerned that this will impose no burden upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SNELL. And both sides are agreed?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; and it is not opposed by the Treasury. This tax is supposed to raise for the first 3 years $121,000,000; for the next 3 years, $132,000,000; and on up to 1949. Thereafter it is supposed to raise $165,000,000 per annum.

This matter has been discussed fully, and I think it is pretty well understood by the membership of the House.

If there are any questions, I shall be pleased to yield now.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. I am sure the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will want to point out the fact that this bill comes before the House with a unanimous report from the committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The matter was given long and painstaking consideration, and was thoroughly discussed with the employers, the employees, and representatives of the Treasury Department. After long and deliberate consideration the measure now has unanimous support. It is agreed to by those who will pay the tax, it is acceptable to the Treasury of the United States, and it has the unanimous support of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Who stands the cost of administration?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It comes out of the revenues collected under the tax.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. The cost is paid exclusively out of this revenue?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I may say, so far as this bill is concerned, there is no cost of administration except in the collection of the taxes. This is a taxing act which is, under the express terms of the bill, a substitute for a similar taxing act passed by the last Congress. Gentlemen will remember that by injunction those taxes have been tied up. There has been very little money paid into the Treasury, amounting, I think, to something like $240,000. Larger sums have been paid by the employers into the Federal courts, to the master in chancery, or a similar arm of the court, and these amounts, under the terms of this bill, will be refunded. It should be pointed out that the amounts involved as taxes come from the employers and from the employees whose salaries are not in excess of $300 for any calendar month.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am glad of this opportunity to speak a few words in behalf of this legislation. Just last Monday we passed a bill coming from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of this House which is of great interest and great moment to the railroads and railroad workers of the Nation. This bill that we are passing today likewise is of great importance to these two groups. The bill passed last Monday provided in detail the rules and regulations of railroad retirement pensions to more than a million men. That bill provided for the age of retirement and for the regulations governing retirement and many other details necessary to make it a workable and satisfactory bill.

In my remarks on that day I set forth in detail the history of the development of that legislation and predicted that it would pass by a tremendous vote. It did pass by a vote of 361 in favor with only 1 vote against.

This bill that we are now considering is a bill that has been worked out by the Ways and Means Committee. As a member of that committee I naturally took a great interest in the preparation and consideration of this bill. I predict that this bill will pass without a dissenting vote because it, too, is a bill in which the railroads and railroad employees are both interested. Representatives of the railroad men, represented by Mr. George Harrison, president of the 21 brotherhoods, came before our committee and indicated that they favored this legislation. The railroad executives, represented by Mr. Fletcher, a capable and able representative, stated that they, too, were in favor of this legislation. We, as members of the committee representing the great American public, realized that both of these groups were satisfied and that it would be for the best interest not only of more than a million railroad employees and their families but for the best interests of the public generally that this legislation be enacted.

This legislation provides for a tax on the pay rolls of the railroad companies and also a tax on the incomes of the railroad employees. This money to be paid directly to the Treasury of the United States. The railroad companies are to pay 2¾ percent of their pay roll and the employees are to pay 2¾ percent of their salaries. This will be an equal amount from each source, for the pay roll of the companies is the same thing as the salaries and wages of the men. This rate is to continue for the years 1937, 1938, and 1939. It is estimated that this will bring into the Treasury in each of these 3 years the sum of about $121,000,000. After 1939 the rate is to be increased to 3 percent on each of these groups for the years 1940, 1941, and 1942. It is estimated that this tax for each of these years will bring into the Treasury approximately $132,000,000. The tax is to be increased for the years 1943, 1944, and 1945 to 3¼ percent on each of these groups. For 1946, 1947, and 1948 it is to be increased to 3½ percent on each of these groups. In 1949 it is to be increased to 3¾ percent on each group and is to remain stationary at this figure. It is estimated that by 1949 this tax will be bringing into the Treasury $156,000,000 per year. Its increase or decline from that time forward will depend upon the pay rolls which represent the amount that the railroads pay out to the employees and the amount which the employees receive.

The Railroad Retirement Act passed in 1934 was declared unconstitutional. Another act was passed in 1935, which is yet on the statute books, but which has been attacked by the courts and has been practically nullified by an injunction of the courts. It is confidently hoped that this bill will meet all constitutional requirements. It is confidently hoped that the legislation covered by this retirement-pension program will be found to be effective and satisfactory. It is my judgment that recent court decisions, together with the language employed and the purpose intended by this legislation, and the legislation which passed last Monday will, when taken together, be a complete argument in favor of the constitutionality of both these measures.

In the remainder of my time I wish to assure the Members of the House that the Republican membership will be unanimously in favor of this bill and no opposition whatsoever will be registered against it. The Republican membership of the Ways and Means Committee are unanimously in favor of it and the Republican membership voted unanimously in favor of the bill as it passed last Monday. Personally I took great pleasure and interest in the passage of this bill because I have favored every railroad-retirement act that has been before this House since I have been a Member, and I have participated actively in the drafting and consideration and passing of all of them. I sincerely hope that this bill will work out as anticipated and that a railroad-retirement program will be set into activity and will function with ease and will not only be satisfactory to the participants herein but will be a strong factor in the establishment of a finer personnel, a finer economic and finer national interest among and between all of those who are interested, both directly and indirectly. [Applause.]

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill which we have under discussion, H. R. 7589, unanimously reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, is pursuant to its very terms in substitution of the provisions of the act of August 29, 1935, as amended.

The methods of taxation used are twofold. The tax on employees, as defined herein, is an income tax; the tax on employers, as defined herein, is an excise tax. The base upon which each of these taxes is levied is the compensation of said employees as is not in excess of $300 for any current month herein after December 31, 1936.

The rate of taxation under the act of August 29, 1935, began at 3½ percent per annum and increased to 7 percent per annum. The rates in the bill under discussion begin at 2¾ percent for years 1937, 1938, and 1939; 3 percent for years 1940, 1941, and 1942; 3¼ percent for years 1943, 1944, and 1945; 3½ percent for years 1946, 1947, and 1948; and thereafter 3¾ percent. These rates apply both to the income tax on the employees and the excise tax on the employers. The net change in these rates, as the experts say, "in perpetuity", is a rate of 7.11 percent in the present bill in lieu of 7 percent under the act of August 29, 1935. There is an income tax on employee representatives, as defined in the act, of 5½ percent for the years 1937, 1938, and 1939; 6 percent for the years 1940, 1941, and 1942; 6½ percent for the years 1943, 1944, and 1945; 7 percent for the years 1946, 1947, and 1948; and 7½ percent thereafter.

REFUNDS

Under the act of August 29, 1935, which is repealed by this bill, there was paid into the Treasury some $240,000. There were other taxes tied up in the courts by injunction wherein the employers paid into the court, upon behalf of the employees, which will be refunded to the employees. Provisions are made for refunds of moneys paid in by the employers under section 11 of this bill. In each instance the refunds will be for the amounts in excess of the taxes which have accrued under this bill since January 1, 1937.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one question for the purpose of clarification?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As a matter of fact, there are very many men who are interested in knowing how they are going to get their money. Is it not a fact, from all indications from the Treasury, this money will be refunded practically automatically and without any trouble whatever to the men who paid it in?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. That is the statement made to us.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Is any of this money earmarked for this purpose when it goes into the Treasury?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. No; there is no earmarking. This is a taxing bill that produces revenue collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The revenues go directly into the Federal Treasury, the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman state the difference in the rates under the Taxing Act that is under injunction now and the pending taxing bill?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Under the old act it started at 3½ percent and went to 7 percent; under this bill it starts at 2¾ percent and goes to 7½ percent. The effective rate, "in perpetuity", is an increase of 0.11 percent above the act of last year.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I simply want to ask the gentleman if there is any reason why this money should not be earmarked for this specific purpose.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. So far as this act is concerned, the act covers the money into the Treasury of the United States. Congress has the power to appropriate this money just as they appropriate all other money that goes into the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. FISH. But the gentleman has not answered my question. Why should it not be earmarked?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Because, from the beginning of our Government, until now, as I am informed, the policy of the Treasury has never been to earmark money coming into the general fund of the Treasury. That was a policy of the distinguished leaders of my friend's party. Why, even Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, when he was Secretary of the Treasury, did not do that.

Mr. FISH. What about the Congress? Cannot Congress do that?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I recall one instance when the Congress attempted to collect taxes for a special purpose, which may be characterized as earmarking—it was the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The processing taxes were held by the Supreme Court to be an exaction which, under the act, did not go into the general fund of the Treasury, but were used for a specific purpose which the Supreme Court held to be beyond congressional power. I am certain that my friend from New York will recognize that a recurrence of that sort of thing is not desirable. So I repeat that this act is what it says it is—the Carriers Taxing Act of 1937—a revenue bill in which the revenue will be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, as other taxes are collected, and they will become part and parcel of the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

REVENUE FROM TAXES IMPOSED

We are told that for the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939 the revenues hereunder will approximate $120,000,000 annually; for the years 1940, 1941, and 1942, $132,000,000 annually; for the years 1943, 1944, and 1945, $143,000,000 annually; for the years 1946, 1947, and 1948, $154,000,000 annually; and thereafter $165,000,000 annually.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Section 9 (a) prescribes that the term "employment" as defined in section 811 (b) of the Social Security Act is not to include service performed by an individual as an employee or as an employee representative. It is possible to interpret the present act in such a way that employee representatives be included both under that act and title VIII of the Social Security Act. While this interpretation has not been given the language, it is now made clear that employee representatives can be covered only by the Carriers Taxing Act.

MISCELLANEOUS

Taxes imposed under this act are not to be allowed as a deduction to the taxpayer in computing his net income under the Revenue Act of 1936 or by any act of Congress in substitution therefor.

In the event more or less than the correct amount of tax, as imposed hereunder, under regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, proper adjustments with respect to the tax shall be made, without interest, in connection with subsequent tax payments made by the same employer or employee, as the case may be.

As heretofore stated, the bill comes from the Ways and Means Committee with a unanimous report. It is very desirable that the bill be enacted at the earliest date possible.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILITARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6692, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6692, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6692, an act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall not object, but I take this means of calling to the special attention of the conferees who may be appointed on this bill, and also to express the hope, that they adopt the amendment passed by the Senate yesterday, placing a limitation upon the activities of the post exchanges at the different Army posts of the country. I do that for this reason: I am certain that at a great many of the Army posts there has been abuse of the activities and the authority of the post exchanges, because many of them have come to be nothing more or less than department stores.

Those post exchanges, as I understand it, were established for the purpose of administering to the personal wants of the Army personnel, whereas the report is now current that at many exchanges they sell automobiles, radios, furniture, rugs, gasoline in large quantities, and some persons are claiming that sales are being made to civilians, indirectly if not directly. I do not have personal knowledge of the matter, but the amendment can do no harm.

As I read the amendment in the RECORD this morning, it puts only a reasonable limitation upon sales and confines those sales to minor personal needs of strictly Army personnel. I take this means of expressing the hope that this committee will stand for this amendment when they go into conference, which seemingly passed the Senate yesterday by unanimous vote. Merchants in local communities who pay high taxes and have large overhead expenses should not be subjected to any such unfair competition.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SEGER. Will this apply to the Panama Canal Zone?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I could not answer that with certainty, but I should think it would. I am not so much concerned about that, but I have in mind the situation within the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman whether or not it is a fact that the other body combined both the military and nonmilitary appropriation bills in this one measure.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That is a matter about to be taken up in a minute by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. RAYBURN. The answer is that they did.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand an amendment was placed in the bill which authorizes certain money for building construction at Army posts.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That is true.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Twenty million dollars?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No; that is not the amount.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I earnestly hope that the House will agree to that amendment. I think the amount is approximately $2,000,000 instead of $20,000,000. There is an appropriation for buildings to be constructed at Fort Dennis in my own district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit a motion, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 6692, the Military Appropriation Act, 1938, be instructed not to agree to the Senate amendments to such bill numbered 47 to 77, inclusive, and 80, and not to agree to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of such bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution confers upon the House and the Senate respectively certain exclusive prerogatives. Among those reserved to the House by the Constitution is the right to originate revenue bills, and from the beginning of the Government the House has asserted and successfully maintained that the right to originate revenue bills also involves the right to initiate general appropriation bills. That has been the uniform practice, and in keeping with that doctrine the House has formulated the general appropriation bills since the establishment of the Government. Of course, the right to originate general appropriation bills necessarily includes the right to determine the form and the manner in which they shall be presented, and from the beginning the number and scope of the various annual supply bills have been determined by the House with the acquiescence of the Senate. Only on one or two rare occasions has this right of the House been questioned, and in each such instance the Senate has promptly disavowed any intention of infringing on the constitutional prerogatives of the House and yielded without contention.

The last instance was in the second session of the Sixty-second Congress and was the occasion for an exhaustive study of the subject by Hon. John Sharp Williams, formerly minority leader of the House and at the time a member of the Senate, which was published as a Senate document and which so conclusively confirmed the contention of the House that its right to originate the general supply bills and determine their form had not since been challenged until the receipt just now of a message from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has assumed the right to combine the two War Department appropriation bills by attaching the nonmilitary bill to the military bill as an amendment, with the comment on the floor that the action of the House in reporting and passing the bill was "surgery" and "not well performed."

The motion offered proposes to respectfully call the attention of the Senate to this infringement, of course, inadvertent, by instructing House conferees to decline to agree to the amendment by which the two bills have been merged or to any perfecting amendment which may have been made to the text of the nonmilitary bill. Under such instruction, House conferees will be at liberty to consider and agree in full on the final text of the War Department appropriation bill providing for military activities and the Senate may then message over as a separate bill the nonmilitary bill, as amended by the Senate, and the House will appoint conferees to meet with Senate conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill as originated by the House of Representatives.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has probably stated the history of revenue acts and appropriation acts, a custom immemorial in this country. I am glad the gentleman has made the motion he has and I trust the House of Representatives may assert and reassert its rights and will unanimously support the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Just for information, would that take out of the bill the Senate amendment to provide for additional appropriations for Army housing, Army barracks, and clothing.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It will not affect that item, as the appropriation for barracks and clothing is carried in the military activities bill on which the conferees are authorized to confer.

I am glad to have the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the majority leader, approve the action taken by the Committee on Appropriations. I am certain the House will generally object to the establishment of a precedent which would violate 150 years of parliamentary procedure and open the door to practices which would complicate relations between the two Houses in future conferences.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I join with the gentleman from Missouri and the majority leader in the hope that the gentleman's motion will be adopted, because it is our duty to respect our rights as one of the two branches of the Congress. If we do not, nobody else will. But, in order to obtain specific information, I would like to ask the gentleman if the effect of this will be to have the nonmilitary appropriation bill considered by the Senate separately from the bill as it came from the Senate, which includes both the military and nonmilitary activities. Is that correct?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is true. Mr. Speaker, we are not here considering the merits of any of the amendments. We are not considering the reasons which prompted the Senate to take this extraordinary action. We merely propose by this motion to maintain the constitutional rights of the House of Representatives.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the ranking minority member of the committee, such time as he may desire.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], has offered this resolution to instruct the conferees to refuse to consider or agree to the amendments which the Senate has placed in this bill, which constitutes practically the whole of the nonmilitary appropriation bill as it was passed by the House. The Committee on Appropriations has approved the offering of this resolution. The effect will be just as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] stated, that the Senate will consider the nonmilitary bill by itself and send it over here by itself, where we can consider whatever amendments they may choose to offer to it.

In my opinion, the House should stand by the practice which has been going on for 150 years of permitting the House of Representatives to initiate appropriation bills. When we send them to the Senate separately they should be considered separately all the way through to final passage.

I hope this resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] will receive the unanimous support of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As a matter of principle, why divide this bill when we have not divided other bills where appropriations similar to rivers and harbors and flood control are contained? I am speaking of the principle involved.

Mr. TABER. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that whenever bills have become so cumbersome and involve so many different projects that their division has seemed desirable, and the matter has been considered by the Appropriations Committee and the Budget, their division has been brought about. In this particular case the committee felt that we were more or less deceiving the people and making them believe that this country was spending a couple of hundred million dollars more for military purposes than was the actual fact. Our military appropriation bill should tell the truth, that we are spending about $388,000,000 on the military end of the situation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There would be just as much reason to separate the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill and the appropriation made for highways, the Department of the Interior appropriation bill and the appropriation made for reclamation as there is to separate the appropriation bill here made for flood control and for rivers and harbors.

Mr. TABER. I do not think so.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The division of these bills is not a new procedure in this House. If you will examine into the precedents you will find that the old custom was to divide the military and nonmilitary activities. That was pursued for a number of years.

Mr. TABER. I understand that was the practice.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that if we let the Senate get away with this, if they wanted to they could take the Interior bill, the Navy Department bill, and all the other bills and tie them all together, if they had a case where they wanted a bill to be vetoed, and it would veto the whole thing?

Mr. TABER. Yes; and they could logroll and put a bill like that over a Presidential veto when it ought not to be done.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. As I understand the situation, this is not determining whether there should have been two bills initiated. The fact was there were two bills that passed the House of Representatives. Now, it is the constitutional prerogative of the House to initiate appropriation bills. It seems to me the question is whether we are going to stand upon the Constitution.

Mr. TABER. That should be the main consideration that inspires Members to vote on this motion.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], chairman of the Committee on Rules, such time as he may require.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which I, in my feeble way, have supported for years. I am glad that the great Committee on Appropriations takes this position.

It was no mere accident that under the Constitution this House was given two great powers: First, control over the purse strings of the Nation; and, second, the right to declare war. In the minds of some people at least we have surrendered this latter right just recently, but I for one never want to see this House go so far as to surrender control of the purse strings. We should do the appropriating, not the other body, which has no fundamental constitutional jurisdiction over that.

I hope that the attitude that is apparent here today will be pursued throughout this session and throughout every succeeding Congress in order to maintain our province and our jurisdiction against the intrusion or the encroachment of any other body or of any other branch of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this motion is presented by the unanimous direction of the Committee on Appropriations and I trust meets with the unanimous approval of the House. I move the previous question.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I withhold the motion for the previous question and yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Can the gentleman advise me whether there is any foundation to the remark that is going about that the purpose of separating these bills is to remove from the Board of Army Engineers such duties as they are now performing with reference to these nonmilitary projects?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Not to my knowledge. The gentleman's inquiry is the first suggestion I have heard on the subject.

Mr. COLMER. I merely wanted to get some information on it. I am not charging that to be a fact at all.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I know of no grounds for any such statement. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to instruct conferees.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think, Mr. Speaker, in order to show the Senate that the resolution was agreed to unanimously that there should be a division.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman on his feet for the purpose of demanding a division when the vote was being taken?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will withdraw my request. As long as the RECORD shows that it was a unanimous vote of the House, I am satisfied.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan rises to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman will state the ground of his question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The first ground is based on a newspaper article in the Detroit News of this week. I send it to the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the article in his hand?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have a copy of it.

MILITARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield long enough for the Chair to appoint conferees? We should like to go to conference.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees on the bill just acted upon: Messrs. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, DOCKWEILER, TERRY, STARNES, COLLINS, POWERS, and ENGEL.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Michigan the original of the matter of which he complains?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have it in the office, but I have a copy here. I will send for the other one.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill H. R. 7589, the Carriers' Taxing Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the business of the House and the special orders heretofore entered I may address the House for 10 minutes today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next immediately after the reading of the Journal, the conclusion of the legislative program, and the special order heretofore made I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT AND STATEMENT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference committee on the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6523) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6523) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Correction of totals, allocations, etc.

The following amendments relate to the corrections of totals, allocations, transfers, clarifications of the text, etc.:

Amendments nos. 4, 5, 8, 11, 13, 17, 19, 24, 27, 31, 32, 38, 40, 42, 50, 53, 59, 61, 63, 66, 70, 78, 83, 84, 85, 86, 91, 92, 98, 100, 103, 104, 106, 108, 109, 117, 118, 119, 120, and 132.

"Other necessary expenses"

The following amendments relate to the action of the Senate in striking out the words "other necessary expenses", or words of similar import, in the several paragraphs to which the amendments apply. As to each and all of these amendments the Senate has receded. The amendments are:

Amendments nos. 3, 6, 9, 14, 18, 25, 26, 28, 33, 34, 36, 39, 44, 51, 77, 79, 87, 89, 93, 97, 99, 101, 114, 115, 121, 128, 129, 135, and 136.

Office of the Secretary

On amendment no. 1, salaries: Appropriates $452,700, as proposed by the House, instead of $442,700, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 2, spray-residue investigations: Retains the Senate provision that no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be used for laboratory investigations to determine the possibly harmful effect on human beings of spray insecticides on fruits and vegetables.

Office of the Solicitor

On amendment no. 7, salaries and expenses: Appropriates $194,160, as proposed by the House, instead of $195,780, as proposed by the Senate.

Office of Information

On amendment no. 10, salaries and expenses: Appropriates $366,480, as proposed by the House, instead of $363,282, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 12, printing and binding: Appropriates $387,650, instead of $394,250 as proposed by the House and $864,250 as proposed by the Senate.

Office of Experiment Stations

On amendment no. 15, payments to Hawaii: Appropriates $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $60,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 16, payments to States under Bankhead-Jones Act: Appropriates $1,800,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,500,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Special research fund

On amendment no. 20: Appropriates $1,200,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Extension Service

On amendment no. 21, supplementary cooperative extension work: Appropriates $790,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,185,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 22, extension work under Bankhead-Jones Act: Appropriates $10,000,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $9,800,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 23, additional cooperative extension work: Appropriates $500,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $750,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Weather Bureau

On amendment no. 29, general weather service and research: Retains the Senate increases of $23,920 for flood-warning service in the Pittsburgh, Pa., region; $10,000 for restoration of weather station at Dayton, Ohio; and $10,000 for restoration of weather station at Greenville, S. C. Eliminates the Senate increase of $5,000 above an increase of the same amount granted by the House for additional weather service to citrus growers of California.

On amendment no. 30, aerology: Eliminates the Senate increases of $35,000 for the substitution of a numeral code for the present word code and of $57,771 for the replacement of Army airplane flights by contract flights at five Army airfields in connection with daily observations of upper air conditions. Retains the remaining $501,090 of the Senate increase for general improvement and strengthening of the airways weather service.

Bureau of Animal Industry

On amendment no. 35, marketing agreements with respect to hog cholera virus and serum: Retains the Senate amendment making $30,000 of A. A. A. funds available for effecting such agreements.

Bureau of Dairy Industry

On amendment no. 37, dairy investigation: Retains the Senate increase of $6,600 for the development of commercial sources for the utilization of skim milk, buttermilk, and whey, and for the commercial introduction of processes for manufacturing milk products. Eliminates the remaining Senate increase of $14,801.

Bureau of Plant Industry

On amendment no. 41, forest pathology: Appropriates $259,592, as provided by the House, instead of $252,092, as provided by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 43 and 45, National Arboretum: Provides an increase of $80,000, instead of $90,000, as proposed by the House, and restores the language of the House, stricken out by the Senate, amended to read as follows: "including not exceeding $80,000 for acquisition of additional land, notwithstanding the limitations of said act of March 4, 1927."

On amendment no. 46, nematology: Includes the Senate increase of $5,000 for work on nematodes in narcissus and other bulbs.

On amendment no. 47, rubber and other tropical plants: Appropriates $46,749, as provided by the Senate, instead of $40,000, as provided by the House.

On amendment no. 48, seed investigations: Appropriates $72,293, as provided by the Senate, instead of $67,293, as provided by the House.

On amended no. 49, sugar-plant investigations: Retains the House increase of $16,700 for establishment of sugar-plant experiment station in Mississippi.

Forest Service

On amendment no. 52, National Forest Administration: Retains the Senate increase of $10,000 for recreation and special land-use developments.

On amendment no. 54, forest management: Retains the Senate increases of $9,909 for pinion-juniper and other woodland types of the Southwest and of $7,500 for conversion of brush fields in northern California into valuable timber stands. Eliminates the Senate increase of $7,500 for planting and reforestation studies in the Central States.

Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine

On amendments nos. 67 and 68, Japanese beetle control: Retains the Senate increase of $25,000 in this appropriation and eliminates the Senate provision that $40,000 of the total appropriation shall only be available for cooperation with the State of Maryland.

On amendment no. 69, sweetpotato weevil: Appropriates $75,000, instead of $50,000 as provided by the House and $100,000 as provided by the Senate.

On amendments nos. 71 and 72, forest insects: Retains the Senate increase of $39,738 in this appropriation and the Senate provision that $40,000 of the appropriation shall only be available for expenditure when matched by State funds.

On amendment no. 73, Dutch elm disease: Appropriates $460,860, instead of $421,720, as proposed by the House, and $500,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 74, insects affecting man and animals: Retains the House increase of $10,000 for ticks in the vicinity of Marthas Vineyard Island, Mass.

On amendment no. 75, transit inspection: Appropriates $44,059, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $36,559, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 76, foreign plant quarantines: Appropriates $680,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $661,720, as proposed by the House.

Bureau of Biological Survey

On amendment no. 80, food habits of birds and animals: Appropriates $68,140, as proposed by the House, instead of $75,640, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 81, biological investigations: Retains $18,000 of the House increase of $42,000 for the establishment of three new regional stations for cooperative studies of wildlife.

On amendment no. 82, control of predatory animals and injurious rodents: Retains the House increase of $12,000 for work on rodents harmful to orchard trees in the Northeastern States.

Bureau of Agricultural Engineering

On amendment no. 90, agricultural engineering investigations: Appropriates $423,169, instead of $415,669, as proposed by the House, and $430,669, as proposed by the Senate.

Bureau of Agricultural Economics

On amendment no. 94, farm management and practice: Appropriates $376,580, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $386,580, as proposed by the House.

On amendment no. 95, marketing and distributing farm products: Retains the Senate increase of $7,500 for studies of Federal, State, and local regulations affecting trade in agricultural products.

On amendment no. 96, Tobacco Inspection Act: Retains the House increase of $25,000.

Bureau of Home Economics

On amendment no. 102, home economics investigations: Appropriates $213,350, as proposed by the House, instead of $188,350, as proposed by the Senate.

Enforcement of the Commodity Exchange Act

On amendment no. 105, salaries and expenses: Appropriates $500,000, instead of $400,000, as proposed by the House, and $590,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Food and Drug Administration

On amendment no. 107, enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act: Appropriates $1,750,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,700,000, as proposed by the House.

Soil Conservation Service

On amendment no. 110, cost of buildings: Retains the House limitation of $15,000, instead of the Senate limitation of $10,000, upon the cost of not to exceed 20 buildings.

On amendment no. 111, construction of buildings: Retains the Senate provision prohibiting the erection of buildings on land not owned by the Government.

On amendment no. 112, general administrative expenses: Appropriates $675,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $600,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 113: Retains the Senate provision that no part of the appropriation for administrative expenses shall be available if any emergency or other appropriations are made available for administrative expenses in administering the funds provided in regular appropriations to the Soil Conservation Service.

On amendment no. 116, soil and moisture demonstrations: Appropriates $22,175,000, instead of $22,225,000, as proposed by the House, and $22,125,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Crop benefit payments for soil-conserving practices

On amendments nos. 122 and 123, conservation and use of agricultural land resources: Appropriates $500,000,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $440,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 125, administrative expenses in carrying out section 32 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes": Restores the language stricken out by the Senate, amended to read as follows: ": And provided further, That the funds provided by section 32 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes', approved August 24, 1935 (U. S. C., Supp. II, title 7, sec. 612c), shall be available during the fiscal year 1938 for administrative expenses in such sums as the President may direct in carrying out the provisions of said section, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to the employment of persons and means by Agricultural Adjustment Administration."

Beltsville Research Center

On amendment no. 127: Appropriates $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $85,000, as proposed by the House.

Elimination of diseased cattle

On amendment no. 130: Retains the Senate provision that $2,000,000 of the funds for elimination of diseased cattle may be used only in those States which have made appropriations for indemnifying the owners of cattle reacting to the test for Bang's disease.

Forest roads and trails

On amendment no. 131: Appropriates $12,500,000, instead of $11,000,000 as proposed by the House and $14,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 133: Eliminates the House provision that total expenditures for forest roads and trails on account of any State or Territory shall at no time exceed its authorized apportionment as provided by section 23 of the Federal Highway Act.

Disagreements

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments of the Senate:

On amendment no. 88, Federal-aid highway system: Strikes out the House provision that the appropriation be available for the purchase of medical supplies and services and other assistance necessary for the immediate relief of employees engaged on hazardous work of the Bureau and inserts language providing that $450,000 of administrative funds, in addition to sums heretofore authorized (making in all $1,360,000), may be used for the construction (including the cost of a site already acquired) of a laboratory for permanent quarters for the testing and research work of the Bureau of Public Roads.

On amendment no. 124: Making the appropriation for domestic allotments available for the purchase of seeds, fertilizers, or any other farming materials, and making grants thereof to agricultural producers to aid them in carrying out farming practices approved by the Secretary of Agriculture in the 1937 programs, for the reimbursement of the Tennessee Valley Authority for fertilizers heretofore or hereafter furnished by it to the Secretary of Agriculture for such purpose, and for the payment of expenses in connection with the making of such grants.

On amendment no. 126, interchange of appropriations: Authorizing transfers within bureaus of 10 percent of the amounts appropriated for the respective activities within the respective bureaus.

On amendment no. 134, forest roads and trails: Fixing the apportionment of the Territory of Alaska for the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 at $350,000 for each of said years, and providing that the remainder of the sums that would be otherwise apportioned to said Territory shall be reapportioned in the same manner and on the same basis as provided in the second paragraph of section 23 (a) of the Federal Highway Act among those States whose forest highway apportionments for the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 otherwise would be less than 1 percent of the entire apportionment for forest highways.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the first column of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 22, page 6161, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] makes this statement:

> I will not take the time to answer some of the statements made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], who just preceded me, who only a few days ago urged his son or someone to obtain for him guns and ammunition with a threat to go to Detroit to shoot down all those who were trying and striving to obtain a better living wage to provide a better existence for their families and loved ones.

I called the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to that statement this morning and he advised me a few moments ago in the corridor that that statement was not made on the floor of the House but was inserted in the RECORD afterward.

I claim personal privilege on that ground.

I also claim personal privilege on the statements of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], which are found on page 6162 of the RECORD of the same day, in which he states, among other things, as follows:

> Let us remember that the gentleman from Michigan made a statement the other day that he was going into some State, either Pennsylvania or Michigan, and that he was going to arm himself and march in the State. He said he had wired his son to get 200 rounds of ammunition.

Then something further is said, which I am skipping. He proceeded as follows:

> I am getting a little bit tired of constantly hearing this ranting and roaring of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]. It is getting very boresome. But, speaking of his getting together an army and marching into a State, if we go back into history and study one of the famous judicial trials of the South, when Mr. John Brown came into the State of Virginia with arms and ammunition, he was tried for treason. Suppose Mr. John Lewis—

And he makes a statement about Lewis.

> But a Congressman can get up and say that he can invade a State with arms and ammunition, and have his son get ammunition, like John Brown's son did, and that is all right. That is fine; that is wonderful. But if John Lewis said that, he would be tried for treason, as John Brown was. He would be called a traitor on this floor; but we permit one of our Members to do it.

My point is he refers to my statement as being traitorous and says I am guilty of that kind of conduct. He continues:

> What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander; and a Congressman has no more right to violate the law of the land than John Lewis or anybody else.

He implies that I would violate the law. I understand the rule to be, in part at least, that the remedy was to demand at the time that the words be taken down. I was not on the floor when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] made the statement; and, personally, I do not know how much of the statement he made on the floor or how much was inserted in the revision of his remarks. I understand the rule to be that I am not now entitled to speak to a question of special privilege. But I do know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who is here, told me that the statement attributed to him as having been made on the floor was not made on the floor, but the language appears in the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. When I came on the floor that day somebody informed me that the gentleman from Michigan had made a statement on the floor that he would secure guns and ammunition and would use them; but later on, only yesterday, I found out he made the statement he would do that only in the defense of his property and not in connection with a strike.

In view of that fact, Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask unanimous consent to strike that language from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I still believe I may rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has presented a question of personal privilege, based upon two propositions. The first is to language inserted in the RECORD purported to have been uttered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], which language appears on page 6162 of the RECORD of June 22, which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has quoted.

The rule is—and it has been sustained and supported by the practice and precedents for many years—when offensive language is uttered upon the floor by a Member reflecting in anywise on a fellow Member, or language is uttered to which the offending Member desires to take exception, it is the duty of such Member instantly to exercise his privilege and demand that the offending words be taken down. This would give the House an opportunity to pass judgment upon whether the language should be retained in the RECORD, expunged, or other action taken.

By confession, the gentleman from Michigan did not avail himself of that opportunity, explaining he did not do so probably because he was temporarily absent from the floor when the gentleman from Texas used said language. Under such circumstances, of course, the absence of the Member from the floor would be no justification for him to be made an exception to the rule. It is to be assumed that he is on the floor of the House at all times during the session of the House.

The Chair is therefore of the opinion that on that point of personal privilege the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is not entitled to the floor on a question of personal privilege under the rules and practices of the House.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, what is the remedy of a Member who is attacked in an extension of remarks in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was just about to take that question up.

The Chair stated there are two grounds upon which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] bases his question of personal privilege. The second ground is that on page 6161 of the RECORD of the same date the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] made certain statements, as published in the RECORD, of which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] complains.

If, as a matter of fact, the gentleman from Illinois inserted in the RECORD matters not actually stated by him upon the floor at the time which gave offense to the gentleman from Michigan, it was then the privilege of the gentleman from Michigan to raise that question, as he has now raised it, as a matter of personal privilege when his attention was called to the offending language. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois has undertaken to make an explanation of the matter and has offered to move to have the offending language stricken from the RECORD, does the gentleman still insist on the matter of personal privilege?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I propound a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, if I claim the right to proceed, and am granted that right at this time, after the ruling of the Chair, will I be permitted to discuss the utterances of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK]?

The SPEAKER. No. The Chair has ruled that the matter complained of does not now entitle the gentleman to rise to a question of personal privilege.

The gentleman would, if he insisted, after the ruling of the Chair on the second point of order involving the language of the gentleman from Illinois, be entitled to discuss that matter.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I am in complete sympathy with the position the gentleman takes.

However, in view of the ruling of the Chair on the first question of personal privilege and the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], I trust the gentleman will not avail himself of the right to be heard at this time.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I think not.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] desire to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman from Michigan says he thinks he will not yield. Will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman said he thought he would not.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph of which the gentleman complains, and of which I believe he has a right to complain, may be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if I yield on that point, I will be out. I can see that very clearly.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like at this time to submit a unanimous-consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the business on the Speaker's desk has been disposed of, I may be permitted to proceed for not 1 hour but 30 minutes, and after the other orders.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of all legislative matters and special orders heretofore made, he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as an inducement for the granting of the gentleman's unanimous-consent request, I ask unanimous consent that the House revoke the action taken on my request for time to address the House on Monday. In other words, my disposition is to waive the time previously granted me.

The SPEAKER. That request will have to be submitted subsequently, as only one request can be pending at a time.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say I will not be in the city on Monday, but I will be here on Tuesday. Would the gentleman from Michigan mind modifying his request and ask to speak on Tuesday instead of Monday?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I should be glad to, but I am going up to Providence on Tuesday to talk on law and order.

Mr. MAVERICK. Then I shall be very glad to defer to the gentleman and let him talk on Monday. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to submit his request now?

Mr. COX. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the permission granted him heretofore to address the House on Monday be revoked. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has a unanimous-consent request pending. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to strike from the permanent RECORD the language referred to by him?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, of course the gentleman intends to make his request apply after the legislative program of the day?

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman understands I am asking for only 5 minutes?

Mr. RAYBURN. I have been objecting to similar requests by everybody else.

Mr. MAVERICK. This is a very small amount of time.

Mr. RAYBURN. I know; but I must treat everyone alike. I know my colleague does not want me to vary from this rule.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman make an exception for 3 minutes? I want to reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]. Well, I yield to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, and modify my request and ask that I may address the House after all the legislative business of that day is concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the legislative business of the day, and following the special orders heretofore made, he may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY BILL

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 228.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 228

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5969, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to make in order the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5969), which is known as the municipal bankruptcy bill.

I may say as a matter of information, possibly largely to the new Members of the body, that on the 24th day of May 1924 there was enacted an almost similar bill, the purpose of which was to deal with the conditions existing in the municipalities of the country, together with school districts, drainage districts, levee districts, and those local improvement districts created by virtue of State law in many States of the Union. This is a matter with which you are entirely familiar. At the time that bill was passed practically all of the agencies I have mentioned found themselves very heavily indebted and unable to secure through their systems of collection of the benefits assessed against the various properties the funds necessary to meet maturing obligations. The result of this condition was that the holders of such securities were absolutely without a return on their investments.

There was no assurance offered the holders of the securities and therefore in the financial circles of our country a profound impression was created by reason of this general default.

The theory suggested itself of providing a forum through which a voluntary adjustment on the part of these local units and their creditors could be effectuated. We called around the board the holders of these securities, we made agreements covering a large percentage of the amounts outstanding, but because of the conduct of speculators entering into the picture, we were unable to effectuate these compositions made voluntarily with the larger number of holders. So we conceived it to be necessary, in order to deal with these matters, that some method should be provided through which these very small holdings could be bound. Such a bill was prepared and presented to the House and Senate and received practically a unanimous endorsement. Great benefits were effected by the operation of this measure. Many millions of dollars of these securities were refunded, all by voluntary agreement with the larger number of bondholders of the securities, but many more were headed off by the action of these few people. It was not always at the instance of the speculator, however, I may say to the House. In some instances we were unable to find the holder of a small part of these issues and therefore were unable to get a settlement of a character that would complete the adjustment of these debts.

However, on the 25th day of May of last year, the Supreme Court of the United States, in one of its 5 to 4 opinions, held that this act was an invasion of the State's prerogatives merely because these local agencies created by virtue of the laws of the various States had issued the securities and in their organization and work-out were a legal unit under the creation of the State; but insofar as the sovereignty of the State is concerned, there was absolutely no connecting link between them; a mere creature of a State law that authorized them to bind themselves together for the purpose of effectuating some particular improvement, and to levy the benefits of that improvement on their property interest, creating a board to manage the affairs of the local units, to collect the betterments levied against the property, and without the necessity even of making a report to the State or any of its officers, and yet this bill was held unconstitutional, as an invasion of the State's rights, because it was a part of the State sovereignty, although just as distinct as you could conceive of.

Take, for example, a municipality, a creature of a State just the same as a local improvement district. They in no manner represent the sovereign State in which they are located. It is a power conferred under the laws of that State for the administration of local affairs. The State does not in any manner invade the prerogatives of the local institutions; neither do the local institutions in any manner transcend the authority of the State of its origin. There is no connecting link in the taxes levied and collected by the municipality; no connecting link insofar as reports to any officer of the State may be concerned. They levy their own taxes, they collect them, and administer their own affairs, and I could not conceive of a principle that is so far removed from the theory of State sovereignty as the theory on which that decision was founded.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman care to yield for a question?

Mr. DRIVER. I would be very pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. In a general way I have always opposed this legislation, for the reason it seemed to me, although I am not a real student of the bill in all its technicalities, we are doing something that would make it easier for a community, or one of its subdivisions of which the gentleman speaks, to repudiate its debts and make the people who bought these securities in good faith take less than the face value which they paid for the securities.

Mr. DRIVER. With the experience we have had under this bill, I can say that the gentleman is entirely mistaken in that conception. This bill is a measure under which the holders of these securities have received benefits that were beyond their pale before it was passed.

Let me give the gentleman from New York an illustration. I have in mind the situation in one district that I am entirely familiar with where 92 percent of the holders of the securities issued by the district——

Mr. SNELL. What kind of district was that?

Mr. DRIVER. A drainage district, a local improvement district, on all fours with practically every bit of the range covered by this bill. Ninety-two percent of the holders of the securities issued by the district joined with the commissioners of the district and went into the Federal court for the purpose of receiving a composition of the agreement they had made between themselves.

That is voluntary up to that point. There is nothing compulsory here until a percentage of two-thirds of all of the securities are drawn together, and then it is laid before the court for the court's consideration as to whether or not the agreement they make is one that is fair and reasonable in accordance with the ability of the district to pay. Let me give the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] just one other illustration. The failure to compose these debts means no one gets a dollar. These bondholders will not receive 1 cent of contribution. It is a matter of impossibility for them to meet the great amount of delinquencies that occurred during the period of depression. All of that is piled up. The taxpayers of the district find themselves unable to meet that great amount of debt, and they ask the creditors to get around the board with them and there they work out the matter on the basis of ability to pay. That would have been sufficient if 100 percent had been there. When you get 66⅔ percent it is strong evidence to start with that it is a fair agreement, but when you go into a court and lay it before the court, in order to bind the small percentage that will not come in or that we are unable to induce to enter, then the whole settlement goes down and affairs are left in chaos.

Mr. SNELL. My inquiry applied more to municipalities than to districts to which the gentleman has referred, with which I am not familiar, but it does seem to me that we should be careful about passing any legislation that gives any municipality the right to repudiate and beat the honest holders of its securities out of their money. I think I know—I will not say that I know, because often one thinks he knows something that he does not—that some municipalities have taken advantage of the situation. The moral responsibility of the community is not very strong, and they are trying to get out of the payment of their honest obligations, and I am opposed to passing any legislation that will give such a community an opportunity to act in that way.

Mr. DRIVER. The gentleman from New York is no stronger in his conviction that that should not be done than I, but every safeguard is provided here. Not only is it required to deal under the provisions of this bill with a large majority, 66⅔ percent of the holders of those securities, but in addition to that we must apply to the Federal court and lay the agreement before the court and submit to its judgment the fairness to all of the holders of the securities before an order is issued binding the small minority that we are unable to reach.

Mr. SNELL. Let me say a word about these various security holders. A man in the eastern or any other part of the United States who holds a bond for $1,000 of a community in another part of the country, that bond being in default, is practically helpless. What can he do? If he gets the statement from a reorganization committee setting forth the situation and how much the debt is, and how the people are unable to pay, and the matter of distress, he has no opportunity to defend himself. He cannot afford to go to law, he cannot afford to do anything. About the only thing that he can do under the circumstances is to accept that settlement, and in that way a great many times you get your 66⅔ percent that the gentleman is talking about when, as a matter of fact, if these men had an opportunity, if it were right at home where they could attend to the matter themselves, they never would agree to any such settlement. I know that from personal experience.

Mr. DRIVER. I do not know of one settlement that has been effected under the provisions of the act of May 24, 1934, that has not been for the benefit of the holders of the securities.

Mr. SNELL. I know some that in my judgment were not.

Mr. DRIVER. They were in many instances able to secure an obligation on which payments are being made promptly today and in other instances they were enabled to get money in accordance with the percentage under which they provided the loans.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of fact, the people who work out this percentage are nearly always interested in the community or the municipality.

Mr. DRIVER. Oh, not at all; not one.

Mr. SNELL. I have had some experience.

Mr. DRIVER. Possibly my answer is too broad.

Mr. SNELL. Some of them have.

Mr. DRIVER. In none of the securities in the section where I reside.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. DRIVER. And largely in the section where this bill operates bonds are not held locally; in fact, unfortunately, this is true, that occasionally distress bonds were purchased by local speculators, not entirely of that community but nearby, and they are the causes of much of the trouble that we have encountered.

Mr. SNELL. That is one of the things I tried to call to the gentleman's attention. The bonds are not held locally; they are held by people scattered all over the country, and it is impossible for these people to get together and protect themselves.

For that reason they accept a settlement that is made by some committee that calls itself a reorganization committee, and in my judgment, in many cases, in some few that I have tried to look up, I am sure they do not get the consideration I believe they are honestly entitled to.

Mr. DRIVER. I believe by far and large the gentleman from New York will find that the workout we have provided in the past 2 years has been one in the interest practically entirely of the bondholders, to give to them a live obligation that they can use, and money on the basis of ability to pay.

Mr. SNELL. It may be live, but it is such a small part of their original investment that they really get very little.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I have used more time than I had expected to. I want to yield to the gentleman from Texas an opportunity to present to this House something of the principles of this bill. The mechanics are not important. That can be dealt with when the bill is under consideration, but the theory on which it is founded is one that I am anxious for the gentleman from Texas to give to the House, and I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] for just a moment. Pursuing the thought of my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. DRIVER], I may say to the gentleman from New York that in the Cameron County water improvement district case it was found that the bonded indebtedness was about $100 an acre and the value of the property about $75. Something had to be done in a situation like that. A great many of the municipalities in trouble were of mushroom growth. People who hold their obligations have not been able to collect anything. The plan and purpose of this bill is to give a majority of two-thirds of their creditors and the debtor an opportunity to sit around the table and work out an adjustment, submit that agreement to a court, and if found just to all parties, fix the terms of that agreement by a judgment of that court. It is necessary for two-thirds of the creditors to agree to a settlement, and it is necessary for a judge to find that that settlement is fair and equitable to the nonagreeing creditors. There is not a lawyer or a businessman in this House who does not recognize that such a privilege is a valuable privilege, helpful in collecting debts from those who owe more than can be paid 100 cents on the dollar. The force of the bill is directed against that minority present in every effort of debtors and creditors to bring the total of amounts payable within the ability of the debtor to pay. It is the minority who try to take advantage of the general desire to settle to compel an advantage to themselves in order to remove their selfishly interposed obstruction. They are hold-up men operating within the law.

Whatever may be the theory with regard to the ability of creditors to force these municipalities to pay, it does not work.

Mr. SNELL. I agree it does not work.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We might just as well recognize that. It does not work. There is no effective governmental agency that can compel a municipality to pay its bonds. In view of that situation the committee looked into this matter as thoroughly as it could and believed it was common sense and practical and helpful to present this bill. This bill incorporates the practical suggestions of those interested. It is, perhaps, as near an embodiment of the consensus of opinion and judgment of all interested classes as can be found in legislative propositions affecting financial matters. They wanted to be in a position to go before a court with an agreement of the debtor and at least two-thirds of the creditors and compel those who want to hijack—that is not a good expression—somebody who wants to get more than the rest of them are getting, to submit to the plan. This bill operates upon an unwilling minority who are interfering with a settlement that has been effected by two-thirds of the people. But even as to that minority, the court must find that the settlement as to them is fair and equitable. That is about all there is to the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say there is one statement with regard to this bill I should like to make, and then I shall be glad to answer any questions. However, there are other members of the committee better prepared to answer as to the details than I am.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will agree with me that the individual bondholders distributed throughout the country never have quite a fair opportunity to present their case?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I assume that with the individual small bondholder that would be true.

Mr. SNELL. But when you buy a municipal bond you think there is a moral responsibility back of that which makes it better than the average industrial bond.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. People used to think that, anyway.

Mr. SNELL. I do not want to pass any legislation that will make it easier for some of these communities which do not fully appreciate the moral responsibility which rests upon that community to repudiate some of their debts.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But we must choose between two remedies. One is the absence of any remedy in effect. Take a drainage district, for example, or take a levee district, the people who own the land find that the debts are greater than the value of the land. What happens? They just lie down on the job.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman as far as levee districts are concerned, but when you come to a municipality with $100,000,000 assessed valuation, there is the real question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is the real question. The gentleman from Florida knows some of these instances.

Mr. SNELL. I think he knows all about them.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Finally, you reach a situation in the case of some of these municipalities where the bonded indebtedness is greater than the ability of the municipality to collect taxes to retire the indebtedness. I think this is absolutely true with reference to many of these municipalities. This legislation, as we see it, is in favor of the people who own these bonds. Take the case of a municipality which defaults. No new business wants to settle there. In some of these cities the taxes are absolutely prohibitive. The result is that just as soon as a person is able to do it he takes his business away. That means that the tax base is reduced. This in turn means that the value of the bonds is constantly being reduced. These bondholders want to do something about such a situation. This bill is the best they or the Judiciary Committee has been able to devise.

The practical thing to do, before the default gets too great, before too many people get discouraged, before too many businesses pull out of that municipality is to provide that the people who hold the mortgages may sit around the table with the debtor and work out a compromise. That is all we can do. They should sit around a table and work this thing out, and when two-thirds of them shall have agreed on a proposition as the best that can be had, prevent a minority from being able to wreck the whole effort to do something about it. That is the practical side of the proposition.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. We know that in some of these communities there are always some people saying that they are not going to pay their taxes, that they will let the situation go along so far that the tax receipts are not sufficient to meet the obligations and in that way force a compromise with their creditors. I am opposed to that proposition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am sorry if the gentleman does not agree. I have done the best I can to explain the object and plan of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Certain people take advantage of the cities and their creditors are doing it now.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is possibly so. Sometimes I have thought people took advantage of me, but I would not for that reason repeal the law which seeks to bring about a composition between debtors and creditors. We are dealing with a practical situation here, trying to collect debts.

Mr. SNELL. Very few will be collected under this law, though.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The people believe it will work well. I am afraid I have an impossible task in convincing the gentleman. I am afraid we must lose his vote.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The people seeking the law are not the bondholders trying to collect the debt, the people seeking the law are the drainage districts and the municipalities exclusively trying to avoid payment. We had extensive hearings.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I draw the attention of my colleague to the fact that representative after representative of people who own bonds and various sorts of obligations, as the records of the committee will show, came before the committee and urged the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. MICHENER. I have the hearings before me.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If the gentleman has the hearings and will read he will find it is as I have said.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GEARHART. In the 66⅔ percent the court can only include those creditors whose interests are materially affected, the court cannot consider those creditors who have claims that are owned, held, or controlled by the petitioning bankrupt. Is not this true?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe that is true; so that class is wiped out of the picture.

Mr. GEARHART. Before the court can approve the composition which has been approved by two-thirds of the creditors it must make a finding after a hearing that the plan is fair, just, and equitable, and in the interest of the creditors.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. You cannot do any better than that.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. I should like to clear up what appears to be a misunderstanding between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Michigan as to what happened in the hearings. They are both correct. The RECORD will probably show a sharp misunderstanding.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman from Michigan and I will straighten that out. Do not take too much of my time.

Mr. WILCOX. General creditors appeared before the committee when the bill was originally before the committee in 1933 and 1934. They were notified of the hearing at this session of Congress, but signified that they had no objection, and they did not make an appearance at this session. So these hearings do not show the presence of those creditors, but the hearings in 1933 and 1934 show scores of pages of testimony by the outstanding bondholders of the country in favor of this legislation.

Mr. MICHENER. I attended every one of these hearings, of course, and I think I examined every witness. There was not anything in the hearing on this bill by anybody who was a creditor favoring the enactment of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I cannot yield further; I am sorry. This is the second appearance of the same bill, in effect.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; but time has elapsed; conditions in the country are different.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. As I understand, under the terms of this bill if a municipality is able to pay its obligations, then it could not invoke the benefits of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. The court must first ascertain that they are in a condition where they cannot pay their indebtedness.

Mr. FULLER. Let me pursue the question further, if the gentleman will permit, under such circumstances as the gentleman from New York illustrated, people sitting around the country holding bonds, getting no action, no interest, no payment, would it not be in everybody's interest, and in the interest of good government besides, to compromise the matter so they could get 66⅔ cents on the dollar?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is according to horse trading common sense.

Mr. FULLER. That is good common sense.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Certainly you cannot beat that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield further, because there is a feature of this bill to which I want to direct attention. I am very sorry I cannot yield further.

In addition to the merits of the bill, which will be presented by gentlemen who will discuss the bill, there is another thing of tremendous importance connected with the proposed legislation, which I think reaches very deeply into the structure of our Government. We should like another opportunity to present to the Supreme Court the questions which were raised with reference to the constitutionality of this bill when the bill was declared unconstitutional. That is the thing I want to touch on now and that is the reason I cannot yield.

The decision referred to was a 5-to-4 decision, and, with all respect to the majority members of the Supreme Court—and I do respect them—I should like for that Court to have another opportunity to consider this matter. It is no disrespect to entertain that desire or to try to make its realization possible. At least it must be agreed the questions involved are important. It was a close question determined by a bare majority. It is no disrespect to hope that if the matter again reaches the Court the former opinion of the Supreme Court in this case will not stand as the law of the land.

In the case which went to the Supreme Court, when the former act was declared unconstitutional, the State of Texas, in the exercise of its sovereign will, had created a drainage district. In the further exercise of its sovereign will, it gave that district in distress permission to go to the only tribunal on earth where the difficulty of itself and its creditors could be adjusted, the courts of the country. We are of the opinion that the decision rendered, based upon the purpose to protect the sovereignty of the States, does not in fact protect the sovereignty of States. After thorough consideration of the decision and the facts we are of the opinion that the decision rendered is not sound either in policy or in reason. Of course, we may be entirely mistaken. We do not think so. I make these statements with all respect to the Supreme Court with the hope that the House will give the States of the country an opportunity to present again to the Supreme Court the questions that are raised in that decision.

We consider there is much more involved than these municipalities and their creditors. The majority of the committee believe from our study of this matter, and our job makes it necessary to study the situation, that we have reached the point in our governmental and general development when, if we are to preserve Anglo-Saxon institutions in this country, we must begin to move governmental responsibility back into the States, which are the only governmental agencies through which representative government in a true sense may function.

In a great Federal organization, which, of course, is necessary, but where its executive personnel is composed of probably three-quarters of a million people or more, and only one elected individual, the voices of individuals are drowned in the tumult of the multitude. The movement must be back into the States and their subdivisions, where the individual citizen has a greater necessity and a greater opportunity to be a real factor in government.

The exercise of governmental power and responsibility is essential to the continued development of governmental capacity.

I repeat the statement in all deference to the Supreme Court that we should like another opportunity to have this question considered. It is a bigger question than the mere matter of drainage districts. It goes to the question of the sovereign power of the States of this country, their sovereign duty and responsibility, and I may venture the individual opinion that when the sovereign State of Texas created the drainage district and gave to that district, its creature, the right to go into the Federal court, that was not the business of any other agency of government or human being on the face of the earth. It was its sovereign will.

We cannot continue to operate this great governmental structure supervised, directed, guardianed, and controlled from Washington. It rests upon the foundation of individuals. We have reached the point, Mr. Speaker, when we have got to recognize that all true progress under our system of government has got to be back toward the people who are its governors. When our people were uniting themselves into a nation, when the States were growing together at the points of governmental contact, it was natural for strength to move to the point where union was being effected. That period is over. We are now a nation. We have no kings in this country. There is no nobility. There are no governors but ourselves. After the Union has been established, after the fact of nationality has become a reality, all true progress in this system of government must be in the direction which puts the opportunity to govern and the necessity to govern closer and closer to the governors. We have reached that point.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me some of his time.

Mr. MOTT and Mr. SPENCE rose.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. In the opinion of the gentleman, does this bill overcome or avoid the objections raised by the Supreme Court in its opinion holding unconstitutional the last bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will be very candid with the gentleman. The bill is so drawn that clearly some features of the bill are free from objection. It may be clear that one or more features are not free from objection on constitutional grounds under the decision referred to.

Mr. MOTT. I know the gentleman would not recommend the passage of a bill which he thought unconstitutional, which is why I am asking the opinion of the gentleman.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I would not.

Mr. MOTT. I want to vote for this bill, but I wanted the opinion of the gentleman as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Before I yield the floor I want to thank the gentleman on the Republican side for having yielded me time. I appreciate it very much.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am, certainly, very much surprised to have my good friend the gentleman from Texas give as one of his principal reasons for passing this measure that by so doing we may put a test case up to the Supreme Court for decision. In my judgment, that is the poorest and lamest excuse anybody could possibly give for passing a bill on the floor of this House. To me this is purely a practical proposition, notwithstanding the philosophical speech the chairman of the committee made with regard to it. I think we must get right down to the actual facts in this case. I am still of the same opinion I have been all along, that we are laying the ground work to make it easier for certain municipalities to default on the payment of their honest legal debts. I know nothing about drainage districts and have never had any experience with them, so this bill may be all right so far as they are concerned; but I know, because I have been told by officers of various communities, that the people are not paying their taxes and are not going to pay them until some adjustment is made. When the people know there is a law on the statute books that gives them a right to settle eventually nearly on their own terms—I would not say entirely on their own terms—I know it is going to be an encouragement to the people in those communities which have no real moral respect for their obligations, and I say honestly there are such communities in the United States. I cannot see anything in this bill that is not going to make it easier for such people to settle, and settle for a certain percentage of the original debt.

I have followed this proposed legislation for some time, and, regardless of what my good friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX] has stated, I am very sure the real proponents of this measure are the municipalities and the districts which owe money. There may be some people favoring this measure who own bonds and want to get something for them, but the real proponents of the bill are the municipalities and districts which owe money, and it is entirely in their interest.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman should bear in mind that there are not going to be any compromises or settlements unless 66 percent of the bondholders agree and unless a court approves of the settlement.

Mr. SNELL. I also know it is quite easy to get 66 percent of the bondholders to agree, because they are scattered all over the country. Each bondholder owns $1,000 or $2,000 of bonds, and cannot afford to make a fight. The bondholders have no opportunity to make a fight and say, "Well, it is lost, so I might better get 50 cents or 25 cents than nothing at all."

Mr. FULLER. In such an instance it will undoubtedly develop that the bondholders will get someone to represent them in the conference.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; but if the gentleman owns a bond out in Arkansas, and I one in New York, and another man in Florida owns a bond, each of us holding a $2,000 bond, how much time is the gentleman going to spend trying to get somebody to go to Cincinnati to represent him?

Mr. FULLER. Suppose the gentleman were a bondholder?

Mr. SNELL. I have been, and I have had some experience, which is why I am watching this legislation.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman has left the same kind of money in investments on industrial bonds and things like that that he has on municipal obligations. However, suppose the gentleman owns a $1,000 bond which he has been holding for several years, on which no interest has been paid; the gentleman is just going along with the investment and the interest has accumulated. Would not the gentleman rather get 66 percent of his investment than continue along the same line?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I would. On the other hand, I do not want to have the Congress pass a measure which will encourage people in the defaulting communities to sit back in their britchins and not do what they really can do. I think when this type of legislation is passed you are encouraging just that kind of procedure.

Mr. FULLER. I may say to the gentleman I am for the bill, but if I thought it was a repudiation I would not be for it.

Mr. SNELL. It is mighty near repudiation, anyway.

Mr. FULLER. I do not believe it.

Mr. SNELL. And it will have the approval of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WILCOX. Of course, the gentleman is familiar with the fact that in addition to the requirement that no composition can be confirmed until accepted by the holders of two-thirds of the debts of the community——

Mr. SNELL. We all agree to that.

Mr. WILCOX. In addition to that, the gentleman is familiar, of course, with the fact that the court must find that the composition settlement represents the capacity of the district to pay. First of all, however, it must find, according to the bill, that the composition is fair, equitable, and for the best interest of the creditors.

Mr. SNELL. Every bit of that is in the bill, but we are going to pass a measure here which states it is perfectly proper and right for a municipality to repudiate, to sit back and make as good a settlement as possible with its creditors.

Mr. WILCOX. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it does not do that.

Mr. SNELL. I do not propose to do anything to encourage that kind of action on the part of any municipality in any part of this country.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman did not let me finish reading.

Mr. SNELL. I am familiar with the part the gentleman is reading, as is everybody else. We know you must get 66 percent, but it is mighty easy to do that when the bondholders are distributed all over the country.

Mr. WILCOX. Then the gentleman must assume that the Federal judges to whom these composition settlements will be submitted will not do their duty and will not scan such compositions to find whether two-thirds of the creditors have agreed to what is for their own best interest.

Mr. SNELL. I am not going to cast any aspersions upon the courts, but, just between us [laughter], a judge down in some other State, when he finds that all the bondholders are up in Pennsylvania or New York, for instance, might be just a little bit influenced.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5969) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto."

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5969, with Mr. RANKIN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX].

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, this bill when stripped of all surplusage and all unnecessary technicalities, simply means that it provides a method by which voluntary agreements entered into between taxing units and a vast majority of their creditors may be made effective. This is all in the world there is to the bill—that after two-thirds of the creditors of a taxing district, whether it be a municipality, a drainage, levee, irrigation, or other improvement district, agree on an adjustment of the debt, it may be submitted to the court, and the voluntary agreement may be confirmed and made effective.

The necessity for this legislation, Mr. Chairman, arises in this way: Back during the late boom, a great many of these municipalities and districts issued bonds beyond their capacity to pay. Little drainage districts and irrigation districts and levee districts were encouraged to issue bonds beyond their full capacity to pay. When the collapse came——

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILCOX. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I wonder who encouraged them.

Mr. WILCOX. Well, they were encouraged by a number of things. They were encouraged by their own people, they were encouraged by bond brokers who wanted to sell bonds, they were encouraged by real-estate promoters from all over the country, they were encouraged by bond buyers themselves who were anxious to get hold of these bonds; but, regardless of that fact, the bonds were issued. Later they found themselves unable to meet either the principal or the maturing interest on these bonds. Some 2,000 of these units went into default in the payment either of principal or interest, or both. They were unable to meet their maturities. Some of these districts have not made any payments for as much as 7 or 8 or 9 years.

Now, the holders of these bonds wanted to get together with these little taxing districts, little municipalities, or little improvement districts and work out some fair, honest, and equitable basis of settlement; but the trouble has been there is always somebody who wants to hold out and establish a nuisance value.

I have had a good deal of experience with this bill. I introduced this original bill in 1933 and have followed it pretty closely since that time, and I know that it often happens that while one of these municipalities or districts has got together with the holders of a vast majority of its bonds and agreed upon some fair and honest settlement, somebody will go into the market and buy up a few of the bonds at 5 or 10 or 15 cents on the dollar, and then he sits back in the breeching and refuses to cooperate. He demands a full 100 percent for his holdings. He goes into court with a mandamus action to demand a tax levy for a full 100 percent for his little holdings. The court has to grant him the mandamus, because, under the law, the court has no discretion. The result is that the majority then back out of the agreement, because they do not intend to make some adjustment themselves only to let somebody establish a nuisance value and get 100 cents on the dollar. I have cited the instance——

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. Let me give you this instance while I am thinking about it, and then I will be pleased to yield.

I cited this instance when the bill was up on its first passage. Since then I am happy to say that my municipality, my home city, the city that gave rise to this proposed legislation, has adjusted its debt, and it is no longer an object of criticism on this floor; but back in 1930 that municipality agreed with the holders of its bonds. It had a total indebtedness of $17,000,000, with about 16,000 people to pay it. It had a total assessed valuation of $17,000,000 and a total city bonded indebtedness of $17,000,000 of principal, besides overlapping bonds of some $9,000,000 additional. They got together with the holders of their bonds—and I want you to listen to these figures—and agreed on an adjustment of that debt. Ninety-two percent of the holders of the bonds of that city agreed on a settlement. One man owned 2 percent, or about $140,000 worth of these bonds, out of a total of $17,000,000, and he broke up the settlement and for 7 years kept the other creditors from collecting the money which they could have collected had some fair and honest and equitable adjustment been made.

Now, what was true of that city was likewise true of scores of other cities and towns, and possibly it would not be an exaggeration to say that hundreds of drainage districts had the same experience. They could get their real creditors, the people who owned the majority of their bonds, to agree upon some fair and reasonable adjustment, but some speculator would buy up a few bonds and then throw a monkey wrench into the machinery by holding out for full payment.

Since that time and under the original act passed by Congress in 1934, while it was in effect, they met together and agreed with their creditors. If the act could have remained in effect for 2 or 3 years longer, all of these desperate cases would have been settled. I am sorry that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is not here at the moment to hear me make my next statement, but a statement was made on the floor of the House in 1933 when this bill was first under consideration. A great many thoroughly sincere and honest legislators were afraid to pass this bill because they were afraid of the effect it might have on the good solvent municipalities of the country. I remember that the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. Condon, then a Member of this body but who is now on the supreme court of that State, made a forceful argument in which he undertook to prove that the passage of this bill would destroy the security of every good municipality in the country. Of course, we were unable to answer the argument with facts; we could only give opinions. Now we are able to answer the question. The law was passed and stood in effect for 3 years. During that time it not only had no ill effect upon the credit of good municipalities, but it actually increased the value of the bonds of every solvent municipality in the country, for the reason that it said to the creditors, it said to the world, "here is an honest and fair method by which the debts of these bankrupt communities can be adjusted", and it immediately took off the market from two to three billion dollars' worth of worthless securities and actually increased the value of securities of every solvent municipality in the country.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Has the gentleman no statute in his State which prohibits the issuance of bonds beyond a reasonable percentage of the value of the property?

Mr. WILCOX. We have now.

Mr. TABER. I am wondering how the bond issues became so large with reference to the valuation of the property.

Mr. WILCOX. That is a rather long story which I shall be glad to explain to the gentleman when we both have more time, but it was due to a collapse of real-estate values.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. SPENCE. I believe I voted against that bill.

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. SPENCE. What impelled me to do it was that under the rule of bankruptcy the bankrupt parts with his property in order to secure certain immunities. Here the taxing unit parts with nothing. I would be glad to have the gentleman discuss that.

Mr. WILCOX. I should be very glad to discuss that with the gentleman. If this were a bankruptcy proceeding, the gentleman's reasoning would be correct.

Mr. SPENCE. It has to be bankruptcy for jurisdiction, has it not?

Mr. WILCOX. Congress and the courts have recognized that compositions are the subject matter of bankruptcy. It is not a voluntary bankruptcy in the sense that an individual files a petition and asks to be relieved of his debts but this bill provides for a composition in bankruptcy by which neither side surrenders anything except what they both agree should be done. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is an additional safeguard in this bill in that regard. The municipality or the creditor cannot be forced into court. No one can file an involuntary proceeding against a municipality. They can be brought into court only by their own voluntary action.

The municipality cannot go into court until it has gotten 51 percent of its debt to agree to the settlement. It then submits the entire plan to the Federal district judge. It does not become automatically effective, however. All of the creditors are notified. Ample notice is provided for in the bill, and any creditor can object and can point out anything that is wrong with the plan. Before it can be confirmed, two-thirds of all the debts must agree to it. Not only that, I say to the gentleman, but the bill provides further that the court is charged with the responsibility of protecting the creditor in addition to the protection which the creditor offers for himself. The creditor, whether he is represented before the court or not, under this bill, is protected by the court. The court is made counsel for every creditor, whether the creditor has any counsel in the court or not, because the court must find that the plan is fair—and I am quoting now from the bill—"equitable"—and here is a rather unusual provision to find in any legislation of this character—"and for the best interests of the creditor." In other words, the judge is charged with the responsibility of seeing to it that the creditor is protected. Not only that it is a fair settlement, not only that it is just and equitable, not only that it represents the full capacity of the community to pay, but he must find that it is in the interest of the creditor—not that the municipality has not put over something on the creditor, but that it is in the interest of the creditor; and then it goes further and puts this responsibility on the judge, and this protects the unrepresented creditor from the represented creditor before the court.

It says that the court must further find that the plan does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any creditor or class of creditor. Then, of course, the bill contains further provisions. It protects the creditor to this extent, that where a bondholder has a bond that is secured by a municipal light plant or waterworks or some other public utility, it does not disturb him nor his security. It preserves and protects every interest, except to the extent that the creditor himself may agree to surrender his security.

Then the bill protects the municipality and the property owners and taxpayers of the municipality by providing that nothing shall be done except what is agreed to in writing by the petitioner. The court cannot impose any hardship on the property owner nor interfere with any of the powers, functions, duties, or property of the municipality except in the manner and to the extent set forth in the plan of settlement which the municipality has voluntarily accepted and agreed to.

Thus the bill provides for fair, honest, and equitable treatment for both parties, and there is no danger that either side will be imposed upon. Then it provides further for protection for the taxpayer and for the local resident, in that it provides that the court shall pass upon the fees awarded, and that no fee shall be paid to anybody in connection with litigation under this bill unless it has been agreed to by both sides and has been set up in the plan of settlement which has been submitted to the court. So there will not be any scandalous fees such as have been awarded under some other bankruptcy proceedings.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. Under existing law what relief has the holder of a defaulted bond against the municipality?

Mr. WILCOX. As a matter of fact, I will say to the gentleman that the bondholder theoretically has a remedy which is entirely impractical. He can resort to the courts for a mandamus for a tax levy. A tax levy can be put on, but nobody as yet has devised a means of reaching down into the pockets of the taxpayers and making them pay a tax which they think is inequitable and unfair. Of course, you can sell his property under a tax execution or under some other means of foreclosing the tax; but, after all, the man who buys the property at the tax sale buys it subject to the whole debt again, and he, in turn, can lose it next year on the same thing. So that, after all, it is a matter of good faith on the part of the taxpayer, good faith on the part of the bondholder, and good faith on the part of the court. You cannot do anything to strengthen the position of the creditor except in these cases to give him the right to work out his own salvation.

I am going to give you one other illustration and then I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. It may seem fantastic to the Members of this House, but I know a community that has a bonded indebtedness today of $10,000 per capita. You may not believe that. I do not want to slander the community by putting its name in the permanent CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WILCOX. There is a community that has not paid a penny on its bonded indebtedness in 10 years. Those bonds are absolutely worthless as far as their marketability is concerned, and yet those few people in that community have recently tried to contact their creditors and work out a plan whereby they can make some payment on account of that debt. Yet some of the bondholders or some of the people who understand the situation have bought some of those bonds at ridiculous prices—1 or 1½ cents on the dollar—and are now holding out for a hundred cents on the dollar in the hope that they may chisel out enough to establish themselves in their nuisance value.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. So many of these bond issues are under trust indenture, wherein the trustee is the only one who can sue on behalf of the bondholder.

Mr. WILCOX. I think the gentleman is confusing this with corporate bonds.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. No. That is true of various types of bonds—municipal bonds as well as corporate bonds.

Mr. WILCOX. In that case they would be protected because the interest of the trustee is protected the same as the interested bondholder.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Is there anything in this bill that brings him into the picture?

Mr. WILCOX. Oh, yes. He would be brought into the picture.

Now, I did want to have an opportunity to discuss the constitutionality of this bill. In just the half minute left at my disposal I do not have the opportunity to discuss the constitutionality of the bill. I am convinced that the legitimate objections raised to this bill by the Court have been removed. The bill was in effect for 2 full years. More than 500 communities took advantage of the bill during that time. Only 12 of them have found it necessary to resort to the courts, and only 3 of those found it necessary to go through to final decree. The creditors appeared before the committee in 1933, when the original bill was up for consideration, and urged the bill. Some creditors—the big life-insurance companies, numbers of big bondholders, any number of little bondholders—appeared at that time. Most of them approved the bill but some objected to it, but after it was put into effect and remained in effect for 2 years and they saw the working of it they withdrew their objection, and this year when I notified them that the legislation was before the committee and invited them to come in, only one creditor out of the vast number who were there in 1933 saw fit to even put in an appearance before the committee, and not a single objection was made on behalf of one of the creditors who appeared in 1933.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. I feel that the bondholders will be much better protected in the United States court than in the local courts, subject to local influence. I have had some experience along that line, and I am going to vote for the bill this year.

Mr. WILCOX. I thank the gentleman very much. I trust the bill will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has again expired.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, it is very distasteful to feel compelled to oppose legislation reported by a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary. However, unpleasant as it is, I would be falling short of that which I believe to be my duty if I did not oppose this bill as it is brought to the House.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX]. I cannot pay him too much compliment so far as this legislation is concerned. The original municipal bankruptcy law was his handiwork. This bill is his handiwork. It would not be here today were it not for his personality, his fairness, his ability, his ingenuity, and, last but not least, his stick-to-it-iveness. Mr. WILCOX is a splendid Member of Congress, and I would like to help him, but he is too good a lawyer to say that if the Supreme Court decision declaring the municipal bankruptcy law unconstitutional is the law, that this bill is constitutional. If there is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary or any other Member of the House present who challenges my statement that every part of this bill is unconstitutional, let him speak now.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. HOBBS. I challenge that statement as made. There is a possibility that as to subsection 6 which is a very minor part of this bill——

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield no further, the gentleman has answered.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not for the moment; I want to finish this, and I have only 10 minutes. I asked if any Member here challenged my statement that this bill as drawn is unconstitutional. The gentleman from Alabama, of course, does not challenge that statement, he cannot; but he says that subdivision 6 of section 81, appearing on page 3 of the bill, is unconstitutional.

Mr. HOBBS. No; I did not say that, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MICHENER. Just a minute.

Mr. HOBBS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of personal privilege if the gentleman declines to yield. I said nothing of the sort.

Mr. MICHENER. Possibly I misunderstood the gentleman. I regret, but I cannot yield too much of my time.

Mr. HOBBS. I thought the gentleman wanted some information.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will get me some more time, I will yield. The chairman of the committee made it very clear when he said that the purpose of subdivision 6 of section 81 is to get a rehearing on the law which was declared unconstitutional. The chairman told us that was a 4 to 5 decision, that he did not agree with the decision, and, therefore, we are going to submit another law which is unconstitutional—and cannot be otherwise if that 4 to 5 decision means anything—in the hope that the personnel of the Supreme Court may be changed, or that the Supreme Court may change its views. So I stand where I started on the question of constitutionality, that this bill with section 6 in it is unconstitutional.

Section 81, found on page 2 of this bill, is divided into six subdivisions. Each subdivision names a different type of municipal corporation. Now, some of these subdivisions enumerate corporations that can clearly come in under the bankruptcy law so far as the Constitution is concerned. Other sections contain corporations of which there are various degrees of doubt; but in subdivision 6 is grouped "any city, town, village, borough, township, or other municipality." It is conceded, I believe, by all those familiar with the recent Supreme Court decision in the Ashton case, declaring the so-called municipal bankruptcy act unconstitutional, that these specified political subdivisions of the State are not amenable to the bankruptcy powers under the Constitution.

I am not proud of the fact that possibly municipal bankruptcy had its origin in the suggestion and request of former Mayor Murphy, of Detroit, in my own State. Mr. Murphy was mayor when the world-wide depression hit us. He was a lavish spender and shortly the financial condition of the city of Detroit was in such shape that the credit was exhausted. As I understand, it was impossible to float more bonds or borrow more money on the city's credit. Mr. Murphy came to Washington to urge a municipal bankruptcy law.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MICHENER. I am sorry, but I cannot yield until I finish my statement. I am familiar with these facts, because they occurred in the lame duck session of the Seventy-second Congress and Mr. Murphy appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary and conferred with the chairman of the committee, to whom I introduced him. The bankruptcy bill suggested by Mr. Murphy was not enacted into law, but early in the Seventy-third Congress the Wilcox bill, which has recently been declared unconstitutional, became a law. That was an emergency measure. The Congress was passing all kinds of laws permitting debtors to scale down their obligations. The creditor class throughout the country was making the sacrifices. Now, the emergency is past. Let us take the dynamic city of Detroit, for instance. Is there anyone here who would suggest that we should pass a law making it possible for Detroit to refuse to meet its obligations and pay its bonds unless some reduction was made by the holders of the securities? That is just what this bill does. When a city or a village or a municipality of this type makes public improvements—constructs waterworks, sewage-disposal plants, paves streets, and otherwise improves the municipality—is there any justice in making the bondholders who loaned the money to bring these improvements about take a loss until it is thoroughly demonstrated that the taxing power of the municipality, even though it be burdensome, cannot pay in full? When these investments were made by the bondholders they relied entirely upon the honesty of the cities and municipalities and the ability of those municipalities to levy taxes to meet the indebtedness. Until this depression and the first municipal bankruptcy law, bonds of this type had the highest rating. Insurance companies, cemeteries, schools, churches, savings banks, and institutions of that type invested their funds in this kind of security. They did this because they believed in the honesty of the municipality and its taxpayers.

In some parts of the country sit-down strikes have become very popular, and we are passing a law inviting the taxpayers in municipalities to go on one of these strikes. We are giving them the assurance that if they refuse to pay their taxes, eventually they will find their taxing unit in the bankruptcy court, and receive a discount on their honest debts. This is not a far-fetched illustration. Already, in at least one city in the country, the tenants have formed a union and are "sitting down" as far as paying rent is concerned, until the owners of the properties comply with the terms of the union so far as the amount of rent to be paid is involved.

Now, there are some drainage districts, some irrigation districts, and possibly some municipalities where this law will be of benefit to the security holders. The principle, however, is fundamentally wrong. Our concept of bankruptcy under the Constitution has changed radically within the last 4 years. Previous to that time the bankrupt who found himself insolvent placed his assets upon the table. They were divided proportionately among his creditors and the bankrupt was given his discharge and thereby permitted to start anew. All of his assets, however—whatever they were, subject to legal exemptions—were distributed among his creditors. The assets of a city or a village is the right to spread a tax to meet its obligations. A city may find it impossible to meet its obligations momentarily, as was the case of Detroit in 1933. Detroit's credit is good today. It has the taxing power. People are employed and there is no reason why it should not pay 100 cents on the dollar, and comply with the letter of the contract as well as with the morality of the situation. What is true of Detroit is true of most other municipalities. The original act of May 24, 1934, was based upon a national emergency, as set forth in the act, and that law expired by limitation of time in 2 years from its enactment. That emergency does not exist today. However, the committee has limited this law so that the parts of the law not held unconstitutional will expire in 1940. The question of policy is involved, and I do not believe that the Congress should establish a policy in prosperous times of encouraging municipalities to reckless spending.

Suppose it were possible for the Federal Government to take advantage of a national bankruptcy law. A reckless, spending administration might plunge the Nation into useless debt. The people having faith in the Government would buy the obligations, and when the credit was no longer good, or another administration coming into office might take the easy way out and appeal to a bankruptcy law. The purchasers of the securities are the losers. I am opposed to the Federal Government or any other unit of government repudiating its obligations. I realize that the bill provides that two-thirds of the security holders must approve the plan. I speak for the one-third who will not be represented or who can ill afford to bear the loss. If municipalities are to have public improvements for their own enjoyment, they should pay for them.

The time has come when all subdivisions of government should be impressed with the necessity of economy rather than urged to spend more of the people's money. We should be figuring on ways of keeping our contracts, protecting our credit, and paying our just debts rather than hunting artful and doubtful legal methods of avoiding paying that which we know morally and legally belongs to another. This kind of legislation weakens the morale of a nation. Possibly it is advisable or necessary in the depths of a depression, but that condition does not obtain today.

I have no illusions as to what is going to happen to this bill. This is one of those technical measures with which the average Member is not familiar, and when the roll is called, the majority will follow the majority of the committee, and there will be no question about the result. I shall, however, move to strike out subdivision 6, the part which is admittedly unconstitutional. With this provision eliminated, the rest of the bill is well-constructed and will do the job if the Congress wants to adopt this policy. This is too important a matter to be controlled by a desire on the part of the Members to assist any particular individuals. I like to be friendly and generous and always want to be helpful to my colleagues. Yet when so far reaching a principle is involved, there is but one course for me to pursue. In the past the Congress has ofttimes passed legislation about which there was much constitutional doubt in the minds of many Members. This is the first time to my knowledge where, after the Supreme Court has held a law unconstitutional, the Congress comes right back with a bill containing a provision resubmitting the same question to the Supreme Court. In short, it is stated here that we are attempting to get a rehearing on subdivision 6 because, forsooth, some of the members of the committee do not feel that the Supreme Court properly interpreted the Constitution.

As I interpret my oath of office, I have agreed with the people of the country that I will protect the Constitution and will not vote for legislation when I know that the Supreme Court has held that particular legislation to be unconstitutional.

I regret that I do not have more time to discuss other features of the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as one member of the Judiciary Committee, I cannot support this bill, and I am in accord with the views expressed by another one of our colleagues on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]. In the first place, I think it is wrong in principle for a government, State, or subdivision of a State to repudiate an honest debt. I think these units of government ought to set the example to its citizens to live within their income and to pay their honest debts.

This measure, if it means anything, not only encourages but enables various taxing units to dodge and repudiate at least a portion of their honest debts. I do not think that is the moral and honest thing to do. It is also an encouragement to these taxing units to go into debt beyond their ability to pay.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. I fully agree with the gentleman's statement that no municipality or other agency should be permitted to repudiate its debts, but I am wondering if the gentleman agrees that an agreement signed by two-thirds of the creditors constitutes repudiation? Is that the gentleman's idea of repudiation?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WILCOX. When the creditors agree to a reduction, that would be repudiation?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes. This very bill induces, brings about, and forces agreements about which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I cannot yield. I have a few other things to say.

I think most everyone agrees that if there is anything that should worry the American people today it is the habit we have gotten into of spending more than we have, going into debt, more debt, and still more debt. All of us in this country, including the President of the United States, are now deeply concerned, or should be, because of the tremendous national debt, now $36,600,000,000. If we add to that the debts of the various States, counties, municipalities, and taxing districts, we would have perhaps $36,000,000,000 more debt. That is something like $70,000,000,000 of debt which rests upon the shoulders of the young people of this country. We have no right, moral or otherwise, to eat up the substance of the years to come from our children and our children's children. That is what this means. This is an encouragement to go more and more into debt, because after they go into debt so much then they will say, "We repudiate", as provided in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want any taxing district in my congressional district to repudiate a dollar that they owe. I want the taxing units in my district and the people in my district to understand that when they borrow money and use money they are honor bound, and I want them legally bound, to pay back the money. I never owned one of those bonds; I have never been stung, but I think it is bad in principle.

Mr. Chairman, I think it will be bad for the municipalities also. I do not agree with my friend that because bonds were more valuable in 1936 and 1937 than in 1935 that is an evidence of approval of this bill. Conditions in this country have improved. The bond market has improved. But when it becomes generally known throughout this country that we have a law—and, of course, I doubt the constitutionality of this measure—which will enable taxing units to repudiate their honest debts and bonds, it will be a difficult matter for taxing units to sell bonds, because if this law means anything it means that in the future the number of taxing units repudiating their debts will increase, and as the number increases you will break down the faith and confidence of the people in the taxing units of this country.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not economically true that under high rates of interest, there is no other solution except private and public bankruptcy? Is that not true when interest is at such a high point?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I think the best way to get low rates of interest and to borrow money is to pay your honest debts and keep faith with your honest obligations. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to take 2 or 3 minutes to call attention to some principles which I think are worthy of our particular consideration. We compare this measure with the ordinary bankruptcy proceeding. We are now talking about municipalities going into bankruptcy, so to speak. May I call attention again to the thing that was mentioned a moment ago; that is, when individuals or corporations go into so-called bankruptcy they submit their property, turn over their property, so to speak, to the court? This property is sold by the court and the proceeds divided among the creditors.

Here you have a different situation. What you are saying is that towns, communities, counties, drainage districts, and villages throughout the United States may from now on, if they choose to do so, by agreement of persons holding the bonds, go into court and repudiate their obligations. They do not sell any assets of any kind. You are going a long way. I know there are certain towns and villages in the United States which at this time cannot very easily pay their obligations. However, we in this country have taken a lot of pride in the fact that the bonds of our cities, our towns, and our counties are good, and that we have been able to sell such bonds in certain States at very low rates of interest. Now you are opening wide the door and saying to all these communities, "Go ahead if you want to, we will treat you all alike. If you get to the place where you cannot pay your debts, if you can get two-thirds of your bondholders together, after they have waited months and months for the interest, or years, as far as that is concerned, and are tired out, and can get them to say, 'We are willing to take less than the amounts due us', we will let you repudiate your obligations", no matter how some other particular town or municipality has performed in an attempt to take care of its obligations. Such a procedure is fundamentally wrong it seems to me. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, after listening intently to the arguments which have been advanced by the various speakers, I find that those in opposition base their opposition principally, if not entirely, upon the assumption that this bill and its enactment will work to the disadvantage of creditors. With this thesis I disagree. I believe that, on the contrary, this bill is one drawn in the interest of creditors. The administration of this measure, if it becomes law, will remain under the control of the creditors themselves.

In the first place, a composition which may be later presented to a court must initiate with the creditors themselves. Before the distressed debtor can go to court and invoke the relief provided under this bill, 51 percent of the creditors must have agreed upon a plan of composition. After the plan has been agreed upon by 51 percent of the creditors, a petition may be filed in voluntary bankruptcy by the agency which is unable to pay its debts in the ordinary course. However, even though 51 percent have agreed, we are not then assured that the plan will be approved by the court. The court must fix a time, every creditor must be notified, and a hearing must be had within 90 days. If then the court should find the plan has not been offered in good faith, the court must dismiss the petition.

After the proceeding has been initiated, 51 percent of the creditors having agreed, the court cannot proceed further until additional creditors come in and voice their approval of the plan of composition. In other words, 66⅔ percent is the total percentage of creditors required to authorize the court to proceed further.

Who are these creditors? Can a nominal creditor be counted? No; not at all. Each creditor must be a creditor with a substantial interest which will be affected by the plan of composition. Can creditors under the control of the municipality which is asking for relief be counted? Not at all. Only the creditors who come in as bona-fide creditors, holding bona-fide and substantial claims, can be counted in determining the 66⅔ percent which is required. Will this settle it? No; not even then. Further safeguards are thrown around the creditors. Even those creditors who do not come in, who have no representatives in court to speak for them, are protected by a duty which is imposed upon the court itself. The court cannot act unless it makes a finding of fact that the plan is just, equitable, and in the interest of all the creditors.

No one can say this is a plan concocted to work a hardship on creditors and confine himself to reality. This is a plan arranged for the benefit of creditors, because the control of the proceedings from beginning to end is in the hands of the creditors. Do you think for a minute 10 percent, 51 percent, or 66⅔ percent of the creditors will agree to a plan of composition when they know the corporation involved could be made to pay its debts in the due and ordinary course? The answer to this question, which should be obvious to all, should make my contention clear. This is, indeed, a creditors' bill. I hope that it will pass. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, the most clever thing the holding companies did in their fight against the Wheeler-Rayburn bill was to label the holding-company measure the "death sentence." Similarly, those voices of special privilege and entrenched wealth which are clamoring against this bill have been exceedingly clever in having it labeled the "municipal bankruptcy bill." In both instances, however, the label was an absolute misnomer. There never was a death sentence in any of the holding-company bills. Municipalities under this measure are only one, and by far the least, of the six classifications of petitioners who are authorized to come into a court of bankruptcy and pray for a composition of their debts. The pertinent part of the pending bill reads as follows:

SEC. 81. This act and proceedings thereunder are found and declared to be within the subject of bankruptcies and, in addition to the jurisdiction otherwise exercised, courts of bankruptcy shall exercise original jurisdiction as provided in this chapter for the composition of indebtedness payable solely out of assessments or taxes, or both, levied against and constituting liens upon the property, or payable out of property acquired by foreclosure of any such assessments or taxes, or both, in any of the following-named taxing agencies or instrumentalities: (1) Drainage, drainage and levee, levee, levee and drainage, reclamation, water, irrigation, or other similar districts, commonly designated as agricultural improvement districts or local improvement districts, organized or created for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining, and operating certain improvements or projects devoted chiefly to the improvement of lands therein for agricultural purposes; or (2) local improvement districts such as sewer, paving, sanitary, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purposes designated by their respective names; or (3) local improvement districts such as road, highway, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purpose of grading, paving, or otherwise improving public streets, roads, or highways; or (4) public-school districts or public-school authorities organized or created for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating public schools or public-school facilities; or (5) local improvement districts such as port, navigation, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining, and operating ports and port facilities; or (6) any city, town, village, borough, township, or other municipality: Provided, however, That if any provision of this chapter, or the application thereof to any such taxing agency or district or class thereof or to any circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the chapter, or the application of such provision to any other or different taxing agency or district or class thereof or to any other or different circumstances, shall not be affected by such holding.

Please let me call your attention to the keynote of this bill:

(e) At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge shall make written findings of fact and his conclusions of law thereon, and shall enter an interlocutory decree confirming the plan if satisfied that (1) it is fair, equitable, and for the best interests of the creditors and does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any creditor or class of creditors.

The bill further provides that—

If not so satisfied, the judge shall enter an order dismissing the proceeding (p. 12, line 22).

From these quotations it will be seen that the burden of proof is placed squarely upon the petitioner in each case to satisfy the judge that it comes into court with clean hands and in good faith and that the plan of composition proposed represents the utmost limit of its capacity to pay. The bill further provides—

That creditors owning not less than 51 percent in amount of the securities affected by the plan (excluding, however, any such securities owned, held, or controlled by the petitioners) have accepted it in writing (p. 5, line 8).

Not only must petitioner have at least 51 percent of its creditors supporting its plan of composition initially but it must have at least two-thirds before confirmation of the plan by the court (p. 11, line 21). Another outstanding feature of this bill for the benefit of creditors is that the "big-fee racket" is killed by the provision—

That no fees, compensation, reimbursement, or other allowances for attorneys, agents, committees, or other representatives of creditors shall be assessed against the petitioner or paid from any revenues, property, or funds of the petitioner except in the manner and in such sums, if any, as may be provided for in the plan of composition (p. 9, line 22).

In the light of all these beneficent provisions from the standpoint of the creditors, how can it be said that this bill makes repudiation easier? The truth of the old adage, "You cannot get blood out of a turnip", was never better illustrated than by those within the six classes of petitioners described in this bill. All they have is their taxing power. Seldom, if ever—and then only after foreclosure—have they any property. All they can bring into court ordinarily is their taxing power. This they do and subject it and themselves wholly and unreservedly to the jurisdiction and sound discretion of a court of equity. That court is bound by the terms of the bill to safeguard to the uttermost the "interests of the creditors." The power to tax has been held to be the power to destroy, and this has become a maxim of the law. [Applause.] But the power to tax, while it may destroy, frequently cannot collect. [Applause.] You may kill the goose that lays the golden eggs, and by taxation which is unreasonably high you can also kill a goose which, while not laying, might, under revised conditions, resume that happy function.

Please permit me now to address myself to the question of the constitutionality of this bill. When the opponents of this act were seeking to strike it down, I suppose it was natural that they should select as the case in which to make the attempt the strongest possible one in their favor. They went to Texas, which, I believe, is the only State in the Union with a constitutional provision classifying such petitioners as Cameron County Water Improvement District as political subdivisions of the State. Be this as it may, the supreme courts of other States have held that such petitioners were not political subdivisions, but were mere voluntary associations of citizens for some common public improvement end. But wholly aside from this question of proper classification in this respect I wish to point out as clearly and forcibly as I can, the fact that whereas the original bill which was held in the Ashton case—Ashton v. Cameron County Water Improvement District (289 U. S. 513)—to be unconstitutional, referred to all the petitioners designated therein as political subdivisions of the State, in the pending bill all such references have been eliminated, and no such petitioner as Cameron County Water Improvement District could take advantage of this act. All such political subdivisions have been eliminated. Therefore, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Ashton case is wholly without effect upon the constitutionality of the pending bill. The strictures of that decision with reference to all other classes of petitioners other than such political subdivisions are clearly obiter dicta. The former bill was unconstitutional because the Supreme Court of the United States so held. This bill differs radically from its dead parent. I confidently predict that it will be upheld and administered throughout the short course of its limited life for the "best interests of the creditors" holding the securities of the distressed entities which are therein permitted to become petitioners in our courts of bankruptcy in accordance with the expressed will of the sovereign States. [Applause.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, insofar as I know, there are no taxing districts in the State of Tennessee concerned with this legislation. My interest in it arises from the fact I am a member of the bankruptcy subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, and therefore took an interest in the working out of this bill.

This bill is the outgrowth of public hearings looking to the writing of a measure that would be free from the constitutional objections found by the Supreme Court of the United States in Ashton v. Cameron County District (298 U. S. 513). It is developed on the theory of compositions in bankruptcy. The proceeding must be voluntary, and the taxing district, which means drainage, irrigation, water, sewer, school, or other improvement districts and municipalities, must go into the Federal court on oath that it is insolvent or cannot meet its obligations as they mature, and accompanying the petition for relief must be a plan of composition approved by at least 51 percent of the creditors.

Each proceeding is subject to ample notice to creditors, thorough hearings, complete investigations, and appeals are allowed from interlocutory or final decrees. The composition cannot be confirmed unless accepted in writing by at least 66⅔ of the aggregate amount of the indebtedness of the district.

Let me say this. It will be recalled that Congress passed, in June 1933, and amended in 1934, an act which authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend $125,000,000 to distressed taxing districts, irrigation districts, drainage districts, and similar improvement districts for the purpose of rehabilitating and reorganizing themselves. Under the authorization of $125,000,000 for this purpose, about $67,000,000 was disbursed, and the remainder is still in the hands of the R. F. C., and a large number of applications are pending for the use of that money for this laudable purpose if Congress passes this bill or some constitutional act on this subject.

When the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] speaks about the fact that bondholders are forced into these arrangements, it should be borne in mind that of the $67,000,000 which the R. F. C. disbursed—and by the way, practically all the money that will be available for these reorganizations will come from the R. F. C., because no one is going to be able to work out a satisfactory plan with private money—of the $67,000,000, half of that amount has gone to districts in which practically all of the creditors have joined and agreed. So it cannot be said to be a repudiation, or a coercion of the holders of the securities. The other one-half has gone to loans where more than 90 percent of all the creditors of these districts have agreed. So the effect or the practical operation has been to give from 90 to nearly 100 percent of the creditors the benefits of the previous law. You never can get 100 percent. As a matter of fact, there are thousands of securities in this country that are irretrievably lost or misplaced, and if everybody had to approve an arrangement of this kind, you would never be able to get 100 percent, and when you get 90 percent, as the R. F. C. has done in the instances of the loans that have been made, you have a remarkable percentage.

How else can a bondholder get relief from an insolvent municipality?

When a municipality or a taxing district is insolvent, the creditors cannot foreclose their mortgage, or cause public property to be sold and the proceeds distributed. They must look to the exercise of the taxing power over a period of years, or, in cooperation with the debtor district, must grant extensions. This often involves reorganization of part or all of the debt structure, and hinges upon agreement by debtor and creditor, or on the existence of a Federal statute which may force recalcitrant minority creditors into agreement. Otherwise the creditors of a municipality or a taxing district must resort to mandamus proceedings, which have not been adequate remedies. In fact, the trend of recent decisions has been to deny the writ of mandamus wherever sound judicial discretion justifies denial. Hence, creditors have been unable to obtain unjust advantage, but the problem of the municipality or taxing district has remained unsolved (Christmas v. City of Asbury Park, 78 Fed. (2d) 1003). For an embarrassed debtor without the remedy afforded by this bill, the only effective recourse is the repeal of its charter by the State legislature, in which event creditors are generally left without any remedy (Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 501).

There is no hope for relief through statutes enacted by the States, because the Constitution forbids the passing of State laws impairing the obligations of existing contracts. Therefore, relief must come from Congress, if at all. The committee is not prepared to admit that the situation presents a legislative "no man's land." The power to deal with bankruptcies was given by the Constitution to Congress without express limitation, and, at the same time, the States deprived themselves of the power to deal adequately with the conditions which have arisen. Only analogous judicial construction has blocked the way thus far.

The act which was declared unconstitutional stated that all of the instrumentalities of government which sought to take advantage of it were declared to be political subdivisions of the States. The Supreme Court of the United States, by a rule of construction, held that the beneficiaries of the law, being political subdivisions of a State, could not be given the right to go into bankruptcy, because Congress had no right to pass a law affecting the fiscal or governmental affairs of a State or a subdivision of a State, a principle based entirely on a secondary construction, and the Supreme Court reached the conclusion in this way.

The bankruptcy provision of the Constitution has no exceptions whatever. It simply states that the Federal Government shall have the right to pass uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy. In the same article of the Constitution the provision with reference to the power of Federal taxation is included and is a separate and distinct subdivision. The Supreme Court in this 5 to 4 opinion held that, although there is no limitation on the power to pass uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy, yet because in the same article of the Constitution is the provision with reference to taxation which the Court had construed as forbidding the Federal Government from taxing the property of States and their political subdivisions, that rule of construction as to taxation would have to be applied to the section with reference to bankruptcy—a specious construction of the Constitution, and unsupported by any sound, progressive reasoning.

Granted the limitation of the Federal taxing power, if the pending bill does not and cannot restrict the control of a State agency over its fiscal affairs, the statute would not be invalid. The States themselves are subject to taxation by the Federal Government except as to operations which are essentially governmental in their nature, and "the immunity of the States from Federal taxation is limited to those agencies which are of a governmental character" (South Carolina v. United States, 199 U. S. 437; Ohio v. Helvering, 292 U. S. 36–60).

In other words, "the implied limitation on the Federal taxing power, springing from the necessity of maintaining our dual system of Government, does not extend beyond" that necessity; and the bankruptcy power is subject to like interpretation (Board of Trustees of Illinois v. United States, 289 U. S. 48).

In construing the implied limitation on the Federal taxing power, the cases have been determined on their facts, and if there was no actual interference with essential governmental functions of a State or its agencies, the exercise of the taxing power has been sustained. This rule of construction applies with equal force and effect to the power to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies, and, in itself, justifies the passage of the pending bill to meet conditions deserving legislative assistance.

Therefore, the applicability of the pending bill to any taxing district or agency rests on the corporate character of each petitioner and depends on the actual interference, if any, with its essential governmental functions; and the saving clause in section 81 of the bill is designed to sustain the measure as to others if any one or more of the taxing agencies classified therein should be held to be political subdivisions exercising sovereign powers.

Now, it is insisted that this is an unconstitutional measure, because the Supreme Court has already passed on one phase of it. Why should the Court not reverse itself in this instance? It has done so before. What about Adkins v. Children's Hospital (261 U. S.)? What about the Legal Tender cases? And others more recent? It is well settled that it is within the discretion of the Supreme Court to follow or depart from its prior decisions (Hertz, Collector, v. Woodman, 218 U. S. 205). What is wrong, then, if Congress asks the Supreme Court to reconsider this subject? If litigants can ask it, why not Congress? Since the rule with reference to the construction of constitutional provisions is that stare decisis does not control the Court, there is no disrespect to the Court or violation of our oath of office to put this question as to municipalities squarely up to the Court again.

Yes; we have a perfect right to submit to the Supreme Court of the United States this whole question for reconsideration. It has been done as to other questions, and it will be necessary as long as this country grows and progresses, and there is nothing wrong with the principle of retaining in this bill the section which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] wishes to strike out relating to municipalities.

We have tried to put in this bill every safeguard of the freedom of the operation of a municipality and have put around the exercise of the powers of governmental subdivisions every safeguard to prevent the bill from interfering with the free operation of any of the agencies which seek its benefits.

Another point I want to refer to is that this is not a permanent law for the statute books. This law would expire, according to its terms, on the 30th of January 1940. It is only for the purpose of completing the benefits of what Congress designated as an emergency measure, but before much good could be accomplished, that measure was declared unconstitutional, and this bill is designed to complete the work. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, I always feel more or less timid in differing with any bill coming out of a committee of which I am a member, but from time to time I have informed the gentleman from Arkansas and others that I am unalterably opposed to this particular feature of the bill. For one time, and the only time, so far as I know, on any matter political, I find myself in accord with the other Kentucky member of the committee [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. Chairman, since coming here I have heard quite a lot of condemnation of nations for not paying their war debts. Certain penalties have been inflicted so that a defaulting nation could not fleece any more of our private citizens by selling securities here. Up until this time the idea of a political unit, which is really a little government, repudiating a debt has been absolutely foreign to the lay mind in America. Never before in the history of this Government has such a thing been attempted or suggested, and not knowing whether or not there would be a roll call on this I want to be in the RECORD as in opposition to it.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I have only 5 minutes and I cannot yield. My district is made up of numbers and numbers of political units, school districts, municipalities, large and small, from 700 population up. Many of those units—a very large percentage of them—have been often partly financed by individual private loans, not through banks. That was done because that kind of an investment is a better investment than the bank deposit, because it was never dreamed that it would not be 100-percent solvent. You say when you have two-thirds creditors it is sufficient. It is not submitted to a vote of the people as to whether or not you would repudiate your debt.

When a debt is once made by a political unit or any people, it ought not to be put to a vote of the whole people, as to whether or not it will be paid, much less to a vote of two-thirds of the creditors to deprive the other third of its investment. Take a widow who is advised by her banker to invest in a municipal bond. It is repudiated by this process. Scattered all about her, above and below, are wealthy neighbors, and they are excused from bearing their share of that municipal taxation, while she has lost 50 or 60 or 70 percent of her entire investment. Is that fair? That next-door neighbor owes her until that debt is paid. He is rich and she is poor.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. For a question only.

Mr. GEARHART. Suppose the widow signs the agreement?

Mr. CREAL. Oh, well, if everybody wants to do it, then you do not need any agreement or law. I am assuming there will be somebody who does not want to, and evidently there is. This idea of repudiation is fraught with many possibilities. There is danger ahead. Here is a municipality where you have cross-roads politics, school districts, and what not. They continue to increase the debt, and if somebody has the nerve to do it, an injunction is issued because of constitutional limitations of indebtedness. The "ins" have that information and the "outs" do not know it. You go ahead, and they do not know the extent of the indebtedness. The "outs" make a campaign against the "ins" based on extravagance, and what then happens? The other fellow, as you have seen it done in every cross-roads political mess, employs people right and left, and builds streets rights and left, and plunges the community into bankruptcy, and then the other fellow charges it to his predecessor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX].

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this in conclusion. A great deal has been said about a municipality or taxing district under this act repudiating its debt. I call attention once more to the terms of this bill. The Federal judge to whom this petition for confirmation must be submitted, must find, first of all, that the taxing district is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature. The court must find that as a matter of fact and a matter of law. He must find that the taxing district cannot meet its debt before the court can entertain jurisdiction of this petition at all. In the next place, the court must examine the plan and find it is fair and equitable, that it does not discriminate, that it does not take advantage, that all of the interested parties have been freely notified and are freely before the court, and that their interests are protected. Then this bill is not designed as permanent legislation. We recognized in 1933 that a debt situation had accumulated in this country that required a solution. We extended the benefit of debt adjustment to the railroad companies, we extended the benefit of debt adjustments to corporations. We extended the benefit of debt adjustments to every class of people except that we did not extend it to the taxpayers in these tax-ridden and debt-burdened municipalities who constitute the greatest class in need of relief of any class of our citizens. The Congress passed it in 1933. It did no damage. It did infinite good. The Congress, to complete the jobs, needs to put it back on the statute books for these remaining 3 years asked for in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired, all time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, that will permit amendments to be offered at any part of the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto be, and they are hereby, amended by adding thereto a new chapter, to be designated "chapter X", to be and read as follows:

"CHAPTER X

"ADDITIONAL JURISDICTION

"SECTION 81. This act and proceedings thereunder are found and declared to be within the subject of bankruptcies and, in addition to the jurisdiction otherwise exercised, courts of bankruptcy shall exercise original jurisdiction as provided in this chapter for the composition of indebtedness payable solely out of assessments or taxes, or both, levied against and constituting liens upon the property, or payable out of property acquired by foreclosure of any such assessments or taxes, or both, in any of the following-named taxing agencies or instrumentalities: (1) Drainage, drainage and levee, levee, levee and drainage, reclamation, water, irrigation, or other similar districts, commonly designated as agricultural improvement districts or local improvement districts, organized or created for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining, and operating certain improvements or projects devoted chiefly to the improvement of lands therein for agricultural purposes; or (2) local improvement of lands such as sewer, paving, sanitary, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purposes designated by their respective names; or (3) local improvement districts such as road, highway, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purpose of grading, paving, or otherwise improving public streets, roads, or highways; or (4) public-school districts or public-school authorities organized or created for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating public schools or public-school facilities; or (5) local improvement districts such as port, navigation, or other similar districts, organized or created for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining, and operating ports and port facilities; or (6) any city, town, village, borough, township, or other municipality: Provided, however, That if any provision of this chapter, or the application thereof to any such taxing agency or district or class thereof or to any circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the chapter, or the application of such provision to any other or different taxing agency or district or class thereof or to any other or different circumstances, shall not be affected by such holding.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 82. The following terms as used in this chapter, unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context, shall be construed as follows:

"That the term 'petitioner' shall include any taxing agency or instrumentality referred to in section 81 of this chapter.

"The term 'security' shall include bonds, notes, judgments, claims, and demands, liquidated or unliquidated, and other evidences of indebtedness, either secured or unsecured, and certificates of beneficial interest in property.

"The term 'creditor' means the holder of a security or securities.

"Any agency of the United States holding securities acquired pursuant to contract with any petitioner under this chapter shall be deemed a creditor in the amount of the full face value thereof.

"The term 'security affected by the plan' means a security as to which the rights of its holder are proposed to be adjusted or modified materially by the consummation of a composition agreement.

"The singular number includes the plural and the masculine gender the feminine.

"COMPOSITIONS

"SEC. 83. (a) Any petitioner may file a petition hereunder stating that the petitioner is insolvent or unable to meet its debts as they mature and that it desires to effect a plan for the composition of its debts. The petition shall be filed with the court in whose territorial jurisdiction the petitioner or the major part thereof is located, and, in the case of any unincorporated tax or special-assessment district having no officials of its own, the petition may be filed by its governing authority or the board or body having authority to levy taxes or assessments to meet the obligations to be affected by the plan of composition. The petition shall be accompanied by payment to the clerk of a filing fee of $100, which shall be in lieu of the fees required to be collected by the clerk under other applicable chapters of the Uniform Bankruptcy Act of 1898, as amended. The petition shall state that a plan of composition has been prepared, is filed and submitted with the petition, and that creditors of the petitioner owning not less than 51 percent in amount of the securities affected by the plan (excluding, however, any such securities owned, held, or controlled by the petitioner), have accepted it in writing. There shall be filed with the petition a list of all known creditors of the petitioner, together with their addresses so far as known to petitioner, and description of their respective securities showing separately those who have accepted the plan of composition, together with their separate addresses, the contents of which list shall not constitute admissions by the petitioner in a proceeding under this chapter or otherwise. Upon the filing of such a petition the judge shall enter an order either approving it as properly filed under this chapter, if satisfied that such petition complies with this chapter and has been filed in good faith, or dismissing it, if not so satisfied.

"The 'plan of composition', within the meaning of this chapter, may include provisions modifying or altering the rights of creditors generally, or of any class of them, secured or unsecured, either through issuance of new securities of any character, or otherwise, and may contain such other provisions and agreements not inconsistent with this chapter as the parties may desire.

"No creditor shall be deemed to be affected by any plan of composition unless the same shall affect his interest materially, and in case any controversy shall arise as to whether any creditor or class of creditors shall or shall not be affected, the issue shall be determined by the judge, after hearing, upon notice to the parties interested.

"For all purposes of this chapter any creditor may act in person or by an attorney or a duly authorized agent or committee. Where any committee, organization, group, or individual shall assume to act for or on behalf of creditors, such committee, organization, group, or individual shall first file with the court in which the proceeding is pending a list of the creditors represented by such committee, organization, group, or individual, giving the name and address of each such creditor, together with a statement of the amount, class, and character of the security held by him, and attach thereto copies of the instrument or instruments in writing signed by the owners of the bonds showing their authority, and shall file with the list a copy of the contract or agreement entered into between such committee, organization, group, or individual and the creditors represented by it or them, which contract shall disclose all compensation to be received, directly or indirectly, by such committee, organization, group, or individual, which agreed compensation shall be subject to modification and approval by the court.

"(b) Upon approving the petition as properly filed, or at any time thereafter, the judge shall enter an order fixing a time and place for a hearing on the petition, which shall be held within 90 days from the date of said order, and shall provide in the order that notice shall be given to creditors of the filing of the petition and its approval as being properly filed, and of the time and place for the hearing. The judge shall prescribe the form of the notice, which shall specify the manner in which claims and interests of creditors shall be filed or evidenced, on or before the date fixed for the hearing. The notice shall be published at least once a week for 3 successive weeks in at least one newspaper of general circulation published within the jurisdiction of the court, and in such other paper or papers having a general circulation among bond dealers and bondholders as may be designated by the court, and the judge may require that it may be published in such other publication as he may deem proper. The judge shall require that a copy of the notice be mailed, postage prepaid, to each creditor of the petitioner named in the petition at the address of such creditor given in the petition, or, if no address is given in the petition for any creditor and the address of such creditor cannot with reasonable diligence be ascertained, then a copy of the notice shall be mailed, postage prepaid, to such creditor addressed to him as the judge may prescribe. All expense of giving notice as herein provided shall be paid by the petitioner. The notice shall be first published, and the mailing of copies thereof shall be completed at least 60 days before the date fixed for the hearing.

"At any time not less than 10 days prior to the time fixed for the hearing any creditor of the petitioner affected by the plan may file an answer to the petition controverting any of the material allegations therein and setting up any objection he may have to the plan of composition. The judge may continue the hearing from time to time if the percentage of creditors required herein for the confirmation of the plan shall not have accepted the plan in writing, or if for any reason satisfactory to the judge the hearing is not completed on the date fixed therefor. At the hearing, or a continuance thereof, the judge shall decide the issues presented, and unless the material allegations of the petition are sustained shall dismiss the proceeding. If, however, the material allegations of the petition are sustained, the judge shall classify the creditors according to the nature of their respective claims and interests: Provided, however, That the holders of all claims, regardless of the manner in which they are evidenced, which are payable without preference out of funds derived from the same source or sources shall be of one class. The holders of claims for the payment of which specific property or revenues are pledged, or which are otherwise given preference as provided by law, shall accordingly constitute a separate class or classes of creditors.

"At the hearing, or a continuance thereof, the judge may refer any matters to a special master for consideration, the taking of testimony, and a report upon special issues, and may allow reasonable compensation for the services performed by such special master, and the actual and necessary expenses incurred in connection with the proceeding, including compensation for services rendered and expenses incurred in obtaining the deposit of securities and the preparation of the plan, whether such work may have been done by the petitioner or by committees or other representatives of creditors, and may allow reasonable compensation for the attorneys or agents of any of the foregoing, and may apportion the amount so determined among the parties to the proceeding as may be just: Provided, however, That no fees, compensation, reimbursement, or other allowances for attorneys, agents, committees, or other representatives of creditors shall be assessed against the petitioner or paid from any revenues, property, or funds of the petitioner except in the manner and in such sums, if any, as may be provided for in the plan of composition. An appeal may be taken from any order making such determination or award to the United States circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which the proceeding under this chapter is pending, independently of other appeals which may be taken in the proceeding, and such appeal shall be heard summarily.

"On 30 days' notice by any creditor to petitioner, the judge, if he finds that the proceeding has not been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, or that it is unlikely that the plan will be accepted by said proportion of creditors, may dismiss the proceeding.

"(c) Upon entry of the order fixing the time for the hearing, or at any time thereafter, the judge may upon notice enjoin or stay, pending the determination of the matter, the commencement or continuation of suits against the petitioner, or any officer or inhabitant thereof, on account of the securities affected by the plan, or to enforce any lien or to enforce the levy of taxes or assessments for the payment of obligations under any such securities, or any suit or process to levy upon or enforce against any property acquired by the petitioner through foreclosure of any such tax lien or special assessment lien, except where rights have become vested under peremptory writs, and may enter an interlocutory decree providing that the plan shall be temporarily operative with respect to all securities affected thereby and that the payment of the principal or interest, or both, of such securities shall be temporarily postponed or extended or otherwise readjusted in the same manner and upon the same terms as if such plan had been finally confirmed and put into effect, and upon the entry of such decree the principal or interest, or both, of such securities which have otherwise become due, or which would otherwise become due, shall not be or become due or payable, and the payment of all such securities shall be postponed during the period in which such decree shall remain in force, but shall not, by any order or decree, in the proceeding or otherwise, interfere with (a) any of the political or governmental powers of the petitioner; or (b) any of the property or revenues of the petitioner necessary for essential governmental purposes; or (c) any income-producing property, unless the plan of composition so provides.

"(d) The plan of composition shall not be confirmed until it has been accepted in writing, by or on behalf of creditors holding at least two-thirds of the aggregate amount of claims of all classes affected by such plan and which have been admitted by the petitioner or allowed by the judge, but excluding claims owned, held, or controlled by the petitioner: Provided, however, That it shall not be requisite to the confirmation of the plan that there be such acceptance by any creditor or class of creditors (a) whose claims are not affected by the plan; or (b) if the plan makes provision for the payment of their claims in cash in full; or (c) if provision is made in the plan for the protection of the interests, claims, or lien of such creditors or class of creditors.

"(e) At the conclusion of the hearing, the judge shall make written findings of fact and his conclusions of law thereon, and shall enter an interlocutory decree confirming the plan if satisfied that (1) it is fair, equitable, and for the best interests of the creditors and does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any creditor or class of creditors; (2) complies with the provisions of this chapter; (3) has been accepted and approved as required by the provisions of subdivision (d) of this section; (4) all amounts to be paid by the petitioner for services or expenses incident to the composition have been fully disclosed and are reasonable; (5) the offer of the plan and its acceptance are in good faith; and (6) the petitioner is authorized by law to take all action necessary to be taken by it to carry out the plan. If not so satisfied, the judge shall enter an order dismissing the proceeding.

"Before a plan is confirmed, changes and modifications may be made therein, with the approval of the judge after hearing upon such notice to creditors as the judge may direct, subject to the right of any creditor who shall previously have accepted the plan to withdraw his acceptance, within a period to be fixed by the judge and after such notice as the judge may direct, if, in the opinion of the judge, the change or modification will be materially adverse to the interest of such creditor, and if any creditor having such right of withdrawal shall not withdraw within such period, he shall be deemed to have accepted the plan as changed or modified: Provided, however, That the plan as changed or modified shall comply with all the provisions of this chapter and shall have been accepted in writing by the petitioner. Either party may appeal from the interlocutory decree as in equity cases. In case said interlocutory decree shall prescribe a time within which any action is to be taken, the running of such time shall be suspended in case of an appeal until final determination thereof. In case said decree is affirmed, the judge may grant such time as he may deem proper for the taking of such action.

"(f) If an interlocutory decree confirming the plan is entered as herein provided, the plan and said decree of confirmation shall become and be binding upon all creditors affected by the plan, if within the time prescribed in the interlocutory decree, or such additional time as the judge may allow, the money, securities, or other consideration to be delivered to the creditors under the terms of the plan shall have been deposited with the court or such disbursing agent as the court may appoint or shall otherwise be made available for the creditors. And thereupon the court shall enter a final decree determining that the petitioner has made available for the creditors affected by the plan the consideration provided for therein and is discharged from all debts and liabilities dealt with in the plan except as provided therein, and that the plan is binding upon all creditors affected by it, whether secured or unsecured, and whether or not their claims have been filed or evidenced, and, if filed or evidenced, whether or not allowed, including creditors who have not, as well as those who have, accepted it.

"(g) A certified copy of the final decree, or of any other decree or order entered by the court or the judge thereof, in a proceeding under this chapter, shall be evidence of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of the proceedings, and the fact that the decree or order was made. A certified copy of an order providing for the transfer of any property dealt with by the plan shall be evidence of the transfer of title accordingly and, if recorded as conveyances are recorded, shall impart the same notice that a deed, if recorded, would impart.

"(h) This chapter shall not be construed as to modify or repeal any prior, existing statute relating to the refinancing or readjustment of indebtedness of municipalities, political subdivisions, or districts.

"(i) Nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed to limit or impair the power of any State to control, by legislation or otherwise, any municipality or any political subdivision of or in such State in the exercise of its political or governmental powers, including expenditures therefor.

"TERMINATION OF JURISDICTION

"SEC. 84. Jurisdiction conferred on any court by section 81 shall not be exercised by such court after June 30, 1940, except in respect of any proceeding initiated by filing a petition under section 83 (a) on or prior to June 30, 1940."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILCOX: Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "payable" in line 7, and strike out all of lines 8, 9, 10, and 11, and the words "or instrumentalities" in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of, or authorized by, any of the taxing agencies or instrumentalities hereinafter named, payable (a) out of assessments or taxes, or both, levied against and constituting liens upon property in any of said taxing agencies or instrumentalities, or (b) out of property acquired by foreclosure of any such assessments or taxes or both, or (c) out of income derived by such taxing agencies or instrumentalities from the sale of water or power, or both, or (d) from any combination thereof."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is designed as a perfecting amendment. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] would be interested in the purposes of that amendment. It is offered because the wording in the original bill, as drawn, we found was not sufficient to cover a great many of the districts in the far West, particularly those in California and others of the Western States, which collect a great deal of their revenue from the sale of water or power. It is designed to extend the benefit to those districts rather than to leave them out because of the limitations in the original wording.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. What does it do?

Mr. WILCOX. It extends the privilege to those districts which do not necessarily derive their income from taxes, but which either supplement their income or probably derive their entire income from the sale of water or power, or both. The original wording of the bill was such that it applied only to those districts relying upon taxes collected upon property within their specific districts. This extends the benefits of the bill to water districts whose revenue is derived from the sale of water.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand it, those districts are municipal corporations?

Mr. WILCOX. They are the same class of districts as all of the balance dealt with in the bill, except that it extends the privilege to those whose income is derived from the sale of water or power, or both, rather than restricting it to those whose income is derived from taxes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. What I am getting at is this: If it were an ordinary corporation, if it were not a municipal corporation, then it would come under section 77B?

Mr. WILCOX. They are municipal corporations in that degree; yes.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, somebody has questioned whether or not this should be called the municipal bankruptcy bill.

Mr. WILCOX. It extends not only to cities and towns, but also to these districts.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Irrigation districts are municipalities under the law.

Mr. WILCOX. They probably are municipalities. This is designed to cover those districts receiving water rents as well as those deriving their income from taxes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I understood someone a while ago to state that all of these drainage districts had elements of sovereignty; elements of sovereignty had been surrendered to them by the States. Is that the case in this bill?

Mr. WILCOX. No, sir.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is not the case?

Mr. WILCOX. It is not the case. The constitutionality of this bill can be distinguished from the other bill in this way: The original bill extended to those subdivisions of a State government, which are essentially arms of the State government. Now we have left out of this bill counties and those other subdivisions which are essentially a part of the State. In other words, a State cannot operate without a county, because it is through the counties that the State performs most of its functions. The county holds the courts for the State. The county collects the taxes for the State. The county performs innumerable services for the State which the State could not exist without, but a city or town or these taxing districts do not have those elements of sovereignty, because the State government could continue to function just as effectively if every one of them were abolished. If we abolish every one of the units referred to in this bill, it would not affect the functioning of the State government; and therefore they are not essential elements of the State government, and the sovereignty of the State does not extend to them as it did in the case which was before the Supreme Court.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand, this does not apply to county organizations?

Mr. WILCOX. No, sir; it does not apply to county organizations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILCOX: Page 10, line 25, after the word "vested", strike out the words "under peremptory writs."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is this: The bill as written inadvertently used the clause "where rights have become vested under peremptory writs." In other words, I was trying to protect the rights of creditors where their interests have become vested. I used the words "under peremptory writs." I think it was a mistake to include these three words, for the reason that it only protects the rights which have become vested under peremptory writs and if the creditor had a right that had become vested in some other way he would be left out. On the other hand, I am not so sure that a peremptory writ gives a person a vested right. This language would attempt to legislate something that may not be true in a particular State. Eliminating these words, does not affect the interest of the creditor which has become vested in any manner whatsoever. The intention is that the proceedings shall not affect any right which has become vested. The amendment strikes out these words which might limit the effect of the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILCOX: Page 15, line 4, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following words: "Provided, however, That the initiation of proceedings, or the filing of a petition under section 80 shall not constitute a bar to the same taxing agency or instrumentality initiating a new proceeding under section 81 thereof."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I am not so sure that this is a necessary amendment. I offer it in the interest of safety, for fear that it might be necessary. As I understand, when a law is declared unconstitutional all actions instituted under it are void. It cannot, therefore, be a bar to any future action. But there are a good number of these municipalities and taxing districts which had filed proceedings under the old section 80, which was declared unconstitutional, and I do not want them to be confronted under this new act with the possibility of being barred by reason of having filed under the old section. I offer this amendment simply for the purpose of clearing up that situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MICHENER: On page 3, line 7, after the word "facility", strike out the semicolon and the following: "or (6) any city, town, village, borough, township, or other municipality."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment to which I referred, and will strike out that part of the law which has been held unconstitutional. This language was put in the bill by the committee, as I stated, after most careful consideration, but it was put in with the hope that another hearing might be secured before the Supreme Court.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. I am sure that the gentleman does not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. MICHENER. No; I do not.

Mr. WILCOX. The case that went to the Supreme Court was not that of a city, town, village, borough, or other municipality.

Mr. MICHENER. I see the point the gentleman has in mind. The Court in the Ashton case held that if the local subdivision was a municipality in the sense that it performed any of the sovereign functions of the State, it could not be brought under the bankruptcy power of the Constitution. We all know, and take judicial notice of the fact, that a city, that a town, that a village, that a borough, that a township does perform such functions for the sovereign as are prohibited by the holding in the Ashton case. Section 6, with the separability clause, was tacked on with the understanding that if the bill went through and that part of it was held unconstitutional, it would not destroy the rest of the law. I think that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] a little while ago said that section 6 was a small part of the bill—just a little bit of it. It may become the big part of it. If a bill or any part of it is unconstitutional and this is known to the Members, if they are satisfied in their own minds that it is unconstitutional, what is their duty under their oaths? What ought they to do? Should they pay no attention to that which they know is unconstitutional with the hope that some time the Supreme Court might change its mind and render another opinion that might make it constitutional?

So far as the rest of the bill is concerned, I say that it is a carefully worded bill. The gentleman from Florida has given much attention to it. The subcommittee, of which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER] is chairman and of which I am a member, spent hours and days on it. If you want to accomplish what the bill seeks to accomplish, however, and permit these several municipalities to go into bankruptcy, this bill will do the job if you eliminate that which we know is unconstitutional. As it is we are just leaving it in there with the separability clause in the hope that the lightning might strike and that some day it might be determined that it was constitutional. I know that the bill is going to pass; therefore let us make it as good a bill as we can.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. Chairman, I want to be very candid with the House about this bill and the provision in it which the gentleman from Michigan seeks to have stricken out. This bill has a separable clause. Objection on constitutional grounds is raised to section 6. We believe in all candor that the Court, on representation and reargument of this question may hold, and probably will hold, against the former decision of that Court.

We believe it is important that this question be again presented to the Court. We believe it is important that it shall not remain the law of the land that a sovereign State, in the exercise of its sovereignty, cannot authorize and permit its creature to go of its own volition into this Court or any other court.

This Nation itself is often sued in court. One of the highest acts of sovereignty on the part of this Nation is to submit itself to the jurisdiction of the courts. We should like to have the opportunity to have this question presented to the Court for the reasons I have indicated. It must be evident to every student of the American system of government, when he looks at this great Nation, its population, its territory, and its diversity of interests, that the statesmen of America must in some way before long begin to move governmental power back to the States and the smaller units of government, where the individual has a greater responsibility and a greater duty, and, therefore, has the greater possibility of developing his capacity through the exercise of his capacity in order that he may be able to preserve this Nation through the centuries to come as a nation in which free people may govern themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to prolong the discussion of this particular amendment, but I should like to say a word about it in order to prevent any confusion that may exist.

May I say that no one in this House respects the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] more than I. As he very well knows, I regard him very highly, and his knowledge of constitutional law I respect profoundly. But I repeat what I said a moment ago, that the rule of stare decisis is not controlling in questions of constitutional law. The case in which this question was raised was one in which the Constitution of Texas had specifically defined irrigation districts in that State to be subdivisions of the State and exercising the sovereign powers of an agency of the State. The question of a municipality itself was not involved in the case. We took out of the bill counties and parishes, which are essentially subdivisions of the State and which were in the same general category as irrigation districts in the Cameron Water Co. case.

This particular point has not been passed upon, except by implication, and it is the opinion of the Judiciary Committee that the present bill removes the objections to the unconstitutional statute and gives a forum to enable those distressed taxing agencies which desire to adjust their obligations and which are capable of reorganization, to meet their creditors under necessary judicial control and guidance and free from coercion, and to effect such adjustment on a plan determined to be mutually advantageous.

It is provided at the end of this bill that—

> Nothing contained herein shall be construed to limit or impair the power of any State to control by legislation or otherwise any municipality or any political subdivision of or any such State in the exercise of its political or governmental powers, including expenditures therefor.

That would be the only way this act might have come in contravention with the present rule with reference to State sovereignty, but nothing contained in this bill will have that effect.

I say this question clearly ought to be presented on the facts of a municipality's case, if such a case arises.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman contend a municipality is not exercising the sovereign power of a State?

Mr. CHANDLER. No. It does in some respects. There are two municipal functions, the governmental function and the proprietary function. In the exercise of the proprietary function a municipality may be sued, and they are sued many times.

Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment ought to be defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania: Page 11, line 22, strike out the word "claims" and insert "original claims without assignee."

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I have adopted one of the oldest philosophies of credit under our form of government, dating back to the very inception of our Government, when James Madison, to protect the interests of the colonists on the certificates of indebtedness issued by the Colonies, made this same suggestion.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest if we adopt the amendment it will protect the individual who has an investment in bonds as the initial purchaser of the bonds from the ravages of bondholders' protective committees. An issue of bonds is sold to the public usually through a syndicate. If the issue is not sold through a syndicate, it is sold through distributors, and the distributors sell through dealers. They know in every instance who holds each bond, and when trouble comes up and the market becomes depressed they send forth their letters, shedding crocodile tears, and they beseech the holders of these bonds to place themselves at their mercy and put their bonds into their hands.

It is an easy matter for such a syndicate to get 66⅔ percent of the claims involved. I have seen that done, and I have seen it done in industrial bonds. It can be done in municipal bonds. I have seen an example of it in industrial bonds in connection with the Pittsburgh Hotels Corporation in Pittsburgh. A receiver was appointed by the authority of Judge Gibson, a friend of mine, from the western district of Pennsylvania. The receiver who was appointed—Mr. Eppley, president of Eppley Hotels Corporation—loaned from the cash assets of the Eppley Hotels Corporation over $200,000 on receiver's certificates, issued by himself as receiver for the Pittsburgh Hotels Corporation, and these receiver's certificates were a prior claim against the assets. Thereafter, he defaulted on the interest on his own bonds, and the bonds of the Eppley Hotels Corporation by its own balance sheet showed the acquisition for the sinking fund, over $168,000 of bonds so acquired and yet defaulted its interest. The bonds became depressed until they were quoted at 6 and 8 in the market.

Instead of meeting the interest, over $168,000 worth of those bonds were purchased in the market, none by call or sale to the sinking fund by original owners, and thereafter under section 77B these men went before the District Court of the United States at Omaha and got the kind of decision I feel we should battle against. Notice had gone forth for the deposit of July 1 and prior coupons for certificates of indebtedness. On June 27, when the President signed the bill applying, the ink was scarcely dried on his pen when the second order not to deposit went forth. The result was, Eppley got a moratorium, a 10-year extension, reduced sinking fund, and 3 percent interest, to the prejudice of the creditor, whose losses enriched Eppley by the diversion of assets into the sinking fund. The Pittsburgh Hotels, too, passed into his system.

If you adopt this amendment and protect the original investment by not allowing the assignee to get the benefit of any adjustment, you will go a long way toward stamping out the racketeering of bondholders' protective committees and the ravages that have been perpetrated in the name of the people who are standing to lose their money. This is one of the most iniquitous systems that has been adopted by the people who exploited those whose confidence they first gained when they sold them the bonds.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I may say to the gentleman that he makes a very interesting and important suggestion, but we find this difficulty: These bonds having been legally transferred, they would remain outstanding against the municipality, and the debtor would not be bound by the adjustment. This would be our difficulty. I hope the gentleman will not press the amendment.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. I believe it is a very good amendment. I may say to my friend the gentleman from Texas that it was good in the days of Madison, after vessels had been dispatched to South Carolina and to Georgia to buy up the certificates of indebtedness of those colonies. This method which James Madison put through the Congress of the United States was the only method by which that racketeering was stopped. It can be stopped again. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will not press the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly hold no brief for bondholders' committees. I think every Member of the House who is familiar with my activities against bondholders' committees will certify to that fact. However, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that while I am thoroughly in sympathy with his effort to control, regulate, and outlaw those bondholders' committees, and while I think that in some instances they constitute the most iniquitous racket which has been perpetrated in this country in the last generation, I fear that this amendment will do a great injustice to many innocent people.

I may say to the gentleman that the section to which he has offered his amendment requires the consent of two-thirds of the claims of all classes. If you limit the application of that provision only to those who have originally owned the bonds and who have never had them transferred or assigned, you would cut out the participation in the notice and in the agreement necessary to the confirmation of such a plan of many bona-fide holders of bonds.

In other words, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania originally bought a bond of a certain municipality, and later I in good faith bought it from him, then, if his amendment should prevail, I would not be consulted about the settlement of my bond. Under the bill as drawn, every creditor is notified, all claims must be consulted, and two-thirds of all claims of all classes must consent.

Let me remind the gentleman further that I have put into the bill a very stringent provision about bondholders' committees undertaking to represent the bondholders.

The gentleman will find that very strict regulations are placed on such bondholders' committees. They are required to submit to the court quite a number of things which protect the interest of bondholders against the operations of the bondholders' committees. At first it was my hope we might outlaw such committees altogether, but you will find in dealing with any class of creditors, whether of a corporation or a municipality or otherwise, that where there are thousands of creditors you must permit them to act through some central agency to be selected by them. When you undertake to outlaw a committee you outlaw also the bona-fide representatives of creditors. The best thing to do is to make the regulations as we have them in this bill, to control, regulate, and supervise such committees and see to it that they give their own clients a fair break and honest dealing.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. I may state that the picture the gentleman from Florida has drawn is truly analogous. If he bought a bond from me, he would then be the owner. However, the only way is to strike at the syndicates, which form the bondholders' protective committees, and then come back and seek to represent the bondholders, and I have never known one to represent truly the bondholders from whom they have extracted the bonds. They have grossly misrepresented them. I will grant that in the case of an individual an analogous situation would exist; but in connection with the bondholders' protective committee operations, that is exactly what happened when the Government of the United States was set up and it undertook to protect the debts of the Colonies by a funding system and to accept the certificates of indebtedness at face value.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. While I am in sympathy with the aim of the amendment, I hope the amendment will not be adopted, because very close attention was given to this provision of the bill. The whole thing was threshed out with a number of members of the committee feeling just as the gentleman from Pennsylvania feels. The language suggested by the gentleman from Florida, we think, is the best to accomplish the purpose.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: On page 4, line 4, after the word "securities", add "who has been the bona-fide owner thereof for not less than 2 years."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is along the same line as the amendment offered a moment ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, except that it does not go quite as far. It is directed, however, at the same weakness in the bill. As I look at it, this bill, if passed, offers an inducement and a temptation to demagogic politicians to enter into collusive agreements with financial sharks for their mutual benefit.

I can visualize a situation like this. Someone announces himself as a candidate for mayor of a city on a platform promising that if elected he will reduce the indebtedness of the city and lower the tax rate. This is always a popular platform and if the people believe the candidate, he is sure to be elected. Assume such a candidate is elected. He immediately defaults on certain securities of the city. The market value of the city's bonds is greatly depreciated and the mayor calls in the financial wolves, who buy them at depressed prices, gain control, go into court and refund the city's obligations at a figure which gives them a very substantial profit. It is perfectly conceivable that these speculators would go about the country buying bonds from bona-fide purchasers at, we will say, an average of 50 or 60 per bond and then go into court, having obtained control, and refinance their defaulted securities at 75, greatly to their own enrichment and greatly to the glory of the mayor himself. Having made good his promise to scale down the city's debt the mayor would be a strong candidate for reelection.

This amendment simply provides that a creditor in order to have any voice in revising the debt structure of the city, must have held the security for at least 2 years. I admit this would exclude some bona-fide purchasers but, on the other hand, nobody would have any voice in court except the bona-fide purchasers. It places control entirely in the hands of those who should have it.

Now, who are the purchasers of municipal bonds? In the main, they are charitable institutions, universites, insurance companies, fraternal associations, savings banks, trustees, and guardians. They do not buy for speculation, they buy for permanent investment. Are they not the people you wish to have control of any reorganization of the financial structure of a municipality. Do you want to make it possible for the speculating sharks to get control for their own profit and at the expense of the legitimate investors? My amendment is merely an attempt to safeguard legitimate investors who have purchased securities for investment at substantial prices. I want to safeguard their interests and protect them from financial sharpshooters and tricky politicians.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

While the gentleman's intentions are excellent, the effect of the proposed amendment would be to destroy the negotiability of the securities that may be involved in the proceedings. This is the practical effect of the amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I tried to make it clear that, in my judgment, municipal bonds are not bought for speculative purposes. In practically every case the investor buys as a permanent investment. They do not lend themselves to speculation. The price simply fluctuates up and down with the price of money, and there is no inducement for speculation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I appreciate that, but the actual effect is to do the very thing that I do not believe the gentleman wants done. Under the proposed amendment a person who bought the bond in the best of faith must have held the security for over 2 years. If he should buy a security, say, within 1 year prior to the filing of the proceedings, over which he would have no control, he would have no right to be classed as a creditor in the proceedings. I think the amendment is too harsh.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Where would control be?

Mr. CHANDLER. With the holders of the securities. If it is a question of protecting the security holders, whether they are bona fide or not, that matter could be reached in another section of the bill, which gives the court the right to look into the entire matter.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Can the gentleman point to any safeguard in the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. All the way through the bill the rights of creditors have to be established. I am opposed to scalpers, too, but we may hurt bona-fide creditors at the same time.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The definition of a creditor is simply one who holds the security, as the bill is now written.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the amendment ought to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of New York), there were—ayes 18, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RANKIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5969) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; and pursuant to House Resolution 228, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MICHENER), there were—ayes 123, noes 16.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONFERRING OF DEGREE OF BACHELOR OF SCIENCE UPON GRADUATES OF WEST POINT AND ANNAPOLIS

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 2291, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, H. R. 2291, to amend the act of May 25, 1933, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Lines 10 and 11, strike out "all living graduates of the said academies" and insert "such other living graduates of the said academies as shall have met the requirements of the respective academies for such degree."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman kindly explain this amendment?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, some several weeks ago the House passed a bill permitting the Naval and Military Academies at West Point and Annapolis to confer degrees on the graduates of those academies where the graduate had graduated prior to 1933. Since 1933 these academies have had that power and have been conferring degrees.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And this is just to go back and take care of the old graduates?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks upon the bill just passed, H. R. 5969.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall not object. I would not want to prevent anyone receiving lots of sunshine. I rise simply to express the hope the heat is not too great and that the Democratic Members will not get too far from their moorings and will have a safe landing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORTS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the War Department appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request with respect to the conferees on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have until midnight tonight to file a report upon a bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the completion of the legislative business of the House and the special orders, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, on June 21, Monday last, I was unavoidably absent when roll call 94 was called, the Railroad Retirement Act. Had I been present I would have voted "aye."

PROPOSED CONGRESSIONAL RECESS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement published in this morning's newspaper that some Members of the House propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a very brief statement of my own views on that subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as our Federal Government is supposed to consist of three independent coordinate branches, and in view of the fact that two of those coordinate branches have dropped their arduous tasks and taken vacations this year, would it not be in order for our congressional leaders to offer a joint resolution to recess Congress for a 6-month period, in order that we might have the opportunity to cool off and calm down, thereby clarifying our legislative vision, so that we may again see the forest as well as the trees?

There is no doubt about it; Congress has lost sight of the forest because of the trees. To illustrate:

The tax-evasion tree, with its far-reaching branches, is only one tree amid a forest of taxes that has been obscured and disregarded by Congress.

The Supreme Court controversy tree looms up so large and has become so magnified that Congress has lost sight of the entire legislative forest.

The latest tree that has obscured our vision is devastation by floods. We have seized upon that and propose to use it as an excuse to establish a series of T. V. A.'s all across the continent to further rob the sick coal industry.

If time would permit, many other examples of the trees obscuring the forest could be given.

However, Congress has undoubtedly lost itself in a labyrinth of trees, trees that loom up so large that we cannot see the forest. We are traveling around in circles and know not where we are. The whole has been lost sight of because we have obscured our vision with the parts. However, Congress is not alone in this. Those who live in glass houses, or white houses for that matter, should not throw stones.

In view of the situation, do you not think it would be wise for us to recess for 6 months; send the President upon a cruise around the world as our official ambassador of good will to all nations, a role in which he is unsurpassed; let the overworked Supreme Court strictly alone to take its much-needed rest; and give the country another badly needed breathing spell? I believe, if we will do this, it will permit industry to get back in full stride, do away with the last vestige of the depression, and everyone would become peaceful and happy once more.

In closing, as the gentleman from New Jersey would say, "I admonish you, my brethren, ponder these things in your hearts."

LABOR CONDITIONS

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I have sat in this House patiently for some weeks now listening to the gentleman from Michigan denouncing the President of the United States and the Governor of his own State, with an occasional fling at Governors of Pennsylvania and Ohio.

If I fully understand the distinguished gentleman's demands, he would have either the Governors of these States or the President of the United States call out the State and Federal troops and proceed to put the strikers in their places; that is, in what he conceives to be their places—supine submission to their bosses.

Now, of course, the distinguished gentleman being a standpat, die-hard Republican, his attitude is readily understood.

Property rights, in his view, are predominant. Human rights, such as the right to a fair day's pay for a fair day's work, are secondary.

While he eloquently proclaims the rights of the owners of the steel and automobile mills and factories, he is totally blind to the rights of the men whose muscle, brawn, and skill make the operation of these mills and factories possible.

The fact that in many instances these mills and factories turn out to be well-equipped arsenals, that the management employ labor spies, agents provocateurs, that they enlist the local police authorities in campaigns of the grossest brutality—even murder—does not seem to faze the gentleman from Michigan one particle.

The gentleman is, I am sure, thinking of the good old days of the Homestead strike, when the steel companies, armed to the teeth, aided and abetted by the local and State authorities, ruthlessly murdered hundreds of the strikers. At that time—1890's—there was no sympathy in high government places with downtrodden and outraged human beings trying in the only way they knew to better their conditions, which were, I assure you, deplorable at the best.

I could quote history on this, my friends, but I do not need to. I saw what happened. I saw hired thugs of the Carnegie Steel Co. make a foray down the street where the miserable company shacks were located and ruthlessly and needlessly fire volley after volley into the homes of these poor wretches.

I have no quarrel with the gentleman from Michigan. He is living up to the traditions of his political party. To him property rights supersede human rights. That has been the philosophy that animated the Republican Party from the Grant administration to the present day.

The gentleman from Michigan has, I am sure, the entire and enthusiastic approval of such great liberals as Mark Sullivan, Walter Lippmann, and David Lawrence.

As for me, I stand with the brain, brawn, and skill of the men who work. I believe they are within their rights to demand what the law of the land accords them. The right to sit down with their employers, discuss the problem, and enforce a fair bargain as to wages, hours, and working conditions.

Of what virtue, may I ask, is a steel mill, equipped though it be with the most modern machinery for the making of steel, if there are no strong, skilled workmen to tend these machines?

My friends and colleagues, I appeal to you to remember this: Before you condemn the men who strike, just ask yourselves what industry would do without willing, strong, and skilled workers?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Food and Drug Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an address I made on the 14th of June.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, following the orders already entered, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that means that if there are any bills to be considered, this special order will come after those bills are disposed of?

The SPEAKER. That is what it means.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

POWER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, my address today is a comparative study of the rates of the private electric companies at Portland, Oreg., and the publicly owned plant at Tacoma, Wash. About 10 days from now, or after I have completed my studies, I am going to ask for time to speak on what is known as the Washington plan or Washington yardstick. Throughout the electric world the question of rates being paid in the city of Washington has been talked about as being low enough to be a yardstick to be used by the Nation. The electric rates at Portland, Oreg., have recently been cited by certain individuals, and it has been stated they were low enough to be regarded as a yardstick for the Nation. In this study I am using the tables that have been prepared by the Federal Power Commission, and if the Members are at all interested in the electric-power situation I ask them to read this address and study the tables.

Mr. Speaker, may I now ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and, as a part of my remarks, to include certain tables furnished me by the Federal Power Commission?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, in connection with my bill for the operation and administration of Bonneville Dam and for the use of the electric power to be generated at that great project, I have, incidentally, made a study and analysis of the electric power rates of Portland, Oreg., under private ownership, as compared with those of Tacoma, Wash., under public ownership. I have been familiar with the many phases of the electric-rate problem from the days when I was the principal owner and manager of an electric-power plant, through my public life in the State Senate and as Governor of the State of Oregon and since coming to Washington. I am so fortunate as to be a user of electricity on my ranch, though 70 percent of rural Oregon is without such service. I have been astonished and surprised at the disclosures which have come to me as a result of this recent rate study. That there might not be any question of up-to-date figures, I asked the Federal Power Commision here in Washington to furnish me with typical Portland and Tacoma current electric bills. The figures quoted in this address were given to me by this Commission within the last week. In the face of these figures, I cannot understand how anyone, whether he is an employee of the utilities, or a user of electricity in Portland, can repeat the current propaganda statement that the rates in Portland are low. They are exceedingly high. They are not made out on a fair basis so that the public may check them against other rates.

THE BASIS OF RATE STRUCTURES

I would not draw the attention of this House to a purely local matter, but it is my opinion that this study will serve many other sections and that the results are of important significance in the national power picture. Such electric-rate studies should be made for many sections of the country. They will undoubtedly follow the introduction of the yardsticks contemplated by the President when the great national projects are completed. The Federal Power Commission has made a complete study of the electric rates in the United States, but this study has not been sufficiently comparative to impress upon the people the true meaning of rate differentials. It remains for each section and for each advocate of public ownership to make these comparisons and to impress upon local communities their exact situation in relation to the ideal which should prevail for power users.

In this recent comparison of rates between Portland and Tacoma, I have found the same practices in fixing rates that were used years and years ago. They are more complicated now, more difficult to fathom, but have the same effect. I shall never forget the old utility slogan impressed upon me by embryo holding companies of my day, "Charge all the traffic will bear; all that you can collect; issue bonds for every dollar of investment and then some. If you cannot sell the bonds, lock them up in your own safe. Courts in the future may not respect your stock issues, but they will always respect the bond issues, and allow a rate structure on which to earn interest." If the conclusions, which I am able to draw from actual facts from my section carry for every other section, we shall find that the American people have been overcharged over 100 percent in their electric bills.

I state again, as I have, repeatedly in public addresses through the years, that the utilities are taking advantage of their users in overcharges. Overcharging for what purpose? To uphold the excessive amounts of bonds and stocks that are outstanding against the electric properties and to make political donations and expenditures in order to protect their high rates. High electric rates and political corruption go hand in hand.

The statements and tables contained herein have been painstakingly collected and set forth so that users of electricity might have available a method of estimating local electric light and power charges, using the public power rates of Tacoma as a measure or yardstick. Each may figure total overcharges for a city or county. I suggest measuring such wasteful payments against public benefits which might be secured with the money now sent to Wall Street holding companies through forced contributions. Why not apply it on the tax bill, or pay off the debt, or meet the mortgage interest?

There is no scientific basis for the rate structures in the country today. The private utilities may charge all the traffic will bear, but they get by the various State regulatory bodies and the courts through subterfuge, concealment, and political corruption. The whole point of my argument is that users of electricity should pay a fair price based on actual cost of production and honest investment.

PORTLAND'S OPPORTUNITY

The city of Portland, which I have used for purposes of comparison, has an opportunity for progress this year because it could take over the properties of a private utility company—the Northwestern Electric Co.—which holds a franchise about to expire. Prompt action on the part of the citizens of Portland in refusing to renew the franchise and taking over the property at a fair valuation is dictated by every consideration of community interest. By using electric energy from Bonneville, they may put the electric business of their city on a basis which will allow them to share the advantages of public ownership which have been demonstrated by their neighbors in Los Angeles, Tacoma, and Seattle, where rates are all materially lower than they are in utility-ridden Portland.

In connection with the propaganda against general use of Bonneville power, and limiting its benefits to monopolistic industries, statements have been made before committees in Congress and in national magazines that private utility rates in Portland are low. Press articles have recently stated, in substance, that the electric rates of these utilities are so low that they might be used as a national yardstick. Such statements have been made to Members of Congress by Oregonians who are opposed to public ownership and are acting to protect the interests of private utilities. I have no desire to injure any going business nor to raid private utilities. I assume that any city which adopts a public ownership system will try to buy local competing systems at a fair valuation. Experience of other cities seems to have demonstrated that competition within a city is costly.

But even under competition the rates will be lower than they are now, and no investors will suffer loss of any honest investment.

The statement is freely made, by people who ought to know better, that Portland authorities cannot act until they know the price that will be fixed on the Bonneville power. Portland should act at once because it is reported that the electric units at Bonneville will be completed and that power will be for sale by or before January 1938. The amount paid the Government at wholesale for that power by the distributor will be only about 10 percent of the amount of the home electric light bill, therefore, the statement that there must be a firm and fixed price for Bonneville power before any decisions can be made is just so much bosh. It is simply made in the interest of holding the privileges of the private utilities.

Any Member of Congress who makes a similar regional or local study may well adopt the plan which I use in this discussion and, by adapting it to a local situation, bring out facts which will undoubtedly be startling to his constituents.

RATE LEVELS AND JOKERS

The only accurate method of judging the rates of any private or public power utility is the comparison of customers' bills for different classes of service and for different use within the class. The private utilities use the chain-store practice of "price leaders." These "leaders" are applied to a limited range of a given schedule and then used to deceive the public. Another joker is the use of complex and intricate rate schedules. These intricate rate schedules make it impossible for the average person to compare bills. On the other hand, the agent of the utility may so interpret these complex schedules as to show benefits to favored consumers. Americans should never forget that the basis of the Rockefeller fortune was the rebates which he compelled transportation lines to grant to his companies and to withhold from his competitors. He even went so far as to make lines of transportation pay over to him the extra freight charges that were exacted from his competitors. The methods used by the utilities are as high-handed, and even more complex and baffling than those used by Rockefeller, but they have the same effect.

There is still another rate joker which may be peculiar to the Portland operating companies. The power rate of Tacoma is so low, as compared with Portland, that the Portland companies resort to metering their two-part power rate customers on a 5-minute demand, instead of a 30-minute demand basis, as used in Tacoma. The 5-minute demand metering produces a higher bill than a 30-minute demand basis. This is a trick to "up" the power bills while stating a lower rate. It has the same effect as having the meter "stepped up" to give a higher bill. Using a 5-minute demand is pure fraud. It is like changing the scales when they buy the farmer's wheat, and offset high prices by low weights. Why does not the Utility Commission of Oregon so advise these injured power customers? It remains for the State regulatory body to explain why this has been allowed.

RATE CLASSES

Generally the private power companies have different schedules of rates for different classes of service. These classes are:

(1) Home consumption, called domestic service.

(2) Rural service, or service to the farms.

(3) Commercial light with a small amount of power which represents service to the small and intermediate stores.

(4) Commercial power which covers service to the intermediate and relatively numerous factories scattered throughout the city and in the suburbs.

(5) Large industrial power, which covers energy to the wholesale users in big industry. Comparisons are given for typical bills in each class of service, as far as time permits to demonstrate the electric overcharges to the people of Portland, using Tacoma rates as a standard. The system used uniformly for all tables is a schedule by monthly electric consumption and charges, as shown on the bill, with percentages of excess of Portland charges computed for each amount. Every Portland consumer can see for himself how much he would save if Tacoma municipal rates were in effect in Portland. Full information is set out to afford an opportunity to check the correctness of these comparisons.

Remember, these typical bills were recently furnished by the Federal Power Commission.

RESIDENTIAL ELECTRIC BILLS

Electric rate schedules are complicated and therefore confusing to the home user. However, the electric bill received at the end of each month is easily understandable, and every user should know how to interpret a bill and read a meter. In a home where current is used for lighting and a few small appliances, the electric consumption would be about 40 kilowatt-hours per month. If the good lady of the home installs an electric refrigerator, add 50 kilowatt-hours, and for a radio 10 kilowatt-hours, making consumption about 100 kilowatt-hours per month. If economical and labor-saving electric cookery is added, the consumption would be about 250 kilowatt-hours per month. If a continuous supply of hot water, heated with an electric automatic heater, is used, the monthly consumption would be about 500 kilowatt-hours. Using these appliances as well as the bill of the less fortunate little fellow, who must economize rigidly, I herewith present the comparison of monthly electric bills based on schedules in effect January 1, 1937.

For convenience in tabulation, I have called the Northwestern Electric Portland Co. no. 1 and the Portland General Electric Portland Co. no. 2. The percentages are averages of all Portland bills against similar bills in Tacoma. Schedule designations are given in order to enable anyone to check the bill totals.

Residential electric bills, comparison of Portland and Tacoma

Community and company	Lighting and small appliances				Large appliances
	Minimum bill	15 kw.-hrs.	25 kw.-hrs.	40 kw.-hrs.	100 kw.-hrs.	250 kw.-hrs.	500 kw.-hrs.
Portland company no. 1	$1.00	$1.00	$1.38	$1.95	$3.39	$6.09	$8.09
Portland company no. 2	1.00	1.00	1.38	1.95	3.39	6.09	8.09
Tacoma	.50	.68	1.13	1.52	2.12	3.62	6.12
Percentage above Tacoma	100	47	22	28	60	68	32

In Portland, the many small, minimum bill, residential users pay 100 percent more than in Tacoma. The average residential user pays 60 percent more in Portland than in Tacoma, and cooking consumers 68 percent more. The Portland residential bills quoted will also provide an index to the rural overcharge throughout Oregon.

To add scenery, and to "cover up", the Portland consumers are now receiving little colored propaganda riders on their electric bills, decorated at times with pictures of "Skeezix" and the "fire boys" playing with "water." No doubt the cartoonist for "Pepco" was not familiar with the "electric water" disclosures here in Washington between 1928 and 1930. If the people of Portland knew the true facts, "Pepco" cartoonists would have to call out the fire brigade. I have seen funnies with the slogan, "Electricity is cheap", used where the average residential rate is near 6 cents compared with Tacoma's 2 cents. The employment of cartoonists for electric propaganda has now become the new style. Where the pocketbook is concerned, a cartoon on a light bill should not have much effect.

COMMERCIAL LIGHT

The Portland companies charge the store owners, and various types of commercial users of light, 45 to 54 percent more than in Tacoma. Here is the comparison:

Commercial light bills—Comparison of Portland and Tacoma

Company and community	Billing demands (kw.-d.) and monthly consumption (kw.-hrs.)					Company schedule designation
	0.75 kw.-d. (50 kw.-hrs.)	1.50 kw.-d. (150 kw.-hrs.)	3.0 kw.-d. (375 kw.-hrs.)	6.0 kw.-d. (750 kw.-hrs.)	12.0 kw.-d. (1,500 kw.-hrs.)
Portland no. 1	$2.61	$7.84	$17.34	$32.30	$60.80	L-1L
Portland no. 2	2.61	7.84	17.34	32.30	60.80	L-1L
Tacoma	1.75	5.25	11.25	22.50	42.00	C-L
Percentage above Tacoma	49	49	54	45	45

COMMERCIAL POWER

The average intermediate Portland power user, or manufacturer, pays in round numbers about 100 percent more than in Tacoma. Here are the bill comparisons:

Commercial power bills—Comparison of Tacoma and Portland

Community and company	Schedule designation	Billing demands (kw.-d.) and monthly consumption (kw.-hrs.)
		1.5 kw.-d. (150 kw.-hrs.)	3.0 kw.-d. (375 kw.-hrs.)	6.0 kw.-d. (750 kw.-hrs.)	12.0 kw.-d. (1,500 kw.-hrs.)	30.0 kw.-d. (6,000 kw.-hrs.)
Portland no. 1	P-44	$6.00	$13.12	$25.25	$43.50
Do	P-40	7.12	15.32	29.69	52.72	$142.50
Do	P-45					104.00
Do	P-30		7.50	12.25	23.00	68.50

Do	P-1	7.12	15.32	29.69	52.72	142.50
Do	P-5	6.00	13.12	25.25	43.50
Do	P-6					104.00
Tacoma	E-1	2.33	5.03	10.05	20.10	61.50
Percentage above Tacoma		182	104	123	96	71

Schedules for commercial cooking, under this class, reduce the average percentage differences, but for sake of uniformity I have averaged the bills, thus giving the Portland companies the advantage in the comparison. The multischedule system used in Portland constitutes another joker. Most power users have a small amount of light current registered on their meters; therefore, technically the fair comparison would be between Portland schedule P-40 and Tacoma schedule E-1. Using this as a basis of comparison, and a consumption of 750 kilowatt-hours, the Portland user pays $29.69, whereas in Tacoma the users pay $10.05. This is a spread of practically 200 percent. This demonstrates that Portland power rates are abnormally high. Those who advocate industry for Portland should study the above table. Multischedules promote discrimination. Tacoma avoids this by using a one-power schedule.

INDUSTRIAL POWER

The following table shows how much higher Portland rates are for this class of service. Here again multischedules are used in Portland.

This is another table for the advocates of new industries in Portland to study. The conclusion is that for this class of service Portland industries pay practically double what they would in Tacoma.

SIGNIFICANCE OF TACOMA COMPARISONS

The electric-rate payers in the States of Oregon and Washington, outside of Tacoma, pay out a total of $21,000,000 a year above what they would pay if they had Tacoma rates. This amount would pay for the complete power development at Bonneville in 2 years and 1 month. The present Bonneville installation is only 20 percent of the full complete capacity, as there are only 2 of the 10 units installed. Those who talk with awe of the enormous development at Bonneville might measure its cost by the excess charges of the private utilities. These overcharges in the State of Oregon amount annually to $7,758,000, and Portland pays about $5,000,000 of that.

My esteemed colleague from Mississippi made another substantial contribution to the cause of cheap power when he gave the House of Representatives his table, by States, of the excess charges collected by private power companies. His table shows that private power companies in the entire United States collect annually $1,320,000,000 in excess charges over the Tacoma rates. This annual amount, plus 3 percent interest, would wipe out the national debt in about 21 years.

These figures and facts point out the national importance of the electric rate problem. They demonstrate that Portland rates are not low, and that they should not be used as a national yardstick as some have suggested.

SOURCE OF PROPAGANDA

The dissemination of the untruths regarding electrical rates and the connected untruths regarding the electric business continue to pour forth from the same source; namely, the group behind the old National Electric Light Association. That association was the propaganda and political agency of the private electric industry operating in the period from 1919 to 1932. Its records show a fund of $400,000 taken from the rate payers to influence one session of Congress. This association manufactured the catchy words used to deceive the people in the period preceding our great disastrous depression. It also prepared textbooks for our schools, owned professors, and bought off people from speaking against private power, and even went so far as to purchase newspapers outright. They had many different agencies, under many names, preparing this propaganda. One of the widely used sources, the Industrial News Bureau, operates from Portland, Oreg., and its canned editorials span the country. I have recently seen in Illinois papers stories covering Bonneville which were completely manipulated untruths to deceive the people. An article in Collier's for June 19, the current year, is a case in point. It is full of factual errors, but is especially harmful in two statements—that the taxpayers are bearing the burden of Bonneville and that there is no market for its power. Both of these affirmations are entirely untrue, as the power project will be amortized, for principal and interest, and Oregon and Washington are ready to consume the power as fast as the marketing organization can be set up.

In the predepression period the promoter of these canned statements of misinformation was the malodorous National Electric Light Association, which, as I have previously stated, was the political and propaganda agency of the private electrical industry. The powers behind the throne in the organization were the Insull and the Electric Bond & Share groups. The leaders of the latter are still the dominating factors in the Pacific Northwest, and are, apparently, leading the fight against adequate Bonneville legislation by the Congress. The Insull flight to Greece, and the previous exposures of the Federal Trade Commission and the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee covering the activities of this association and its allies, shocked the American people, but the exposures were not sufficiently broadcast to shock the people into action they should have taken.

The holding-company law finally passed Congress, but every man who participated in that legislation knows something of the high-pressure methods and of the scandalous lobby maintained by rate payers' funds. It seems to me extremely important that every person who pays electric-light bills should know what percentage of those bills constitutes corruption funds.

A series of addresses delivered in 1933 by Charles M. Thomas, former utility commissioner of Oregon, paints the picture of propaganda and slush funds as disclosed by the actual records then available in the State's official files. Everyone who pays electric-light bills in Oregon should have a propaganda sticker giving some of these facts, so they will know what makes bills high. Mr. Thomas unearthed political expenditures to the amount of $686,773.74 for three companies operating in Oregon. These expenditures had nothing whatsoever to do with the operation of the utility plants and should not have been allowed to be charged into the light bills of customers, as they were. They range from $3,000 for a gift of an art museum to 199½ memberships in chambers of commerce. These utility chamber of commerce memberships are very potent factors in keeping electric rates high and in influencing legislation. When a telegram comes to a Congressman from a chamber of commerce in a large city he can usually count on the fact that it represents an overwhelming preponderance of utility seats. The Washington expenses of an Oregon lobbyist against the holding-company bill were printed in the local press as charges against the light payers' bills. Possibly some of my colleagues ate the dinners and drank the wine for which Oregon rate payers footed the bills.

Reverting again to the propaganda agencies, and picking up my story, I reach the period when it became necessary, in changing policies, to change the name of the propaganda organization in order to overcome the bad reputation of the old association.

The private power industry used as a smoke screen the name of the honored American inventor, Thomas A. Edison, and the propaganda organization became the Edison Electric Institute. Its officers are feted by local clubs and chambers of commerce, which undoubtedly assume that they are honoring the heads of a scientific organization. I noticed recently that the pronouncements of one of these head officials were quoted at length in the Portland papers as if he were some sort of a scientific wizard or oracle. Incidentally, he told them all about Bonneville. It seems a shame that their unholy practices should be continued under the Edison name. The camouflage is so perfect and the manipulations are so hidden that the American people are again deceived. Many intelligent but innocent editors have accepted these canned stories. False issues are being raised to becloud true issues.

INTERLOCKED CONNECTIONS

There are two electric distributing companies operating in Portland, Oreg., namely, the Northwestern Electric, a part of the Bond & Share system, and the "Pepco", or Portland Electric Power Co., which was, before its recent receivership, a part of the ill-famed Central Public Service Corporation, which I will hereafter cover. These two companies are supposed to compete, but the indirect interlocking is shown by the fact that all the rate schedules in the different classes of service produce the same bill to any consumer, in spite of the fact that one company has a stated book value of $644 per meter and the other has a book value of $452. Both companies have steam and hydro generation. The Bond & Share property has 82 percent of its installed generating capacity in steam, whereas the other company has 45 percent of its capacity in steam. I cite these facts at this time to refute the argument frequently made that difference in generating costs accounts for difference in electric rates. Will they charge more or less if they get power from Bonneville?

Electric Bond & Share, through its subsidiary, the American Power & Light, owns not only the Northwestern Electric, but the Portland Gas & Coke Co. serving Portland. In addition, this same group owns the Pacific Power & Light Co., Inland Power & Light, Northwest Gas & Electric Equipment, Washington Water Power Co., Chelan Electric Co., Spokane United Railways and Spokane Central Heating Co. Electric Bond & Share has a strangle hold on the Pacific Northwest. Let me point out here, for future reference, that this same company owns the Nebraska Power Co. and the Texas Power & Light Co. and its subordinate organizations. In addition, the Electric Bond & Share is interlocked with the great Niagara-Hudson system serving with affiliates, 90 percent of the multitudinous consumers in New York State. Niagara-Hudson owns the Niagara Falls Power Co. This interlocking also extends to the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation which is now fighting the T. V. A. on many fronts. Keep these connections in mind and you will see that the great attack, both fair and foul, against all the public yardstick plants originates from the same source. The methods are the same, and the control is vested in Wall Street. I ran across this trail in my fight to save Bonneville from monopoly. I have since investigated and developed this evidence, which I hope to present at some future date. I am warranted to state at this time that there is a nefarious national movement to kill all public power so that the American people cannot be educated as to the true manufacturing, transmission, and distribution costs of electricity. The method originated years ago at Niagara continued at Muscle Shoals and Boulder, was tried a few months ago on the Brazos, in Texas, and now shows up at Bonneville.

The Power Trust knows that if the people get a taste of cheap electricity their game is over. Therefore they are using every known means to block and delay the yardstick until the end of this administration, hoping for a change of policy at some future date. The Power Trust also knows that they have no chance before the people. This explains their great recent interest in the Federal judgeships.

This great game of delay, with expected benefits resulting therefrom explains the Power Trust moves in connection with the yardstick development of Bonneville. Their purpose is first to delay enactment of a satisfactory law in Congress and then to complete the job in the courts, which they are striving, sometimes successfully, to remake in their own image.

Why does the Portland General Electric Co. have a high bottom step in its domestic rate? Obviously so as not to compete with the Bond & Share Portland gas property. Is not the effect on the public the same as if all the Portland companies were directly interlocked?

SENATE INVESTIGATION

The investigation of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee in 1930 brought out that the Bond & Share group attempted to dictate the policies of a great Federal Bureau here in Washington charged with protecting the public's interest in power. This investigation also brought out the fact that the influence of this Wall Street group in the Hoover administration was great enough to cause to be withdrawn after delivery a power report submitted to a committee of the House of Representatives and to substitute therefor a deleted copy. The deleted portions of this report, as shown by the evidence, covered the fictitious write-up of the private utilities in this Bond & Share interlocked group. The committee evidence shows that the Niagara Co. had a write-up of many millions, which is a vital item, because, under the Federal Water Power Act of 1920, the Federal or State Government is given the right to acquire the power 50 years after the license was issued. They will then have to pay for the write-up as well as for the original gift to the power company. This evidence also showed that the deleted write-up of the Washington Water Power Co., one of the Electric Bond & Share companies operating in the Northwest, was 78 percent of the amount actually paid for the properties. This Washington Water Power Co. supplies Spokane and vicinity with electric energy. From my study of this record and the evidence before these hearings I am convinced that the full story has yet to be told, and should be made public.

The Niagara scandal has been kicking around Washington since shortly after the turn of the century. I have heard of it in a sort of hazy way ever since I have been in Washington. When the Niagara history of manipulation is opened up a great national scandal will ensue. The Federal Power Commission has had since 1920 to comply with the law in regard to Niagara. Why are the facts still hidden?

PORTLAND ELECTRIC CAPITALIZATION

The Bond and Share's Portland electric property carries on its books a value of $27,444,472 as of January 1, 1936, for plant property and franchise. Oregon's outstanding public-utility commissioner, Charles M. Thomas, fixed a valuation on this property of $9,412,827. This company still has the effrontery openly to carry in its balance sheet $10,000,000 of water. There is more besides, not easily discernible. This balance-sheet fraud is reported under oath annually to the Oregon State utility authorities, and is also reported to its stockholders who seem blind to it, though it is a major item affecting their electric rates and is not honest investment. The activity of the Portland Chamber of Commerce in the Bonneville matter is explained by this company's memberships in its organization, reported in 1931 to the State commission as 103 seats, at a cost to the rate payer of $8,644. In addition, there are numerous expenditures on personal expense accounts which are also passed on to the rate payers.

The other Portland company, namely, the Portland General Electric, carries a book value of $62,131,840. I have not had access to the valuation of this property. Its book value per consumer is $453, whereas the Thomas valuation of the other Portland utility gave a figure of $220 per consumer. This difference is an index to the inflated value of "Pepco." The write-up of this company has been publicly covered by Mr. Thomas. The financial activities and practices of the group formerly controlling this company have been admirably stated by him, and I quote:

> These pillagers on the high seas of frenzied finance, under the guise of honest men, entered this community, armed with every conceivable instrument of modern, immoral, financial method including depraved and poisonous tongues, pursued their activities and practices with a brutality and heartlessness that would have shamed the buccaneers of former days, and left in their wake thousands of honest and trusting investors in poverty and distress, a saddened and broken-hearted group of employees, and an operating company crippled and bathing its near-mortal wounds over the loss of sixteen and one-half millions of dollars—

Paid for by the public.

Even at this late date such piratical practices are going on in different sections of the country through the illicit use of stock proxies, contrary to the blue-sky laws. These plunderers of finance are still extracting their unconscionable tolls in security write-downs at the expense of the innocent public, while keeping their rates at high levels. The propaganda and corruption of the old National Electric Light Association still continues. The matter of rates is vital, but behind these ill-gotten charges lies the deep-seated cancer resulting from the strangle hold which these monopolistic interests have on public bodies. You can accept this as axiomatic: High electric rates and public perversion go hand in hand.

TACOMA'S PUBLIC POWER

The Tacoma public power system is one of the outstanding examples of safe, sound, and prudent electric operation.

For many years it has provided the lowest electric rates in the country. It can in no sense be called an experiment, as it has stood the test of time. For the last 16 years its rates have been the same. In addition to providing such low rates, this plant has paid taxes just as a private company would have paid them. Its outstanding indebtedness is now only 30 percent of its plant's cash net value. Each year the plant has available over 52 percent of its gross revenue for bond redemption and depreciation. In a few years, when the bonds are completely paid off, it can cut its rates almost in half. Tacoma's present rates are therefore a fair standard for comparison.

REDEMPTION OF INDEBTEDNESS

Redemption of indebtedness is now, and has since the beginning, been the very heart of the electric-rate controversy. Publicly owned power reduces its debt regularly and substantially. Private power does not. On the contrary, private power writes up its debt and adds water to the securities sold to the unsuspecting public. The financing methods of private power are a crime against present and future generations. Private power, with its heavy debt burden, plus lobbying and other illicit expenses, cannot compete on a fair basis with debt-redeeming public power. Therefore, foul methods are substituted for fair competition. The foul methods are propaganda, misrepresentation, deceit, intrigue, espionage, sabotage, legal evasion, ruthless stock and proxy campaigns, contracts in restraint of trade, defiance of law, exclusive dealing contracts, obstructing and time-killing litigation, diversion of trusteed funds, discrimination, contemptuous treatment of stockholders, reprehensible lobbying practices, control of judges, and modernized methods of common bribery. The Senate banking investigation has exposed some of the immoral existing financial practices as well as the weaknesses of men. "It has furnished positive proof of the refinement and perfection of the methods developed to still the conscience into accepting bribes."

DOES PORTLAND WANT LOWER RATES?

In the light of these facts, can the people of Portland neglect their opportunity at this time? If informed, will they not refuse to renew the franchise of the Northwestern Electric Co. and take over the property, as they have a right to do, under a fair valuation, which can be easily ascertained without a tax levy. They can then buy their power from the Government-owned power plant at Bonneville and distribute it to the users in Portland at rates that can bear a fair comparison to the Tacoma rates. Are the citizens of Portland unmindful of the fact that in 7 or 8 years Tacoma can pay off its entire debt, now amounting to $7,000,000, and purchase its necessary increase in electric energy from Bonneville? This will save investment in generating capacity and will permit the further sale of electric energy for home and industrial use. Can the citizens of Portland contemplate a future badly handicapped by the enterprising sister cities in the North?

Frightened investors in private utilities fear that public ownership may wipe out the valuation of their holdings. No honest investment can be adversely effected by public ownership, as the public groups buy out the private companies at fair valuations. Many of those investors have already been cheated shamefully, as I pointed out in my former speech. Widows, orphans, trust funds, ruined through the manipulations of holding companies which acquired the "Pepco." These people who were victims instead of investors should welcome the sale of these properties to the public at an honest value. I have no desire to injure any going business nor to raid private utilities.

We hear leaders in Portland state that the people do not want public power. Have the leaders given to the people the facts covering electric charges? I judge not. I can hardly believe that Portland home owners choose to continue to pay a 60-percent overcharge for electricity. I can hardly believe that Portland's store owners want to contribute a 50-percent overcharge to the manipulators of Wall Street, to be used in detestable practices. I can hardly believe that Portland's businessmen want to see their city shackled with a power rate practically double that of Tacoma.

REMEDIES

If this American democracy, which I have often called the greatest governmental experiment in all history, is to survive, this sinister utility influence in our political and economic life must be removed. How can this be accomplished? In my opinion, the only method is for our civic leaders, regardless of political or other affiliations, to go to the people with the truth for truth's sake. This is what moves me to efforts to enlist interest in public ownership. I have been in public life long enough not to expect perfection, but my experience has been practical enough to satisfy me that progress can be made.

The public power development through such great projects as Boulder Dam, Bonneville Dam, and the T. V. A. are very specially the objects of attack by these organizations. The only remedy seems to be to teach people not to believe anything put out by such institutions. In every town, public ownership advocates should warn the people against their canned editorials and news articles. I have enlarged upon this in my speech of March 4, 1937, on Public Ownership. It is my strong conviction that we cannot have satisfactory government until the public owns every service which is essential to the well-being and comfort of homes. Such services are natural monopolies. We cannot have, in any city, two companies providing water or sewers, and should not have two companies providing telephone service or lights or power. It is the chief business of government to provide these essentials, and not to farm them out for profit.

Gouverneur Morris, during our early national struggles, predicted that Necker, one of the great pre-Revolution statesmen of France, would not succeed in his move for a French constitutional government. As Morris pointed out, Necker's constitutional principles were founded on the selfishness of limited groups, who at that time in France were the landowners. Morris stated that any constitution, to succeed and live, must basically provide for the certain happiness and prosperity of all the people. The whoopee days of the 1920's produced the struggle with which we are now confronted, and it can be briefly called the greed of limited groups against the happiness and prosperity of all the people. Morris' predictions were accurate in his day; they are accurate today. Through the ages, true principles are never outmoded nor outdated. The great laws governing external and human nature are as lasting as time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FORD of California). The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] has expired.

Under special order of the House the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

AN EXTRAORDINARY SESSION OF CONGRESS

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a few observations on the impending picnic parliament whose sessions are to begin tomorrow on the adjournment of this body. I do not know just what will take place in that ancient isle, but, as a humble member of the minority, I have a request to make of my dear friends on the majority side. We are all tired, distressed, puzzled, and we feel the best thing that could happen for this country would be for us to go home a while and give the country a rest. [Applause.]

Now, tomorrow, just after you have been ushered into the presence, and the President has sprinkled a little "goofer" and rubbed on a little of the balm of Gilead, and after Mr. Farley has taken you off into the bushes and asked you how much of the $5,000,000,000 he and Hopkins have to spend for relief you would like to have spent in your district next summer, then go to Mr. Roosevelt and tell him that we want to go home; that we are in the position of the colored fellow who had a very heavyweight sweetheart. He went to see her one night and, as usual, she sat upon his knee. Time passed and he grew very weary and very silent. She said, "Rastus, is you tired?" He said, "No, Mandy, I ain't tired now. I was tired about an hour ago, but now I'se just numb." That is our condition at the present time. [Laughter and applause.]

In order to pay the proper regard to this great parliamentary situation I want to gaze upon this paper as I go along.

Extraordinary sessions of the Congress are not unknown. They are unusual. But the extraordinary session of the Congress to be convened by the President, his Cabinet, and his bureaucratic chiefs of staff on Jefferson Island June 25, 26, and 27 is the most extraordinary session of the Congress ever held. The event will stand as unique in the annals of the Nation.

This session will be extraordinary—without parallel in our history—for many reasons.

It is to convene on Jefferson Island in the Chesapeake Bay far from the Capitol, the legal meeting place of the national legislative body.

This extraordinary session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, not only will be held on an island, far removed from the Capitol, but the island will be closely guarded. Press correspondents are to be excluded. The people of the Nation are not to be permitted to know what or how decisions vitally affecting the destiny of this country and its citizens are reached in those 3 days in that secluded place.

I understand that there is going around among the newspaper fraternity a rumor that the real reason for this Jefferson Island meeting is that President Roosevelt has decided to join the Democratic Party, and because of the great distinction of the candidate it was thought best by the leaders to conduct the initiation ceremony in camera. I offer this on the authority of a brilliant member of the fourth estate and I hope it is true.

The minority Members of the Congress, albeit they are the duly elected representatives of their constituents and duly accredited Members of the Congress, are, in the typical Rooseveltian manner, swept aside from any part in these deliberations or decisions. It is to be strictly a one-party session of a one-party Government directed by a one-party Chief Executive.

The able and distinguished feminine members of both Cabinet and Congress are to be excluded, albeit they are duly accredited members of the Democratic Party, duly elected representatives of their constituents, and duly accredited Members of the Seventy-fifth Congress. The women of this country will not soon forget this affront to the members of their sex arising out of this extraordinary session. Just why the feminine democratic Members of the Senate and House are summarily excluded is not explained. The President is quoted as saying that the session is going to be conducted "in a spirit of good clean fun." Perhaps the fun is going to be so good and so clean it would be a bit too much for feminine Members of the Congress; and then, again perhaps there may be other reasons.

This extraordinary session of the Congress has been described by the press as a "peace parley." What delightful humor. Many Members of this Congress have not known a moment's peace since this island session was announced. A lot of them will not know a moment's peace after it is ended. And what really will transpire on the island will be anything but peaceful.

According to the press, the Members of the Congress who are permitted to sit in this extraordinary session—407 of them—are each one to have an opportunity for a personal discussion with the President about the 10 or more fundamental problems and pending acts, which acts will, if passed, change the whole structure and character of this Government, to say nothing of a host of other problems seemingly less important only because of the ultra importance of the 10 major ones. These problems are:

The President's court-packing proposal.

Relief.

Balancing of the Budget.

Ever-Normal Granary Act, popularly described as the "Little A. A. A."

The Wage-Hour Act, known as the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1937.

The President's revolutionary Government reorganization scheme.

The Roosevelt power-zoning plan.

The menacing strike situation.

Amendments to the Wagner (lop-sided) Labor Act.

Amendments to the Social Security Act.

This extraordinary session is to be split into 3 days, with one-third of the one-party Congress in session each day. The Members are to reach Jefferson Island at 10 o'clock in the morning and will leave at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, according to press reports of White House arrangements.

Under that schedule the sessions will last 5 hours each of the 3 days, if nobody, including the President, stops for lunch. In the 3 days the sessions will have consumed 15 hours. If 407 Members attend, each individual Member will have the rare privilege of a long, personal discussion of these 10 major problems with the President for exactly two and one-fifth minutes. Fifteen hours equal 900 minutes, to be divided between 407 Members.

Within this time limit the Members of the Congress will have an unprecedented opportunity for a personal discussion with the President concerning each of these 10 major problems for exactly 13⅓ seconds. Under those conditions every Member should be able to come back to the Capitol and decide accurately and vote with great intelligence on every one of these major problems before adjournment.

If, instead of the individual-interview mode, the group method is adopted, the President and the Congress in each daily session of 5 hours can give exactly 30 minutes to a profound and exhaustive discussion of each of these 10 major problems confronting the national legislative body. That, of course, should suffice to produce wise and flawless legislation which the Supreme Court—even the present one—would find constitutional without batting an eye.

The whole proceeding from this standpoint is utterly absurd, and to pretend otherwise is to insult the intelligence of the people of the Nation.

It is time for somebody to be honest about this extraordinary proceeding.

The truth is this Nation is about to witness an amazing exhibition of its destinies being decided in secret on a guarded island in the middle of Chesapeake Bay by means of an intensive application of the Presidential powers of patronage, punishment, and persuasion to its duly elected representatives in the constitutional law-making branch of the Government.

However sincere they may think otherwise, those 407 Members of this Congress—or those of them who go—are not going to that island to talk to the President. They are going to that island to be talked to by the President—and the people of this country may well believe they are going to be "talked to."

The real reason the feminine members of the Cabinet and the Congress are to be excluded is that they probably would be disturbed and embarassed if they heard some of the "good clean fun" that is going to ensue when Mr. Roosevelt gets his adroit and forceful vocabulary into efficient action on some of the Members of the Congress who have been constrained thus far to follow their conscience and high patriotic principles instead of supinely submitting to a power-loving President.

This Nation is going to witness the unprecedented and startling spectacle of its destiny being decided, its most fundamental acts prelegislated, its most menacing problems settled in secret under the pretense of a so-called peace-party meeting in "a spirit of good clean fun." But it will be anything but funny for the courageous and conscientious Members of this Congress who have thus far refused to bow their necks to the yoke of the Rooseveltian will.

The truth of this whole queer proceeding is that the Members of this Congress are going to be subjected to the utter limit of the tremendous Presidential powers of patronage, punishment, and persuasion. Some will be warned that they will meet political death if they do not yield to Mr. Roosevelt's desires. They will be made to walk the plank of Mr. Roosevelt's relentless resentment and plunge into the deep waters of political oblivion if they do not surrender their principles to the Presidential will to power. They are to submit or submerge, if the anonymous New Dealers can bring it about.

The mechanism of the party disciplinary machinery is oiled and ready. The purge is prepared. Political "liquidation" will await those who finally refuse to obey the Rooseveltian manifestos—if Mr. Roosevelt can manage it.

What a singular commentary on our boasted free constitutional democracy is this secret, guarded, island extraordinary session of the Seventy-fifth Congress!

How far it is from the Government of Thomas Jefferson, for whom the island is named, the Thomas Jefferson who said:

> A single consolidated government would become the most corrupt government on earth. * * * What has destroyed the liberty and the rights of man in every government which has existed under the sun? The generalizing and concentrating of all cares into one body * * *.
> It is not by consolidation or concentration of powers, but by their distribution that good government is effected. (Quoted from a letter by Jefferson to Nathaniel Macon in 1821.)

How far is this extraordinary session of the Seventy-fifth Congress from the Government of Grover Cleveland, who said:

> Another Centennial Day will come, and millions yet unborn will inquire concerning our stewardship and the safety of their Constitution. God grant that they may find it unimpaired; and as we rejoice in the patriotism and devotion of those who preceded us, may they rejoice in our fidelity and in our jealous love for constitutional liberty.

How far is this extraordinary session of the Seventy-fifth Congress from the Government of Woodrow Wilson, who believed in "open covenants openly arrived at", and who declared:

> There are illegitimate means by which the President may influence the action of Congress. He may bargain with Members not only with regard to appointments but also with regard to legislative measures. He may use his local patronage to assist Members to get or retain their seats. * * *

Such things are not only deeply immoral, they are destructive of the fundamental understandings of a constitutional government itself. They are sure, moreover, in a country of free public opinion, to bring their own punishment, to destroy both the fame and the power of the man who dares practice them. (Constitutional Government in the United States, by Woodrow Wilson, p. 71, ed. 1917.)

How far is this extraordinary session of the Seventy-fifth Congress from the government of that great Democratic statesman, Thomas R. Marshall, who declared:

I did not believe then, nor do I now believe that an Executive has any right to use his power, his prestige, and his right of appointment to overawe or coerce the legislative department of the Government. I believed then, as I now believe, that it was the duty of the Executive as much as the duty of the humblest citizen to obey the judgment of the courts, although he might believe them to be erroneous and usurpatious of power, trusting to argument and education to rectify the wrong. (Recollections, by Thomas R. Marshall, ed. 1925.)

In the name of free government, what right and what purpose have President Roosevelt and his anonymous New Deal planners to conduct the Government in any such manner?

One of two situations will result from this extraordinary extraordinary session of the Congress:

If Mr. Roosevelt and his Cabinet and his bureaucratic chieftains can intimidate, cajole, and persuade with patronage enough Members of this Congress to assure him passage of his revolutionary acts, regardless of the desires of the American people, he will keep this Congress in session and pass those revolutionary acts and thus take unto himself all these "new instruments of power." In that case this Congress will have completed its abdication; it will have violated its oath; it will have become less than a rubber stamp; and the people will rise up sooner or later to hurl it out of power. If Mr. Roosevelt and his cohorts cannot frighten, cajole, or persuade with patronage enough of the Members to assure passage of his revolutionary acts, he will have his leaders adjourn this Congress and send us home while he goes on the radio during the interim to endeavor to persuade and to purchase the acquiescence of the people by means of their own money.

That is what is behind this extraordinary session of the Seventy-fifth Congress to be held through 3 June days on the water-bound, closely guarded purlieus of Jefferson Island.

As an arrogant display by a President, his Cabinet, and his bureaucracy of sheer contempt for constitutional methods and processes of government this spectacle will go down in the annals of our Nation as utterly unique.

But there is another, and by no means remote, possibility in this picture.

Franklin D. Roosevelt may, and I believe he will, find himself faced in that session on Jefferson Island by a group of courageous and determined men moved by a high motive to preserve the destiny of this Nation under our free constitutional democracy, cost them what it may. Mr. Roosevelt may find that his frown has lost its fearsomeness for them. He may find that his panegyrics have lost their potency. He may learn, what I believe to be a fact, that the majority of the men of this Congress are moved in this crisis by high principles of patriotism and genuine political integrity far above the urge of pseudo "party loyalty." In short, Mr. Roosevelt may meet the surprise of his political life. He may find that instead of sternly dressing down the recalcitrants he will be told by these men of high courage that he must return to the principles of Washington, of Jefferson, of Cleveland, of Wilson, of Marshall—of the Constitution—and that quickly. Mr. Roosevelt may return from Jefferson Island on the night of June 25 a sadder and wiser President, followed by a rebuked and discomfited Cabinet and a chastened, if not repentant, group of bureaucratic chieftains.

It will be an illuminating thing for the people for this Nation to mark the changed demeanor and the altered attitudes of Members of this Congress after that secret 3-day session of the Congress on the island in the Chesapeake Bay. And the people will be watching.

And now a prophecy: There remains in the great heart of America today a reverence for constitutional democracy, a love of personal liberty, a respect for political courage, an admiration for sincerity, a resentment of falsity and misrepresentation, a contempt for hypocrisy that will sustain those who adhere to high principles in this crisis and that will, sooner or later, overwhelm with a wave of national indignation and repudiation those who dare to try what is to be attempted in 3 June days on Jefferson Island in Chesapeake Bay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much interest to the advice of the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], and I want to add a few words of advice also to my Democratic friends who are about to attend the Boy Scout jamboree on Jefferson Island, where they will consider the state of the Union, the general welfare, and, more important still, get their instructions from the President as to what legislation must be put through before the Congress will be permitted to adjourn.

I propose, therefore, to read for the benefit of these Democrats and New Dealers an editorial from a well-known Democratic paper edited by Mr. Stern, an ardent admirer of the President—the Philadelphia Record of June 22, 1937. The editorial is entitled "Stop Buying Gold" and is addressed to the Congress of the United States.

To the Congress of the United States.

GENTLEMEN:

America must stop buying gold.

We must stop now.

However serious the consequences of such a step today, the consequences will be vastly more serious the longer we postpone our return to economic sanity.

The curse of Midas is upon us. It will remain upon us as long as we continue to pay $35 an ounce for gold which costs $20 an ounce to mine.

Uncle Sam has the golden calf by the tail—and is afraid to let go.

We are curtailing relief—and buying gold. Farmers' interest rates are jacked up; housing, flood control, and a dozen other national needs are parked by the wayside—while we buy still more gold.

We even find the paradoxical absurdity of the Treasury working to increase interest rates on the money it is borrowing to buy more gold for which it has no use.

When the American people wake up to the magnitude of the folly which has been practiced at their expense, gentlemen of the Congress, their response at the polls will be decisive and overwhelming.

The time to act is immediately.

The Record urges upon you a complete investigation of the monetary policies of this Government.

The investigation should begin at this session. Next session may be too late.

Let the House of Representatives move at once for hearings on the four monetary bills before it—the Patman bill, the Dies bill, the Thomas bill, and the Goldsborough bill. Those hearings will provide a forum through which the people can be given the whole story of the money changers' return to the temple and their mismanagement of our monetary system.

Let the Senate launch an immediate inquiry into the gold purchase policy so that our people may know the origin of this folly, what it has cost them so far, and how much it will cost them in the future if a halt is not called.

This investigation should be exhaustive. The members of the Federal Reserve Board and the officials of the Treasury should be called upon to explain—if they can—the confusion of monetary policy which is begetting increasing uneasiness and fear.

No one need be an expert to see when a ship's rudder is out of commission.

Millions of Americans are worried, gentlemen of the Congress. They are worried as they have not been worried since Herbert Hoover was in the White House and the same indecision, irresolution, and indirection ran rife in Congress.

Our people want to know why the Treasury is gambling with our whole recovery to bury gold.

I submit this is one of the questions the Democrats might ask of the President of the United States on Jefferson Island, "Just why are we continuing to buy gold which we do not need at $35 an ounce from the British Empire and from Soviet Russia, at two or three times the cost of production, and then, when we get it, bury it in the ground in the State of Kentucky?"

The editorial continues:

The only excuse the Treasury can give is that it is buying gold to stabilize foreign exchange.

If the Treasury did not continue to exchange dollar credits for gold, the dollar would go up, the pound and franc would go down. This would make it easier for the rest of the world to sell us its goods, harder for them to buy from us. It would greatly increase the balance of trade against us. In other words, the only way the rest of the world could get dollars would be for wealth other than gold.

This is a consummation devoutly to be wished. We'd be better off with British tin than British gold; Russian manganese than Russian gold; Dutch rubber than Dutch gold.

We realize that a sudden embargo on the import of gold would have a paralyzing effect upon foreign trade and finance—unless the blow were tempered by some constructive Government program.

One such program could well be the Government's purchase of nondeteriorating basic commodities in lieu of gold until such time as foreign exchange had gradually adjusted itself to our refusal to absorb more gold.

The Government could agree to "sterilize" these basic commodities until such time as they could be absorbed without deranging the domestic market. Certainly it would be wiser for the Government to borrow money to buy mercury, tin, antimony, and other intrinsically valuable commodities rather than gold, which has no value except as it can be exchanged for other commodities.

Europe is exchanging its gold not only for our commodities but for huge credits, "hot foreign funds", with which it can command our resources for a future war.

All right, then! If we don't want to stop this absurd process too suddenly, let us demand in exchange for our wealth, commodities which we know we will need if we have to expand our national defense.

But at all costs let us have a definite program, announced by the Treasury now or developed by Congress as a result of this inquiry.

To persist further in this gold gorging is to invite national disaster. To the Senate and to the House of Representatives we say:

Act before it is too late!

The people are fearful. Every ship brings in more gold—which must be paid for by their labor.

Gentlemen of the Congress, honor your constitutional mandate to control the monetary system of this Nation! Give the people the truth!

Rescue this Nation from its gold folly.

This is one question I think all the American people would like answered, how to rescue the Nation from its gold folly. It is up to you tomorrow, when you will have the opportunity, to get the answer from the Chief. Let the people have the truth about this fantastic, costly, and ruinous gold-purchasing policy.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I am sorry I cannot yield in the brief time I have left.

It is the duty of Republican Members of Congress representing the opposition party to protest vigorously against the continuation of the ruinous gold-purchasing policy of the administration that has increased the deficit over $1,000,000,000 in the last 6 months and added an additional billion to the rapidly mounting national debt which has now reached the huge total of $36,400,000,000.

The fantastic and grossly stupid policy of buying foreign gold at $35 an ounce, which costs from 10 to 20 dollars to mine, is sheer economic and financial insanity, and if continued will lead to the bankruptcy of the Treasury of the United States. Since the advent of the Roosevelt Administration we have bought five billions of dollars of gold from foreign nations, largely from the British Empire and Soviet Russia, which nations have failed to pay their war debts to us, and $1,035,877,687 within 6 months.

It is estimated that the profit to the British Empire and its subjects from our gold purchases has amounted to half a billion dollars a year for the past 3 years. Our taxpayers and the Treasury are being drained to pay for gold at twice and three times the cost of production from South Africa and Soviet Russia, which gold is buried in the ground in Kentucky where it draws no interest and serves no useful purpose as it cannot feed the hungry or provide employment for American citizens looking for jobs.

The American people have been turned into a milch cow by the blundering gold-purchasing policy of the New Deal, to be exploited and mulcted by every foreign nation. Our gold policy is bound to be a disastrous boomerang, first because we have already looted the Treasury to buy and hoard foreign gold, and, second, because the value of gold or any currency thrives on use and faith but shrivels in disuse and fear.

The administration must proceed immediately to get definite assurance from the British Empire, which produces 60 percent of all the gold in the world, of the exchangeability of gold at $35 an ounce, or we must stop buying gold except for commodities, services, or debts. In case of failure to obtain the cooperation of the British Empire to stabilize gold at $35 an ounce, we must stop buying now and not 6 months from now, after we have consumed another billion dollars of the people's money to buy foreign gold for which we have no use and is of no benefit to the American people. We have accumulated as of June 22, 1937, according to the daily statement of the United States Treasury, $12,267,232,905, approximately 52 percent of all the gold in the world—and for what benefit to us or to mankind?

Whatever the consequences may be of stopping further foreign gold purchases, it will be much more serious the longer we delay taking steps to prevent the depletion of the Treasury, the continuation of an unbalanced Budget, and the exhaustion of our financial resources.

The payment of over $1,000,000,000 out of the general funds of the Treasury in the last 6 months has made it necessary to increase the rates of interest to farmers, reduce appropriations for flood control and highways, and cause the hasty burial of low-cost housing and other needed legislation in the interest of the people.

The administration has no financial or fiscal policy except to pile deficit on deficit, debt upon debt, and to issue billions and still more billions of tax-exempt securities, always adding to the rapidly mounting national debt and heading toward inflation, repudiation, bankruptcy, and financial chaos.

We demand a halt on the spending and squandering of the administration, and a complete investigation and overhauling of the finances of the Government, in order to restore confidence by establishing a balanced Budget and putting our financial house in order.

We must take immediate steps to put an end to our stupendous gold folly, which invites national disaster, and to government by confusion and financial imbecility. Once the American people realize that they are being robbed and plundered for the benefits of foreign debt-defaulting nations and awake to the magnitude of the folly of the $12,000,000,000 gold fiasco that has been practiced at their expense, the response will be overwhelming and decisive. [Applause.]

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate on important public business.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING] is absent, having been called back to his State on important official matters.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

REPORT FILED BY COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS DURING THE RECESS

Under authority of the order of the Senate of the 24th instant, Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, reported it on the 26th instant with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 817) thereon.

AMENDMENT OF ADJUSTED COMPENSATION PAYMENT ACT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936, to provide for the escheat to the United States of certain amounts, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

RESOLUTION OF MUNICIPAL COUNCIL OF ST. THOMAS AND ST. JOHN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a resolution adopted by the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, Virgin Islands, for the purchase by E. Beresford Cancryn of a certain strip of land belonging to the municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, west of property no. 17, Murphy Gade, Queens Quarter, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

TRANSFER OF UNUSED LIGHTHOUSE SITES ON ISLAND OF MAUI, TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to transfer two unused lighthouse sites in Kahului town site, island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, in exchange for two plots of land located in the same town site and now occupied for lighthouse purposes under permission from the respective owners, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RELIEF OF VIRGIL D. ALDEN AND OTHERS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant Administrator of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of Virgil D. Alden and others in connection with their transfer of headquarters, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate joint resolution relative to memoralizing the President and the Congress of the United States to protect the rights of the State of California to its tidelands and the coastal area lying seaward of the State of California

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States and in the Senate thereof by the Honorable Senator NYE, S. 2164, which bill declares land under the territorial waters of continental United States to be a part of the public domain, and for other purposes; and

Whereas said bill provides that all submerged lands are declared to be a portion of the public domain and are withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, entry, occupation, encroachment, or acquisition; and

Whereas the bill further provides that wherever the submerged lands shall be found to contain oil or petroleum deposits they shall be reserved to and included in a naval reserve; and

Whereas the State of California, since its admission to the Union in 1850, has had as its westerly boundary the Pacific Ocean and has, during all of those years succeeding 1850, exercised ownership, dominion, jurisdiction, and control over the seacoast lying on the westerly side of the State of California, including the tide and submerged lands; and

Whereas the State of California has at various times granted to cities and counties and to port boards of commissioners jurisdiction over certain tide and submerged lands of the State of California, and said cities and counties and port boards have spent many millions of dollars in the occupation, control, management, improvement, and preservation and defense of the seacoast and tide and submerged lands of the State of California; and

Whereas the State of California, as a body politic, has spent a great deal of money belonging to its citizens in the protection of the seacoast and the acquisition and purchase of many strips of land along the seacoast and has established thereon parks and playgrounds for the benefit not only of the people of the State but of the multitude of visitors and tourists who annually enter the borders of the State of California and frequent its seashore; and

Whereas by virtue of the development of said seacoast and the tide and submerged lands, many businesses, occupations, and trades are conducted and practiced and engaged in along said shore line, under lease, option, or agreement with the State of California, and great industrial plants depending upon products as produced from said tide and submerged lands of the State have become a portion and part of the business life of the seacoast of California; and

Whereas said businesses as conducted, both on shore as a result of the products produced from the tide and submerged lands and the product itself as produced from the same, do make up and form a large taxable portion of the tax-bearing burden of the respective counties facing on the tidal section of the State of California; and

Whereas there exists offshore and in the tide and submerged lands of the State of California various places where deposits of mineral and oil and gas are known to exist and other places where they may exist, and some of which are now being developed to the benefit of the State of California and to the citizens of this State, and are contributing largely to the support of various portions of the State and providing to the respective counties and cities in the immediate vicinity an asset for the purpose of local taxation and improvement of conditions in the respective localities; and

Whereas the adoption of S. 2164 would cast a cloud upon the right, title, and interest of the State of California in and to its tide and submerged lands and prevent private capital or public institutions or corporations from expending money or developing the tideland or submerged area of the State of California and discourage commerce and navigation and industry from investing money or expending effort in the development of the same; and

Whereas there have been developed many great harbors on the coast, one at San Francisco by the State of California, one at Los Angeles by the city of Los Angeles, one in Oakland by the board of port commissioners of Oakland, and many others up and down the coast line of the State, the title to which property would be clouded by the passage of said bill: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That this Legislature of the State of California in regular session assembled, urgently petitions and requests that S. 2164 be defeated; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor be and is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the Vice President thereof, to each Senator and Representative in Congress of the State of California, to Hon. Senator NYE, and to the respective members of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by members of the Farmers Union at Sheyenne, N. Dak., protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 25) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of (Mrs.) Cecil Sloane, of Brooklyn, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the "additional protocol between American Republics relative to nonintervention", negotiated at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace, held at Buenos Aires, December 1–23, 1936, particularly in regard to its application to Peru, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Washington County Unit Farmers Union of Oregon, assembled at Hillsboro, Oreg., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the submission of a proposed declaration of war to a referendum of the people, except in case of invasion, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from J. L. Smith, Jr., of Circleville, Ohio, praying for the construction and completion of flood-control projects on the Scioto and Sandusky Rivers, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the San Francisco (Calif.) Save W. P. A. Committee, favoring the carrying out of the W. P. A. program without cuts in the personnel, and also the making of additional appropriation for the W. P. A. when present appropriations are exhausted, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the abolition of the Federal Reserve System as at present constituted, and also praying that Congress exercise its constitutional right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2482) to provide for the assignment of officers of the Navy for duty under the Department of Commerce and appointment to positions therein, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 819) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) granting the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 820) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 2403) to prohibit the transportation of certain persons in interstate or foreign commerce during labor controversies, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 821) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6496) granting the consent of Congress to the State of Montana, or the counties of Roosevelt, Richland, and McCone, singly or jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Missouri River, at or near Poplar, Mont., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 822) thereon.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2381) to amend the Criminal Code by providing punishment for impersonation of officers and employees of Government-owned and Government-controlled corporations, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 823) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2387) to authorize certain officers and employees of Federal penal and correctional institutions to administer oaths, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 824) thereon.

Mr. GUFFEY, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6737) to amend the stamp provisions of the Bottling in Bond Act, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 825) thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2386) to give precedence to certain proceedings to which the United States is a party, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 826) thereon.

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6208) to amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of West Virginia", approved June 22, 1936, by changing the times provided therein for holding the United States district court at various places now fixed by law in the State of West Virginia, reported it without amendment.

TAXES TO EFFECTUATE RAILROAD EMPLOYEES' RETIREMENT LEGISLATION

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent to report favorably from the Committee on Finance, without amendment, House bill 7589, and to submit a report (No. 818) thereon. I propose to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. CLARK. I may say, Mr. President, that this is a companion bill to the railroad employees' pension bill which passed the House and the Senate and was signed by the President last week. The bill for the consideration of which I now ask unanimous consent provides for the taxes to effectuate the act referred to. In view of the importance of the matter, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may the title of the bill be read? I did not hear the first remarks of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. May I explain again to the Senator from Oregon that this is a companion bill to the railroad employees' pension bill passed by both Houses of Congress last week. This is the bill providing taxes to effectuate the purposes of that act, and, in view of the early approach of the 1st of July and the fact that a great many accounting matters will naturally take up the time to the 1st of July, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I should not want to grant permission at this time. Let the bill go over until after the call of the calendar, and I will look into it in the meantime.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask if the bill has passed the House?

Mr. CLARK. It has passed the House and been reported to the Senate without amendment from the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Missouri that I have discussed with several Republican members of the Finance Committee the proposal made by him, and have no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill which he desires to have considered.

Mr. CLARK. Then, Mr. President, I renew my request for unanimous consent that the Senate consider House bill 7589 at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7589) to levy an excise tax upon carriers and certain other employers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. That as used in this act—

(a) The term "employer" means any carrier (as defined in subsection (i) of this section), and any company which is directly or indirectly owned or controlled by one or more such carriers or under common control therewith, and which operates any equipment or facility or performs any service (except trucking service, casual service, and the casual operation of equipment or facilities) in connection with the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, refrigeration or icing, storage, or handling of property transported by railroad, and any receiver, trustee, or other individual or body, judicial or otherwise, when in the possession of the property or operating all or any part of the business of any such employer: Provided, however, That the term "employer" shall not include any street, interurban, or suburban electric railway, unless such railway is operating as a part of a general steam-railroad system of transportation, but shall not exclude any part of the general steam-railroad system of transportation now or hereafter operated by any other motive power. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized and directed upon request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or upon complaint of any party interested, to determine after hearing whether any line operated by electric power falls within the terms of this proviso. The term "employer" shall also include railroad associations, traffic associations, tariff bureaus, demurrage bureaus, weighing and inspection bureaus, collection agencies and other associations, bureaus, agencies, or organizations controlled and maintained wholly or principally by two or more employers as hereinbefore defined and engaged in the performance of services in connection with or incidental to railroad transportation; and railway labor organizations, national in scope, which have been or may be organized in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, as amended, and their State and National legislative committees and their general committees and their insurance departments and their local lodges and divisions, established pursuant to the constitution and bylaws of such organizations.

(b) The term "employee" means any person in the service of one or more employers for compensation: Provided, however, That the term "employee" shall include an employee of a local lodge or division defined as an employer in subsection (a) only if he was in the service of or in the employment relation to a carrier on or after August 29, 1935. An individual is in the employment relation to a carrier if he is on furlough, subject to call for service within or outside the United States and ready and willing to serve, or on leave of absence, or absent on account of sickness or disability; all in accordance with the established rules and practices in effect on the carrier: Provided further, That an individual shall not be deemed to have been on August 29, 1935, in the employment relation to a carrier not conducting the principal part of its business in the United States unless during the last pay-roll period in which he rendered service to it prior to said date, he rendered service to it in the United States.

(c) The term "employee representative" means any officer or official representative of a railway labor organization other than a labor organization included in the term "employer" as defined in section 1 (a), who before or after the enactment hereof was in the service of an employer as defined in section 1 (a) and who is duly authorized and designated to represent employees in accordance with the Railway Labor Act, as amended, and any individual who is regularly assigned to or regularly employed by such officer or official representative in connection with the duties of his office.

(d) An individual is in the service of an employer whether his service is rendered within or without the United States if he is subject to the continuing authority of the employer to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of his service, which service he renders for compensation: Provided, however, That an individual shall be deemed to be in the service of an employer not conducting the principal part of its business in the United States only when he is rendering service to it in the United States.

(e) The term "compensation" means any form of money remuneration earned by an individual for services rendered as an employee to one or more employers, or as an employee representative, including remuneration paid for time lost as an employee, but remuneration paid for time lost shall be deemed earned in the month in which such time is lost. Such term does not include tips, or the voluntary payment by an employer, without deduction from the remuneration of the employee, of the tax imposed on such employee by section 2 of this act. Compensation which is earned during the period for which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall require a return of taxes hereunder to be made and which is payable during the calendar month following such period shall be deemed to have been paid during such period only.

(f) The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense means the States, Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

(g) The term "company" includes corporations, associations, and joint-stock companies.

(h) The term "employee" includes an officer of an employer.

(i) The term "carrier" means an express company, sleeping-car company, or carrier by railroad, subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act.

(j) The term "person" means an individual, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, or a corporation.

INCOME TAX ON EMPLOYEES

SEC. 2. (a) In addition to other taxes, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the income of every employee a tax equal to the following percentages of so much of the compensation of such employee as is not in excess of $300 for any calendar month, earned by him after December 31, 1936—

1. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939, the rate shall be 2¼ percent;

2. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1940, 1941, and 1942, the rate shall be 3 percent;

3. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1943, 1944, and 1945, the rate shall be 3¼ percent;

4. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1946, 1947, and 1948, the rate shall be 3½ percent;

5. With respect to compensation earned after December 31, 1948, the rate shall be 3¾ percent;

(b) The tax imposed by this section shall be collected by the employer of the taxpayer by deducting the amount of the tax from the compensation of the employee as and when paid. If an employee is paid compensation by more than one employer with respect to any calendar month, then, under regulations made under this act, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe the proportion of the tax to be deducted by each employer from the compensation paid by him to the employee with respect to such month. Every employer required under this subsection to deduct the tax is hereby made liable for the payment of such tax and shall not be liable to any person for the amount of any such payment.

(c) If more or less than the correct amount of tax imposed by this section is paid with respect to any compensation payment, then, under regulations made under this act by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, proper adjustments, with respect both to the tax and the amount to be deducted, shall be made, without interest, in connection with subsequent compensation payments to the same employee by the same employer.

EXCISE TAX ON EMPLOYERS

SEC. 3. (a) In addition to other taxes, every employer shall pay an excise tax, with respect to having individuals in his employ, equal to the following percentages of so much of the compensation as is not in excess of $300 for any calendar month paid by him to any employee for services rendered to him after December 31, 1936: Provided, however, That if an employee is paid compensation by more than one employer with respect to any such calendar month, the tax imposed by this section shall apply to not more than $300 of the aggregate compensation paid to said employee by all said employers with respect to such calendar month, and each such employer shall be liable for that proportion of the tax with respect to such compensation which his payment to the employee with respect to such calendar month bears to the aggregate compensation paid to such employee by all employers with respect to such calendar month:

1. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered during the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939, the rate shall be 2¾ percent;

2. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered during the calendar years 1940, 1941, and 1942, the rate shall be 3 percent;

3. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered during the calendar years 1943, 1944, and 1945, the rate shall be 3¼ percent;

4. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered during the calendar years 1946, 1947, and 1948, the rate shall be 3½ percent;

5. With respect to compensation paid to employees for services rendered after December 31, 1948, the rate shall be 3¾ percent.

(b) If more or less than the correct amount of the tax imposed by this section is paid with respect to any compensation payment then, under regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, proper adjustments with respect to the tax shall be made, without interest, in connection with subsequent excise-tax payments made by the same employer.

REFUNDS AND DEFICIENCIES

SEC. 4. If more or less than the correct amount of the tax imposed by section 2 (a) or 3 (a) of this act is paid or deducted with respect to any compensation payment and the overpayment or underpayment of the tax cannot be adjusted under section 2 (c) or 3 (b), the amount of the overpayment shall be refunded, or the amount of the underpayment shall be collected in such manner and at such times (subject to the statute of limitations properly applicable thereto) as may be prescribed by regulations under this act as made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

INCOME TAX ON EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVES

SEC. 5. In addition to other taxes, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the income of each employee representative a tax equal to the following percentages of so much of the compensation of such employee representative as is not in excess of $300 for any calendar month, earned by him after December 31, 1936:

1. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939, the rate shall be 5½ percent;

2. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1940, 1941, and 1942, the rate shall be 6 percent;

3. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1943, 1944, and 1945, the rate shall be 6½ percent;

4. With respect to compensation earned during the calendar years 1946, 1947, and 1948, the rate shall be 7 percent;

5. With respect to compensation earned after December 31, 1948, the rate shall be 7½ percent.

The compensation of an employee representative for the purpose of ascertaining the tax thereon shall be determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if the employee organization by which such employee representative is employed were an employer as defined in section 1 (a) of this act.

DEDUCTIBILITY FROM INCOME TAX

SEC. 6. For the purposes of the income tax imposed by title I of the Revenue Act of 1936 or by any act of Congress in substitution therefor, the taxes imposed by sections 2 and 5 of this act shall not be allowed as a deduction to the taxpayer in computing his net income.

COLLECTION AND PAYMENT OF TAXES

SEC. 7. (a) The taxes imposed by this act shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as internal-revenue collections.

(b) The taxes imposed by this act shall be collected and paid quarterly or at such other times and in such manner and under such conditions not inconsistent with this act as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. If a tax imposed by this act is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax (except in the case of adjustments made in accordance with the provisions of this act) interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date the tax became due until paid.

(c) All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to any tax imposed by section 600 or section 800 of the Revenue Act of 1926, and the provisions of section 607 of the Revenue Act of 1934, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by this act.

(d) In the payment of any tax under this act, a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

(e) Any tax paid under this act by a taxpayer with respect to any period with respect to which he is not liable to tax under this act shall be credited against the tax, if any, imposed by title VIII of the Social Security Act upon such taxpayer, and the balance, if any, shall be refunded. Any tax paid under title VIII of the Social Security Act by a taxpayer with respect to any period with respect to which he is not liable to tax under such title VIII shall be credited against the tax, if any, imposed by this act upon such taxpayer, and the balance, if any, shall be refunded.

COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 8. The several district courts of the United States and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, respectively, shall have jurisdiction to entertain an application by the Attorney General on behalf of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to compel an employee or other person residing within the jurisdiction of the court or an employer subject to service of process within its jurisdiction to comply with any obligations imposed on such employee, employer, or other person under the provisions of this act. The jurisdiction herein specifically conferred upon such Federal courts shall not be held exclusive of any jurisdiction otherwise possessed by such courts to entertain actions at law or suits in equity in aid of the enforcement of rights or obligations arising under the provisions of this act.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 9. (a) The term "employment", as defined in subsection (b) of section 811 of title VIII of the Social Security Act, shall not include service performed by an individual as an employee as defined in section 1 (b) or service performed as an employee representative as defined in section 1 (c).

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury at intervals of not longer than 3 years shall estimate the reduction in the amount of taxes collected under title VIII of the Social Security Act by reason of the operation of subsection (a) of this section and shall include such estimate in his annual report.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 10. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

REPEAL OF PRIOR TAX ACT

SEC. 11. The provisions of this act are in substitution for the provisions of the act of August 29, 1935, as amended, entitled "An act to levy an excise tax upon carriers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes", which is hereby repealed. All moneys payable as and for taxes under such act of August 29, 1935, and not heretofore paid shall cease to be payable and all proceedings pending for the recovery of any such moneys shall be terminated. All sums paid into the Treasury of the United States as and for taxes under such act shall be refunded, except so much of the sums so paid as and for taxes with respect to compensation earned after December 31, 1936, as equals the taxes imposed by this act with respect to the same persons and the same period, and the sums not required to be so refunded shall be retained in the Treasury of the United States and credited on taxes due and payable under this act. All sums deducted by employers from the compensation of employees as and for taxes under such act of August 29, 1935, which have not been paid into the Treasury of the United States shall be repaid by such employers to such employees, except so much of the sums so deducted as and for taxes in respect of compensation earned after December 31, 1936, as equals the taxes imposed and required to be deducted by this act with respect to the same persons and the same period, and the sums not required to be so repaid shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and thereupon shall be credited on taxes due and payable under this act. No interest shall be allowed or paid with respect to any sum refunded, credited, or repaid under the provisions of this section.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 12. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make and publish such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this act.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 13. This act may be cited as the "Carriers' Taxing Act of 1937."

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 2719) granting a pension and hospitalization benefits to William T. Dugard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

A bill (S. 2720) to authorize the coinage of silver coins in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the admission of the State of Nevada to the Union; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill proposing certain amendments to the so-called Wagner Labor Act. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I ask also that it be printed in the RECORD, together with a statement in connection with it and concerning it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Michigan, and the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2712) to amend the National Labor Relations Act, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) so much of the first paragraph of section 1 of the National Labor Relations Act as reads "The denial by employers of the right of employees to organize and the refusal by employers to accept the procedure of collective bargaining lead to strikes and other forms of industrial unrest" is amended to read as follows: "The denial of or interference with the right of employees to organize, the refusal to accept the procedure of collective bargaining, and the failure to perform the terms and conditions of collective bargaining agreements lead to strikes and other forms of industrial unrest."

(b) Section 1 of such act is further amended by inserting after the third paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

"The protection of the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively requires (1) that the right to organize be exercised voluntarily and free from coercion, (2) that collective bargaining be conducted by employers and responsible representatives of the employees' own choosing, and (3) that employers and employees perform faithfully the terms and conditions of agreements reached through the practice and procedure of collective bargaining."

SEC. 2. Paragraph (1) of section 2 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by inserting after the word "associations" a comma and the word "organizations."

SEC. 3. Section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by inserting after "SEC. 8.", at the beginning thereof, the letter "(a)" and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) It shall be an unfair labor practice—

"(1) For any person to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7, or to induce or compel or attempt to induce or compel any employee to become a member of any labor organization by means of any threat, intimidation, or coercion or by the use of physical violence.

"(2) For any person, in connection with any labor dispute, to interfere with the free exercise or enjoyment by any person of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or to damage or destroy the property of any person, or to violate or interfere with the exercise of any person's rights in real or personal property.

"(3) For any labor organization to make any compulsory assessment or require any contribution for political purposes.

"(4) For persons other than citizens of the United States to act as officers, agents, or representatives of labor organizations.

"(5) For any person to engage in any strike unless such strike has been voted for by a majority of the employees in the appropriate unit for collective bargaining.

"(6) For any person to engage in any strike for the purpose of inducing or forcing any person to violate any contract or any law of a State or the United States.

"(7) For any person to refuse to sign a written contract or agreement embodying the terms and conditions of any agreement between an employer and employees, or their representatives, reached as the result of collective bargaining, or to violate the provisions of any such written contract or agreement."

SEC. 4. Subsection (c) of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "Investigations may be undertaken and secret ballots taken under this section upon the request of any employees, employer, or labor organization directly interested in any such question or controversy; and a new investigation may be undertaken and a new ballot taken upon such request at any time after the expiration of any agreement or contract entered into by an employer and representatives of employees certified under this act or at any time when the Board finds that any provision of any such contract has been violated by any of the parties thereto. When a request has been properly made for an investigation under this section, no person shall be recognized as a representative of the employees affected until the name of such person shall have been certified as such representative by the Board."

SEC. 5. The third sentence of subsection (c) of section 10 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended to read as follows: "If upon all the testimony taken the Board shall be of the opinion that any person named in the complaint has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, then the Board shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such unfair labor practice; and if in the opinion of the Board it is necessary in order to effectuate the policies of this act, such order may also (1) require reinstatement of employees with or without back pay; (2) suspend any right or privilege conferred upon such person by this act; and (3) in the case of a labor organization, suspend or prohibit the collection or receipt of any dues, assessment, contribution, or other thing of value."

SEC. 6. Section 13 of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "except as specifically provided herein."

The statement presented by Mr. VANDENBERG in reference to the bill is as follows:

Senator VANDENBERG announced that early this week he will offer in the Senate a series of amendments to the Wagner Labor Act. "Their purpose", he declared, "is to broaden the act and to invite an immediate study of an expanded formula under which legalized collective bargaining may hope to produce more effective industrial peace and prosperity for labor and everyone else. I believe that it is only in some such fashion that legitimate labor organization can protect itself against excesses from within and reprisals from without. There are four parties to a collective-bargaining dispute under the Wagner Act—the majority employees, the minority employees, the employer, the public. The Wagner Act ably defends the first. It seems to me that it now must acknowledge the rights of the other three."

The first amendment to be proposed by Senator VANDENBERG will permit employers to share with employees the right to demand elections to determine majority rule for the purpose of establishing collective-bargaining representatives. It would also permit subsequent repeated elections at the option of either party upon the termination or the breach of a contract. It would further require that an election must precede the assertion of any right of representation, thus obviating contentious claims respecting authority to act.

The second amendment would require the agreement resulting voluntarily from collective bargaining to be set down in writing. But it would require that strikes may be called only by a majority vote of all employees; and it would provide that any breach of contract, if not corrected upon order of the National Labor Relations Board, shall suspend the right of representation and shall subject the offender to whatever penalty the National Labor Relations Board may direct in respect to the exercise of further rights under the Wagner Act—plus the right of the Board to stop the collection of union dues and assessments during the period of discipline.

The third amendment would parallel the existing "fair practice code" for employers with a "fair practice code" for labor, including the following: (a) Prohibit compulsory political assessments upon union members; (b) require that all officers, agents, and representatives of unions shall be citizens of the United States; (c) make it "unfair practice", subject to the regular penalties of the Wagner Act "to force any worker to join any labor organization by means of threats, intimidation, coercion, or physical violence" or "to injure, damage, or destroy the property of any person or to violate any person's rights in real or personal property" or "to strike for the purpose of coercing or forcing any person to violate any contract or the laws of any State or of the United States."

"I make no claim that this is a final answer to some of the difficulties that have arisen—difficulties which responsible labor leaders are eager to join in helping correct", said Senator VANDENBERG. "I may have gone too far in some directions and not far enough in others. But I am convinced that the best welfare of labor itself requires a conclusive study of this whole related problem. Moderate protections now may prevent radical restraints later. I believe that labor is entitled to a constantly broadening share in the fruits of its own production. But it will do labor no good to achieve these benefits if a profitable economy and an orderly society in which to enjoy them is jeopardized or destroyed. In the final analysis, the public interest is paramount. There can be but one sovereignty—the sovereignty of government—in this country."

AMENDMENT TO THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ROBINSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

"Division of Venereal Diseases: For the maintenance and expenses of the Division of Venereal Diseases, established by sections 3 and 4, chapter 15, of the act approved July 9, 1918 (U. S. C., title 42, secs. 24 and 25), including additional facilities and services at the Hot Springs Transient Medical Center and Infirmary, $189,000, said funds to be disbursed by the United States Public Health Service upon invitation of the public agency owning the physical property. It is further provided that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept title to this property as a part of the Hot Springs National Park."

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. RUSSELL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS ON CALENDAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on Thursday last, the Senate will now proceed to consider unobjected bills on the calendar, which will be stated in their order.

RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills, was announced as first in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

BOARD OF SHORTHAND REPORTING

The bill (S. 1435) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 149, being Senate bill 1435. I do not think there is now any objection to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Arkansas to object.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not now object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas to return to Senate bill 1435 and consider it at this time?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1435) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a National Board of Shorthand Reporting (hereinafter referred to as the Board) to be composed of three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. The members of the Board, with the exception of the members first to be appointed, shall be holders of certificates issued under the provisions of this act. The members first appointed shall be skilled in the art and practice of shorthand reporting and shall have been actively and continuously engaged as professional shorthand reporters within the United States for at least 5 years preceding their appointments. The members shall hold office for a term of 3 years, except that (1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term and (2) the terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of 1 year, one at the end of 2 years, and one at the end of 3 years after such date. The Board shall elect one of its members as chairman and one as secretary-treasurer, who shall hold their respective offices for 1 year. The Board shall make all necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act. Any two members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 2. Any person who has received from the Board a certificate of his qualifications to practice as a shorthand reporter shall be known and styled as a "Federal certified shorthand reporter", and no other person, and no partnership, all of the members of which have not received such certificate, and no corporation shall assume such title or the abbreviation "F. C. S. R.", or any other words, letters, or abbreviations tending to indicate that the person, partnership, or corporation so using the same is a Federal certified shorthand reporter.

SEC. 3. The Board shall grant a certificate as a Federal certified shorthand reporter to any citizen of the United States (a) who is over the age of 21 years, is of good moral character, and is a graduate of a high school or has had an equivalent education; and (b) who has, except as provided in section 5 of this act, successfully passed an examination in shorthand reporting under such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe.

SEC. 4. The Board shall hold regular meetings for the examination of applicants for certificates under this act beginning on the third Monday of June and December of each year, and additional meetings at such times and places as it shall determine but not to exceed once every 3 months. The time and place of holding such examinations shall be advertised in a periodical to be selected by the Board at least 30 days prior to the date of each examination. The Civil Service Commission is authorized to conduct such examinations for the Board.

SEC. 5. The Board may, in its discretion, waive the examination provided for in this act and issue a certificate as a Federal certified shorthand reporter to any person submitting an application within 1 year after the appointment of the members of the Board (a) who possesses the qualifications set out in section 3, (b) who has been actively engaged in the practice of shorthand reporting for more than 5 years next preceding the date of enactment of this act, and (c) who is competent, in the opinion of the Board, to perform the duties of a Federal certified shorthand reporter.

SEC. 6. The Board may revoke any certificate issued under this act for unprofessional conduct or other sufficient cause after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing. Said notice shall state the cause of such contemplated revocation and the time and place of such hearing and shall be mailed to the registered address of the holder of such certificate at least 30 days before such hearing. Each member of the Board shall be empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records concerning any matter within the jurisdiction of the Board.

SEC. 7. Upon the filing of an application for an examination or a certificate under this act, the Board shall charge a fee of $25. Should the applicant fail to pass the required examination he shall be entitled to take subsequent examinations after the expiration of 6 months and within 2 years without the payment of an additional fee.

SEC. 8. Each member of the Board shall receive $25 for each day actually employed in the discharge of his official duties and in addition thereto all necessary expenses incurred by him in executing his functions under this act. The compensation and expenses of the members of the Board and the expenses of the Board that are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act shall be paid from the fees collected under section 7. Provided, That such compensation and expenses shall not exceed the amount so collected as fees.

SEC. 9. On and after July 1, 1937, no person shall be employed for shorthand reporting in the judicial or executive branches or by any independent agency of the Government unless said person is the holder of a certificate provided for in this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the temporary employment of a shorthand reporter not holding a certificate until a reporter holding a certificate shall be available: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any person not employed for the shorthand reporting of such proceedings as are described and defined in section 10 hereof: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to persons regularly employed in any department under provisions of the civil-service laws.

SEC. 10. When used in this act the term "shorthand reporting" means the making, by use of symbols or abbreviations, of a verbatim record of any oral testimony, proceeding, hearing, or trial before a court, commission, independent agency of the Government, master, referee, convention, deliberative assembly, or proceedings of like character.

SEC. 11. If after July 1, 1937, any person shall represent himself as having received a certificate as provided for in this act or shall practice as a Federal certified shorthand reporter without having received such certificate, or after having his certificate revoked shall continue to practice as a Federal certified shorthand reporter, or shall use any title or abbreviation that indicates that the person using the same is a Federal certified shorthand reporter, or shall violate any of the provisions of this act, said person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2106) for the allowances of certain claims not heretofore paid, for indemnity for spoliations by the French, prior to July 31, 1801, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN L. SUMMERS

The bill (H. R. 4679) for the relief of John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department; and Frank White, G. F. Allen, H. T. Tate, and W. O. Woods, former Treasurers of the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSAL OF CERTAIN LANDS OF PANAMA RAILROAD CO.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 41) authorizing the disposal of certain lands held by the Panama Railroad Co. on Manzanillo Island, Republic of Panama, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Panama Railroad Co. be, and is hereby, authorized to sell, and convey in whole or in part, at public or private sale, at not less than the appraised value to be fixed as hereinafter provided, all of its right, title, and interest in and to the lands situated within that portion of Manzanillo Island, Republic of Panama, lying within the area bounded by a line described as follows:

Beginning at the point where the Canal Zone-Republic of Panama (city of Colon) boundary line intersects the western shore line of the arm of Manzanillo Bay known as "Boca Chica" or "Folks River"; thence following the Canal Zone-city of Colon boundary line northerly to Eleventh Street and westerly on Eleventh Street to the center of Front Avenue; thence northerly along the center of Front Avenue and its prolongation to the center of Second Street; thence easterly along the center of Second Street to the center of Melendez Avenue ("G" Street); thence southerly along the center of Melendez Avenue to the center of Seventh Street; thence easterly along the center of Seventh Street to the center of Roosevelt Avenue; thence southerly along the center of Roosevelt Avenue to the center of Ninth Street; thence easterly along the center of Ninth Street to the shore line of Manzanillo Bay; thence southerly along the shore line of Manzanillo Bay to the intersection with the center of Eleventh Street prolonged; thence westerly along the center of Eleventh Street to the center of Melendez Avenue; thence southerly along the center of Melendez Avenue to the center of Sixteenth Street; thence easterly along the center of Sixteenth Street to the shore line of Folks River; thence southerly, westerly, northwesterly, and southerly along the shore line of Folks River to the point of beginning; excepting, however, lot 22, block 26, as shown on Panama Canal drawing 2021–6, and lot 1189, as shown on Panama Canal drawing 7/019, which lie within the said area.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War shall designate a board of three appraisers, who shall appraise the value of each tract or lot within the said area separately, and file the same with the president of the Panama Railroad Co. From time to time, at intervals of not less than 1 year, the Secretary of War, if deemed advisable by him, may, through a similar board, order a reappraisement of the unsold tracts. Such appraisement and any reappraisement shall be open to public inspection.

SEC. 3. The Panama Railroad Co. is also authorized, with the approval of the President of the United States, to convey in whole or in part all its right, title, and interest in and to the said lands, in exchange for a grant by the Republic of Panama to the United States of all the rights, power, and authority within various other areas situated on Manzanillo Island which the United States would possess and exercise if it were the sovereign of the territory included within the said areas, to the entire exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama of any such sovereign rights, power, or authority.

SEC. 4. Any conveyance of any lot or tract by the Panama Railroad Co., as aforesaid, shall be deemed to release any and all reversionary rights of the United States in said property.

SEC. 5. The Panama Railroad Co. shall, on or before August 16, 1966, deposit the net proceeds from sales of the land in question in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

The preamble was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF CANAL ZONE CODE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4597) to amend the Canal Zone Code, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with an amendment, on page 5, after line 19, to insert a new section 10, as follows:

SEC. 10. That section 222 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"222. Carriage by Panama Railroad Co. of marine and fire insurance: The Panama Railroad Co. shall carry no insurance to cover marine or fire losses: Provided, That this section shall not prohibit the company from carrying insurance to cover shipments of its own funds and securities."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 62 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1122), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"62. Offenses in relation to entry or importation of articles or merchandise: Any person who shall—

"(a) Enter or import, or attempt to enter or import, any articles or merchandise into the Canal Zone before the entry or importation of such article or merchandise has been approved by the proper officers of the Canal Zone;

"(b) Pass, or attempt to pass, any false, forged, or fraudulent invoice, bill, or other paper, for the purpose of securing the entry or importation of any articles or merchandise into the Canal Zone in violation of the rules and regulations established under the authority of the next preceding section; or

"(c) Violate any of the rules and regulations established under the authority of the next preceding section;

"Shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment in jail for not more than 30 days, or by both."

SEC. 2. That section 323 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code, relative to the violation of regulations governing roads, highways, and self-propelled vehicles, is amended to read as follows:

"323. Violation of regulations; punishment: Any person who violates any rule or regulation established under the authority of the two next preceding sections shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment in jail for not more than 30 days, or by both."

SEC. 3. That paragraph (a) of section 61 of title 3, Canal Zone Code, is amended to read as follows:

"61. Application for and issuance of license; fee: (a) No marriage shall be celebrated in the Canal Zone unless a license to marry has first been secured from the office of the clerk of the district court in either division. In cases where both parties to a proposed marriage are residents of the Republic of Panama and neither is an American citizen, no license shall issue in the Canal Zone unless the parties have previously obtained a license to marry from the proper authorities in the Republic of Panama. No marriage license shall be issued to a leper except upon a certificate of approval by the chief health officer of the Canal Zone. All licenses when issued shall be accompanied by a marriage certificate to be executed by the person celebrating the marriage."

SEC. 4. That article 3, chapter 39, title 3, Canal Zone Code, relative to loan of money, is amended by adding at the end of said article a new section no. 1270 and reading as follows:

"1270. Interest of judgments: Judgments shall bear interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date of entry thereof."

SEC. 5. That section 1312 of title 3 of the Canal Zone Code is amended by substituting the word "default" for the word "defraud" appearing in the proviso in said section.

SEC. 6. That paragraph (b) of section 182, title 4, Canal Zone Code, relative to process in proceedings for divorce, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Upon application of the plaintiff, accompanied by the affidavit required by subdivision (c), if the summons has not been served as provided in subdivision (a), the court, or the judge thereof, shall enter an order directing service of a summons by publication if it appears to the satisfaction of such court or judge—

"(1) That the defendant cannot be found in the Canal Zone; and

"(2) That a proper cause for divorce is alleged in favor of the plaintiff."

SEC. 7. That article 2, chapter 11, title 5, Canal Zone Code, relative to crimes in relation to motor and other vehicles, is amended by adding at the end of said article a new section no. 514 and reading as follows:

"514. Driving motor vehicle recklessly causing bodily injury: Any person who shall operate a motor vehicle recklessly, thereby causing great bodily injury to the person of another, shall be punishable by imprisonment in jail for not more than 1 year or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by both."

SEC. 8. That section 571 of title 6 of the Canal Zone Code, relative to bail upon being held to answer before information, is amended to read as follows:

"571. Admission to bail in such case: When the defendant has been held to answer upon a preliminary hearing for a public offense, the admission to bail may be by the magistrate by whom he is so held, or by any judge who has power to issue the writ of habeas corpus. The power of the said magistrate to admit to bail in such case shall extend to the time of filing of an information, and the magistrate shall likewise have power either to increase or reduce the amount of such bail in the manner provided in section 582 of this title.

SEC. 9. That section 43 of title 7 of the Canal Zone Code is amended to read as follows:

"43. Public defender: The Governor of the Panama Canal shall appoint a duly qualified member of the bar of the Canal Zone as a public defender, whose duty it shall be to represent, in the district court, any person charged with the commission of a crime within the original jurisdiction of that court who is unable to employ counsel for his defense. The public defender shall receive such compensation, and such of the privileges of a Canal employee, as shall be fixed and granted by the President or by his authority."

SEC. 10. That section 222 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"222. Carriage by Panama Railroad Co. of marine and fire insurance: The Panama Railroad Co. shall carry no insurance to cover marine or fire losses: Provided, That this section shall not prohibit the company from carrying insurance to cover shipments of its own funds and securities."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] give us an explanation of the bill?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the code of laws in existence in the Canal Zone has been found defective in several particulars. There are several different provisions involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was there any objection from any source?

Mr. CLARK. The bill which is recommended by the Canal Zone authorities and approved by the War Department passed the House of Representatives unanimously and has been unanimously approved by the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AIR NAVIGATION IN CANAL ZONE

The bill (H. R. 6144) to amend the Canal Zone Code was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 1 of title 2, Canal Zone Code, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1122), is amended by adding at the end of said chapter a new section no. 14 and reading as follows:

"14. Air navigation: The Government of the United States is hereby declared to possess, to the exclusion of all foreign nations, sovereign rights, power, and authority over the air space above the lands and waters of the Canal Zone. Until Congress shall otherwise provide, the President is authorized to make rules and regulations, and to alter and amend the same from time to time, governing aircraft, air navigation, air-navigation facilities, and aeronautical activities within the Canal Zone. Any person who shall violate any of the rules or regulations issued in pursuance of the authority contained in this section shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment in jail for not more than 1 year, or by both."

SEC. 2. That chapter 3 of title 2, Canal Zone Code, relative to administering oaths and summoning witnesses, is amended by adding at the end of said chapter a new section no 44, and reading as follows:

"44. Administering oaths in inquests and in deportation proceedings: Officers of the Panama Canal designated by the Governor or by his authority to act as coroner and deputy coroners and authorized to hold inquests in the Canal Zone, and officers designated by such authority to conduct hearings in reference to the exclusion and deportation of persons from the Canal Zone, are hereby authorized to administer oaths in the conduct of such proceedings."

SEC. 3. That section 81 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code is amended so as to read as follows:

"81. Appointment, removal, and compensation of necessary persons: All persons, other than the Governor of the Panama Canal, necessary for the care, management, maintenance, sanitation, government, operation, and protection of the Canal and Canal Zone shall—

"(a) Be appointed by the President or by his authority;

"(b) Be removable at the pleasure of the President; and

"(c) Receive such compensation as shall be fixed by the President or by his authority until such time as Congress may by law regulate the same; and such persons shall be employed and shall serve under such conditions of employment, including matters relating to transportation, medical care, quarters, leave and the commutation thereof, and office hours and hours of labor as have been or shall hereafter be prescribed by the President: Provided, however, That salaries or compensation fixed by the President hereunder shall in no instance exceed by more than 25 percent the salary or compensation paid for the same or similar services to persons employed by the Government in continental United States: And provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall affect the application to employees of the Panama Canal of the provisions of section 23 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935 (48 Stat. 522)."

RELIEF OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF PANAMA CANAL

The bill (H. R. 6436) authorizing cash relief for certain employees of the Panama Canal not coming within the provisions of the Canal Zone Retirement Act was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President of the United States, may pay cash relief to such employees of the Panama Canal not coming within the provisions of the Canal Zone Retirement Act as may become unfit for further useful service by reason of mental or physical disability resulting from age or disease, and also to such former employees of the Panama Canal not coming within the provisions of the Canal Zone Retirement Act as have within 3 years prior to the date of enactment of this act been separated from the service because of unfitness for further useful service by reason of such disability: Provided, That such cash relief shall not exceed $1 per month for each year of service of the employee so furnished relief, with a maximum of $25 per month, nor be granted to any employee having less than 10 years' service with the Panama Canal, including any service with the Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

CITIZENSHIP OF CERTAIN PERSONS BORN IN CANAL ZONE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2416) relative to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person born in the Canal Zone on or after February 26, 1904, and whether before or after the effective date of this act, whose father or mother or both at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States, is declared to be a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 2. Any person born in the Republic of Panama on or after February 26, 1904, and whether before or after the effective date of this act, whose father or mother or both at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States employed by the Government of the United States or by the Panama Railroad Co., is declared to be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what change in existing law does the bill propose to make?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, it merely provides that any person born in the Canal Zone after a certain date, whose father or mother or both at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States, shall be declared to be a citizen of the United States. The existing law is changed in that respect as to children born on or after February 26, 1904.

Mr. ROBINSON. How many persons would it add to our citizenship?

Mr. CLARK. I can best answer the Senator by reading from the letter of the Secretary of War set forth in the report, as follows:

The citizenship status of persons born in the Canal Zone has never been defined either by constitution, treaty, or congressional enactment. The resulting questions which have arisen are of considerable importance because there are in the Canal Zone some 3,000 citizens of the United States employed by the Government on the Panama Canal, and some 10,000 citizens of the United States constituting the personnel of the Army and Navy units stationed in the Canal Zone. These classes of persons, with their families, comprise the whole body of American citizens in the Canal Zone with the exception of a negligible number employed by steamship, oil, and cable companies which are fairly closely allied with the Panama Canal enterprise. The population of the Canal Zone, other than citizens of the United States, consists of some 21,000 inhabitants of diverse nationality, many of whom were born in the Canal Zone subsequent to February 26, 1904.

The questions involved are of greater concern to those affected because of the fact that, in a number of cases which is constantly increasing, children born in the Canal Zone of American fathers who are employees of the Government of the United States are themselves reaching maturity, entering the Government service, and becoming the parents of children, without ever having resided elsewhere than in the Canal Zone. One of the most important questions involved, therefore, concerns the citizenship status of children born in the Canal Zone of these second generation citizens of the United States in those cases where a parent capable of transmitting citizenship has not resided in the United States previous to the birth of such a child.

Problems similar to the above have arisen with respect to the status of children born in the hospitals maintained by the Government of the United States in Colon, Republic of Panama. In the latter class of cases the parent is employed in the Government service and works in the Canal Zone. In a number of these cases the parents of the child actually reside in the Canal Zone. The United States Government hospital in which the child is born is adjacent to the Canal Zone but actually within the political jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama.

The draft of bill attached was prepared under the direction of the Governor of the Panama Canal after extensive studies had been made of the subject matter, and it is recommended that this legislation be given favorable consideration.

In other words, as I understand, the hospital to which Government employees in the Canal Zone naturally go, and to which their wives go and in which their children are born, lies outside the jurisdiction of the Canal Zone but in the Republic of Panama. The bill is merely to take care of the citizenship of children so born.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO

The bill (S. 2010) to authorize the appointment of an additional judge for the southern district of Ohio was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President hereby is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one district judge for the southern district of Ohio in addition to those now authorized by law. Said additional judge shall be entitled to receive the same salary payable in the same manner as is now provided for district judges in said district. This additional district judge shall reside within said district and shall be subject to the general provisions of law relating to district judges of the United States.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect immediately upon the approval thereof by the President of the United States.

WARTIME RANK OF RETIRED OFFICERS OF ARMY, NAVY, ETC.

The bill (S. 2279) to amend section 2 of the act entitled "An act to give wartime rank to retired officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and/or Coast Guard of the United States", approved June 21, 1930, so as to prohibit persons who have been subsequently separated from the service under other than honorable conditions from bearing the official title and upon occasions of ceremony wearing the uniform of the highest grade held by them during their war service, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to give wartime rank to retired officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and/or Coast Guard of the United States", approved June 21, 1930 (46 Stat. 793; U. S. C., title 10, sec. 1028–b), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. All persons who have served honorably in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and/or Coast Guard of the United States during war shall, when not in the active military and/or naval service of the United States, be entitled to bear the official title and upon occasions of ceremony, to wear the uniform of the highest grade held by them during their war service: Provided, That their subsequent service and their separation from the service have been honorable and that they have not been sentenced by court martial or by civil authorities to confinement in a State or Federal penitentiary as a result of a conviction for a felony: Provided further, That persons other than regular members thereof shall not bear the official title of any of the above services except as authorized by this or other acts, and anyone who offends against the provisions of this section shall be punished in the same manner and to the same extent as is provided by law for persons who offend against prohibitions of law making it unlawful to wear duly prescribed uniforms of said services or parts thereof."

JAMES PHILIP COYLE

The bill (H. R. 2404) for the relief of James Philip Coyle, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMOTHY JOSEPH M'CARTHY

The bill (H. R. 3002) for the relief of Timothy Joseph McCarthy, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1379) authorizing the Five Civilized Tribes, in suits heretofore filed under their original jurisdictional acts, to present claims to the United States Court of Claims, by amended petitions to conform to the evidence; and authorizing said court to adjudicate such claims upon their merits as though filed within the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, line 3, before the word "suits", to insert "any"; on page 1, line 4, after the words "claims by", to strike out "the Five Civilized Tribes under their respective jurisdictional acts (Cherokee Nation, act approved Mar. 19, 1924, 43 Stat. 27; Seminole Nation, act approved May 20, 1924, 43 Stat. 133; Creek Nation, act approved May 24, 1924, 43 Stat. 139; Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, act approved June 7, 1924, 43 Stat. 537, as amended by joint resolutions approved May 19, 1926, 44 Stat. 568, and Feb. 19, 1929, 45 Stat. 1229)" and to insert "any nation, tribe, or band of Indians"; and, on page 2, line 14, after the words "Indian nations", to insert "tribes, or bands", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any suits heretofore filed in the United States Court of Claims by any nation, tribe, or band of Indians, plaintiffs therein, at any time before the final submission of said suits, shall have the right to amend their petitions to conform to any evidence filed in said suits, whether such amended petitions develop original claims or present new claims based upon said evidence; and jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon said Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statute of limitations, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims which may have been presented by said Indian nations, tribes, or bands in any amended petitions heretofore filed, or which may be filed under the terms of this act; and claims so presented shall be adjudicated by said court upon their merits as though presented by petitions filed within the time limited by said respective original jurisdictional acts, as amended; and any case presenting claims which may have been dismissed upon the ground that new claims were set up by amended petition, after the expiration of the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts, as amended, shall be reinstated and retried by said court on their merits, upon the same pleadings, findings of fact, and under the same law in force when originally tried.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing any nation, tribe, or band of Indians, in suits heretofore filed under their original jurisdictional acts, to present claims to the United States Court of Claims, by amended petitions at any time before final submission of said suits, to conform to the evidence; and authorizing the said court to adjudicate such claims upon their merits as though filed within the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts."

INDIANS OF QUINAIELT RESERVATION, WASH.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1517) authorizing the payment of necessary expenses incurred by certain Indians allotted on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the words "sale of", to strike out "timber on his or her allotment" and insert "his allotment or of timber thereon", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the attorneys of record for those Quinaielt Indians who received their allotments on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington, pursuant to an order of a United States district or appellate court in a case wherein they were named parties plaintiff, the reasonable and fair value of the services rendered and expenses incurred, as heretofore fixed and determined by said Secretary; and the sum of $55,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to make said payments, the amount so paid for the account of each such allottee to be reimbursed to the United States out of any funds now or hereafter accruing to the account of each such Indian allottee from the sale of his allotment or of timber thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the payment of attorney fees contracted to be paid by certain Indians allotted on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington, and for other purposes."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6494) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Snake River between Clarkston, Wash., and Lewiston, Idaho, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISABILITY OR DEATH BENEFITS IN EVENT OF WAR

The bill (S. 2113) to provide benefits on account of disability or death due to service in the armed forces of the United States in the event of war, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan desires an explanation of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, this is a bill which I was instructed to report from the Committee on Military Affairs. Its title discloses its purpose. I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate and particularly to the attention of the Senator from Michigan the fact that the bill was considered by a subcommitee of the Committee on Military Affairs and was later considered by the full committee and reported favorably to this body.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am simply asking the Senator to indicate what the bill provides.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It merely provides benefits for the widows of soldiers of future wars, and likewise compensation to soldiers for services rendered in war, not in excess of compensation being derived by veterans of the World War at the present time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there any recommendation from the War Department or the Veterans' Bureau in connection with the bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, my recollection is that the War Department recommended adversely. The War Department, in addressing the members of the Committee on Military Affairs under date of May 11, 1937, had the following to say to the chairman of the committee:

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Careful consideration has been given to the bill (S. 2113) to provide benefits on account of disability or death due to service in the armed forces of the United States in the event of war, and for other purposes, which you referred to the War Department under date of April 10, 1937, with request for information and the views of the Department relative thereto.

This proposed legislation appears to have reference to laws which are administered primarily, if not entirely, by the Veterans' Administration. The records of the War Department do not include information regarding the subject matter of the bill. This Department therefore feels that, out of deference to the Veterans' Administration, it should refrain from expressing an opinion as to the merits of the measure.

This report was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which advises that there would be no objection to the submission to Congress of the proposed report on S. 2113.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the attitude of the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. REYNOLDS. In view of the fact that the matter is one with which the Veterans' Administration would have to do, the War Department advised that they would not comment further upon the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Veterans' Administration themselves commented on the bill, did they not?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think they did.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What did they say?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand, they did not recommend the bill, nor did the Navy Department.

Mr. REYNOLDS. General Hines commented upon the bill as follows:

This is with further reference to your request of April 10, 1937, for a report on S. 2113, Seventy-fifth Congress, a bill to provide benefits on account of disability or death due to service in the armed forces of the United States in the event of war, and for other purposes, which provides——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I notice that in the report from the Secretary of the Navy it is stated:

However, in the opinion of the Navy Department it would be better to provide benefits based on conditions existing when the future war comes, or, if it is desired to enact such legislation now, to enumerate those it is desired to perpetuate.

I, myself, do not see the necessity at this time of legislating benefits for soldiers in future wars. It seems to me that if we are to take it for granted that a necessity for such legislation will arise, we may well consider the legislation when the necessity does arise; so I think the measure had better go over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, at least we are not going to have a war before we have another call of the calendar; and I suggest that the bill go over until that time, in any event.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

FORT NIAGARA MILITARY RESERVATION, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 3123) to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., portions of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease to Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., a nonprofit membership corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, that portion of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., known as Old Fort Niagara, including all grounds, buildings, and fortifications pertaining thereto which have been restored and rehabilitated by Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., and the United States of America, together with such additional adjacent areas and/or buildings as, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, may be or become necessary for such term or terms and subject to such conditions as, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, shall be advisable: Provided, however, That the consideration for any lease executed pursuant to this act shall be the maintenance by said Old Fort Niagara Association, Inc., of said premises in accordance with the terms of such lease, and every such lease shall be revocable at will by the Secretary of War.

FORT DONELSON NATIONAL MILITARY PARK, TENN.

The bill (S. 2026) to provide for the addition of certain lands to the Fort Donelson National Military Park in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described tracts or parcels of land, lying and being within the seventh civil district of Stewart County, Tenn., are hereby transferred from the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior as additions to the Fort Donelson National Military Park, and shall hereafter be subject to all laws and rules and regulations applicable to said park:

Tract no. 1, a right-of-way, 50 feet wide, lying 25 feet on each side of a center line, beginning at a point in the southerly boundary line of lock D reservation, 734.8 feet from the southwest corner of this reservation; thence south 31°5′ W. 77.1 feet; thence south 86°21′ W. 479.9 feet; thence south 63°53′ W. 262.3 feet; thence south 39°36′ W. 186.7 feet; thence south exactly 40′ E. exactly 194 feet; thence south 30°58′ E. 314.5 feet; thence south 28°15′ E. exactly 85 feet; thence south 28°37′ E. 250.5 feet; thence south 4°6′ E. 261.7 feet; thence south 36°27′ E. 282.3 feet; thence south 23°45′ E. 178.3 feet to center of line of county road, reserving, however, to the War Department the right to the continued use of the road over this tract as a means of access to lock D.

Tract no. 2, beginning at a point in the southern boundary line of lock D reservation 753.5 feet from the southwest corner of this reservation, thence north 74°28′ E. 191.98 feet, thence south 85°12′ E. 52.9 feet, thence south 51°36′ E. 32.9 feet, thence south 9°33′ E. 117.02 feet, thence south 31°3′ W. 69.82 feet, thence north 58°57′ W. 288.08 feet to beginning.

Tract no. 3, beginning at a point in the southern boundary line of lock D reservation, 590 feet from the southwest corner of this reservation, this point being marked by an iron fence post, thence north 58°57′ W. 590 feet along the southern boundary line of lock D reservation, thence north 31°3′ E. 488 feet along the western boundary line of the lock D reservation to low-water mark on bank of Cumberland River, thence along low-water line of Cumberland River in a southeasterly direction 335 feet, thence south 35°5′ W. 123 feet to an iron pin, thence south 55°55′ E. 307.5 feet to an iron pin, thence south 40°5′ W. 310.5 feet to beginning.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, buildings, structures, and other property within a distance of 1 mile from the boundaries of said Fort Donelson National Military Park, as hereby extended, and donations of funds for the purchase or maintenance thereof, the title and evidence of title to lands acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That he may acquire on behalf of the United States out of any donated funds, by purchase at prices deemed by him reasonable or by condemnation, such tracts of land within a distance of 1 mile from the boundaries of the said national military park as may be necessary for the completion thereof. Upon the acquisition of such land the same shall become a part of the Fort Donelson National Military Park and shall be subject to the laws and rules and regulations applicable to said park.

SEC. 3. The administration, protection, and development of the lands hereby authorized to be added to the Fort Donelson National Military Park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN PRODUCTS OF CHILD LABOR

The bill (S. 2226) to regulate interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is an important bill. I do not wish to object to its consideration, but I think the bill should receive more attention than it is possible to give it at this time. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

COMPENSATION OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF CORPORATIONS

The bill (H. R. 6215) to repeal provisions of the income tax requiring lists of compensation paid to officers and employees of corporations was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, has objection been made to the consideration of this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made.

Mr. LONERGAN. By whom, may I ask?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I made the objection. The bill seems to be very important; and I should like to have it go over until the next time the Calendar is called, in any event.

Mr. LONERGAN. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the bill passed the House of Representatives on the 27th of April, and was considered by the Finance Committee and favorably reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt of that, or the bill would not be on the Calendar; but I should like to have the Senator let it go over this time, until I can examine into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JACKSON CASKET & MANUFACTURING CO.

The bill (H. R. 5258) for the relief of the Jackson Casket & Manufacturing Co. was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) notwithstanding the declaration of adjusted declared value in its capital-stock-tax return for the year ending June 30, 1936, the original declared value of the Jackson Casket & Manufacturing Co., of Jackson, Miss., in determining its capital-stock tax under section 105 of the Revenue Act of 1935, as amended, for the year ending June 30, 1937, and subsequent years, shall be a value computed on the basis of $125 per share of its capital stock.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall apply only if the taxpayer within 30 days after the date of the enactment of this act files with the collector of internal revenue for its district a statement under oath, recomputing its original declared value in accordance with the provisions of this act.

ELIMINATION OF OATH ON INCOME-TAX RETURNS

The bill (S. 2473) to provide that individual income-tax returns may be made without the formality of an oath, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] if the intention and purpose of this bill is to permit the filing of unverified income-tax returns.

Mr. WALSH. No. The purpose of the bill is to eliminate the requirement that individual tax returns shall be made under oath. The bill provides that the individual taxpayer will be guilty of perjury, and may be prosecuted for perjury, in case he knowingly makes false statements in the return.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is a well-established principle of law that there can be no perjury where an oath is not administered and violated. To provide that a man shall be guilty of perjury for merely making a statement as to which he is not required to take an oath seems to me, to say the least, a very unusual provision of law. What is the object of it?

Mr. WALSH. I will state to the Senator that such a provision of law has existed for years in the State of Massachusetts in the requirements of taxpayers making out individual tax returns, and prosecutions have been made under it; and this bill follows the provisions of that law. I will also say to the Senator that the Treasury Department report that in several cases they have been unable to prosecute where oaths have been administered, because the oaths were improperly administered, or there was the appearance of authority to administer the oaths where there was not such authority.

I will read a few lines from the Secretary of the Treasury on that point:

The Department has, on several occasions in recent years, considered suggestions that the statutory requirement for making income returns under oath be eliminated and that a statement similar to that now proposed in S. 4257 be substituted therefor. After a careful review of the relevant considerations, I am convinced that the arguments raised against eliminating the oath on income returns are not of sufficient weight to warrant objection on the part of the Department to the purpose of the proposed legislation. The experience of the Department is that there has been a frequent disregard of the prescribed formalities incident to the administering of oaths by notaries public and other persons authorized to administer oaths. As a result much of the solemnity and psychological effect usually attached to the proper administering of an oath is lost. Because of some formal defect in the administering of the oath, the Government, in numerous instances, has been unable to prosecute taxpayers for perjury for false statements made in their income returns.

It will suffice to state, without entering into a detailed discussion of the relative significance, merits, and effect of an oath as compared with a statement made under the penalties of perjury as proposed, that I am of the opinion that such a statesment as is proposed in S. 4257 would discourage the making of dishonest returns at least as effectively as the present requirement of an oath.

Mr. President, this bill, if enacted into law, will remove some delays and inconveniences to income-tax payers and also will aid somewhat the Government in prosecuting taxpayers for false statements in their income-tax returns.

Let me add, further, that the Treasury Department are now contemplating the presentation of a similar bill to apply to statements made by employers and employees under the social security law, because of the numerous complaints which have been made of the inconvenience, expense, and trouble to which employers and employees are put in making out the large number of reports that now have to be made under oath.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill go over today, in order that I may look into it.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 106) to establish the Farmers' Home Corporation, to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, to create a fiscal agent for the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AGREEMENTS UNDER AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS

The bill (S. 2229) to permit Members of Congress to enter into agreements under agricultural programs was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, what is the purpose of this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I introduced the bill at the request of a number of Members of Congress.

Some Members of Congress are engaged in the business of farming. They are unable to enter into the conservation contracts which are expected to be made by farmers generally, because of a provision of the statutes which passed some time ago. Some of them have been embarrassed by being asked by farmers if they had signed the contract and having to reply that they could not do so because the law did not allow them to do so; and they thought no possible harm could come from permitting Members of the Congress to enter into conservation contracts.

It is a matter which I understand is favored by representatives of the Department, although I introduced the bill at the instance of a number of Members of Congress who themselves did not wish to introduce it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over for this call of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MAURICE D. PRYOR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1626) to amend the military record of Maurice D. Pryor, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Maurice D. Pryor (Army serial no. 2884655) shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company A, One Hundred and Forty-fourth Machine Gun Battalion, United States Army, on February 13, 1919: Provided, That no pension, bounty, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this Act, with the exception of that provided in the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended and supplemented: Provided, That the said Maurice D. Pryor makes application for the benefits of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act within 1 year from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Maurice D. Pryor."

PUGET SOUND BRIDGE, WASHINGTON

The bill (H. R. 4711) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Puget Sound at or near a point commonly known as The Narrows, in the State of Washington, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS IN THE PHILIPPINES

The bill (S. 2349) to authorize the administration of oaths by the chief clerk and the assistant chief clerk of the office of United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby conferred upon the chief clerk and the assistant chief clerk, respectively, of the office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands the authority whenever either of them is required or deems it necessary or proper so to do at any place within the territorial limits of the Commonwealth of the Philippines to administer to or take from any person an oath, affirmation, affidavit, or deposition, and to perform any notarial act which any notary public is required or authorized by law to do within the United States or any of its possessions. Every such oath, affirmation, affidavit, deposition, and notarial act administered, sworn, affirmed, taken, had, or done, by or before such chief clerk or assistant chief clerk when certified under their respective hands and accompanied by a certificate attesting the official position of the person certifying as such chief clerk or assistant chief clerk, under the hand and the seal of office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands or of the Acting United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, shall be as valid, and of like force and effect within the United States and its possessions, to all intents and purposes, as if administered, sworn, affirmed, taken, had, or done by or before any other person within the United States or its possessions duly authorized and competent thereto.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall willfully and corruptly misstate, or by any means procure any person to misstate, any material fact or matter in any such oath, affirmation, affidavit, or deposition, or shall forge any of the signatures of the seal hereinbefore mentioned or shall tender in evidence any of the documents heretofore mentioned with a false or counterfeit seal or signature thereto, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, may be charged and tried in any court of the United States or of its possessions, including the Commonwealth of the Philippines, within whose territorial jurisdiction he may be found, and upon conviction of any offense herein described shall be imprisoned for not less than 1 nor more than 3 years and fined in a sum not to exceed $3,000.

SEC. 3. Any document mentioned herein purporting to have subscribed thereto or thereon the signature of the official administering or taking the same in testimony thereof, when accompanied by the above-mentioned certificate of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands or of the Acting United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, shall be admitted in evidence without proof of the genuineness of the signature or seal of any official herein mentioned or of the official position of such official.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF SENIOR CIRCUIT JUDGES

The bill (H. R. 2703) to provide for the representation of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia on the Annual Conference of Senior Circuit Judges was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL SAFETY STANDARDS COMMISSION

T. bill (S. 18) to establish a National Safety Standards Commission to reduce the danger of accidents at highway grade crossings, and drawbridges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Let this bill go over.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I had no objection to this bill in its original form, but it seems to me it has been amended in important respects, and I have had no opportunity to read or to study the amendments. I think other Members on the minority side of the committee have had no opportunity to know what the effect of the amendments would be. I should like to have the bill go over for the time being.

Mr. LONERGAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

INSURANCE AGAINST LOSS OR DAMAGE IN SHIPMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6635) to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That as soon as practicable after the approval of this act the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General shall, jointly, with the approval of the President, prescribe regulations governing the shipment of valuables by the executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, and employees of the United States, with a view to minimizing risks of loss and destruction of, and damage to, such valuables in shipment. After the effective date of such regulations, which shall be not more than 30 days after their issuance, it shall be the duty of every such executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly owned corporation, officer, and employee, and of every person acting for him or it, or at his or its direction, to comply with such regulations in making any shipment of valuables.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000 to be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the replacement of valuables, or the value thereof, lost, destroyed, or damaged in the course of shipment effected pursuant to the regulations prescribed under section 1. There is hereby further authorized to be appropriated annually, beginning with the fiscal year 1939 and ending with the fiscal year 1948, inclusive, the sum of $200,000 for the said purposes, and from time to time such additional sums as may be necessary for the said purposes. There shall be in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund, to be known as "the fund for the payment of Government losses in shipment" (hereinafter referred to as "the fund"), to be constituted of the said sum of $500,000 and the sums hereafter appropriated for the said purposes, together with all recoveries and repayments credited to the fund as hereinafter provided. There is hereby further authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used for the payment of administrative expenses, including personal services, necessary to carry out the provisions of this act for the fiscal year 1938.

SEC. 3. In the event of loss or destruction of, or damage to, valuables of which shipment shall have been made pursuant to the regulations prescribed under section 1, a claim in writing for replacement shall be made upon the Secretary of the Treasury who, if he shall be satisfied that such loss, destruction, or damage has occurred and that shipment was made substantially in accordance with such regulations, shall cause replacement to be made out of the fund through such officers as he may designate. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury that such loss, destruction, or damage has occurred or that such shipment was made substantially in accordance with such regulations shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States: Provided, however, That where the Secretary of the Treasury determines that such replacement can be effected, in whole or in part, without actual or ultimate injury to the United States, by a credit in the accounts of the executive department, independent establishment, agency, officer, employee, or other accountable person making the claim he shall not resort to the fund, except to the extent that such replacement cannot be so effected by such credit, but shall certify such determination to the Comptroller General and, upon receipt of such certification, the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to make such credit in the settlement of accounts in the General Accounting Office: Provided further, That the fund shall not be available with respect to any loss, destruction, or damage affecting valuables of which shipment shall have been made by or on behalf of the Public Debt Service of the Treasury Department, insofar as such loss, destruction, or damage is chargeable against the indefinite appropriation "Expenses of loans, act of September 24, 1917, as amended and extended" (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 31, secs. 760, 761): And provided further, That the fund shall not be available with respect to any loss, destruction, or damage affecting valuables, insofar as such loss, destruction, or damage may be adjusted by the Postmaster General under the provisions of the act of March 17, 1882, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 39, sec. 49); nor shall it be available with respect to any loss, destruction, or damage affecting valuables of which shipment shall have been made at the risk of persons other than the United States, its executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, and employees. All recoveries and repayments on account of loss, destruction, or damage to valuables of which replacement shall have been made out of the fund shall be credited to it and shall be available for the purposes thereof.

SEC. 4. On and after the effective date of the regulations prescribed under section 1, no executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly owned corporation, officer, or employee shall expend any money, or incur any obligation, for insurance, or for the payment of premiums on insurance, against loss, destruction, or damage in the shipment of valuables except as specifically authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury may give such authorization if he shall find that the risk of loss, destruction, or damage in such shipment cannot be adequately guarded against by the facilities of the United States or that the circumstances are such that adequate replacement cannot be provided under this act.

SEC. 5. Every officer and employee of the United States and every person acting on behalf of a wholly owned corporation who makes a shipment of valuables in good faith pursuant to and substantially in accordance with the regulations prescribed under section 1 shall be deemed, insofar as there may be concerned the propriety with respect to such shipment of any act or omission governed by such regulations, to be acting in faithful execution of his duties of office and in full performance of the conditions of his bond and oath of office, if any.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury shall have power, with the approval of the President, to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in him by this act, and may for such purpose require persons making shipment of valuables or making claims for replacement to make such declarations or to furnish him with such other information as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 7. For the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "valuables" means any article or thing or representative of value in which the United States has any interest, or in connection with which it has any obligation or responsibility, direct or indirect, and which is of, or is similar to, a class or kind of article or thing or representative of value which it has been the practice heretofore of the United States to insure, as the insured party, against loss, destruction, or damage in shipment, and includes, but is not limited to, coin, specie, bullion, currency, bonds, coupons, debentures, bills, notes, certificates of indebtedness, certificates of deposit, mortgages, assignments, certificates of stock, warehouse receipts, checks, trust receipts, warrants, stamps, and any other securities, papers, or materials of value, whether complete, incomplete, mutilated, in definitive form, or represented by interim documents; the term "United States" as used in this subsection means the United States or any of its executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, or employees;

(b) The term "shipment" means the transportation, or the effecting of transportation, of valuables, without limitation as to the means or facilities used or by which the transportation, is effected or the person to whom it is made, and includes, but is not limited to, shipments made to any executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly or partly owned corporation, officer, or employee of the United States, or any person acting on his or its behalf or at his or its direction;

(c) The term "wholly owned corporation" means any corporation, regardless of the law or laws under which it is incorporated, the capital of which is entirely owned, directly or indirectly, by the United States, and includes the duly authorized officers, employees, and agents thereof;

(d) The term "replacement" means payment, reimbursement, replacement, or duplication or the expenses incident thereto.

SEC. 8. (a) Whenever it is clearly proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury—

(1) That any interest-bearing security of the United States, identified by number and description, payable to bearer or so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, has been wholly or partly destroyed, or so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to the owner, or has been lost or stolen under such circumstances, and such a period of time having elapsed after it has matured or has become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, as in the judgment of the Secretary would indicate that it has been destroyed or irretrievably lost, is not held by any person as his own property and will never become the basis of a valid claim against the United States; or

(2) That any interest-bearing security of the United States, identified by number and description, which is not payable to bearer and which has not been so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, has been lost or stolen, so that it is not held by any person as his own property, or has been wholly or partly destroyed, or so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to the owner;

the Secretary, upon receipt and approval by him of a bond of indemnity, if and as required by subsection (b) hereof, shall, in the case of a security which has not matured or become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, issue a substitute marked "duplicate" and showing the serial number of the original security; or shall, in the case of a security which has matured or become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, make payment thereof to the owner, with such interest only as would have been paid had the security been presented when it became due and payable: Provided, That in the case of an interim certificate relief may be given by the issue of a definitive security, whether before or after maturity, rather than by the issue of a substitute or by payment: And provided further, That no payment shall be made on account of interest coupons claimed to have been attached to such original security unless the Secretary is satisfied that such coupons have not been paid, and are in fact destroyed or can never become the basis of a valid claim against the United States.

(b) Except as hereinafter provided, the owner of such lost, stolen, destroyed, mutilated, or defaced security shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond, to indemnify the United States, in such form and amount and with such surety, sureties, or security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require: Provided, That in case of securities payable to bearer or so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, the destruction of which has not been proved, a corporate surety, qualified under the provisions of the act of August 13, 1894, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 6, secs. 6–13), shall be required on such bond of indemnity: And provided further, That a bond of indemnity shall not be required in any of the following classes of cases, except as hereinafter provided:

(1) If the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the loss, theft, destruction, mutilation, or defacement, as the case may be, occurred without fault of the owner and while the security was in the custody or the control of the United States (not including the Postal Service when acting solely in its capacity as the public carrier of the mails), or of a person thereunto duly authorized as lawful agent of the United States, or while it was in the course of shipment effected pursuant to and in accordance with the regulations issued under the provisions of this act.

(2) If substantially the entire security is presented and surrendered by the owner and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied as to the identity of the security presented and that any missing portions are not sufficient to form the basis of a valid claim against the United States.

(3) If the lost, stolen, destroyed, mutilated, or defaced security is one which by the provisions of law or by the terms of its issue is transferable only by operation of law.

(4) If the owner is a State or political subdivision thereof, a corporation the whole of whose capital is owned by the United States, a foreign government or a Federal Reserve bank:

Provided, however, That in any of the foregoing classes of cases the Secretary of the Treasury may require a bond of indemnity if he deems it essential to the public interest.

(c) The term "interest-bearing security of the United States" or "security", wherever used in this section, means any direct obligation of the United States issued pursuant to law for valuable consideration and which by its terms bears interest, or is issued on a discount basis, and includes (but is not limited to) bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, and Treasury bills, and interim certificates issued for any such security.

(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the administration of this section.

(e) Sections 3702, as amended, 3703, 3704, and 3705 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 31, secs. 735, 736, 737, and 738) are hereby repealed.

SEC. 9. Section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 31, sec. 528), as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Except as hereinafter provided, whenever it is clearly proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that any original check of the United States is lost, stolen, or wholly or partly destroyed, or is so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to its owner or holder, persons authorized to issue such checks on behalf of the United States are authorized, before the close of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the original check was issued, to issue to the owner or holder thereof a substitute, marked 'duplicate' and showing the number, date, and payee of the original check, upon the receipt and approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of a bond, to indemnify the United States, in such form and amount and with such surety, sureties, or security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require; but no such substitute shall be payable if the original check shall first have been paid: Provided, however, That the authority herein conferred to issue substitute checks may, in the case of checks issued on account of public-debt obligations and transactions regarding the administration of banking and currency laws, be issued without limitation of time.

"(b) A bond of indemnity shall not be required under subsection (a) of this section in any of the following classes of cases except as hereinafter provided: (1) If the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the loss, theft, destruction, mutilation, or defacement, as the case may be, occurred without fault of the owner or holder and while the check was in the custody or control of the United States (not including the Postal Service when acting solely in its capacity as the public carrier of the mails), or of a person thereunto duly authorized as lawful agent of the United States, or while it was in the course of shipment effected pursuant to and in accordance with the regulations issued under the provisions of the Government Losses in Shipment Act; (2) if substantially the entire check is presented and surrendered by the owner or holder and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied as to the identity of the check presented and that any missing portions are not sufficient to form the basis of a valid claim against the United States; (3) if the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the original check is not negotiable and cannot be made the basis of a valid claim against the United States; (4) if the amount of the check is less than $50 and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the giving of a bond of indemnity would be an undue hardship to the owner or holder; (5) if the owner or holder is a State or political subdivision thereof, a corporation the whole of whose capital is owned by the United States, a foreign government, or a Federal Reserve bank: Provided, however, That in any of the foregoing classes of cases the Secretary of the Treasury may require a bond of indemnity if he deems it essential to the public interest.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the administration of the provisions of this section.

"(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this section, whenever any original check of the Post Office Department has been lost, stolen, or destroyed, the Postmaster General may authorize the issuance of a substitute, marked 'duplicate' and showing the number, date, and payee of the original check, before the close of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the original check was issued, upon the execution by the owner thereof of such bond of indemnity as the Postmaster General may prescribe: Provided, That when such original check does not exceed in amount the sum of $50 and the payee or owner is, at the date of the application, an officer or employee in the service of the Post Office Department, whether by contract, designation, or appointment, the Postmaster General may, in lieu of an indemnity bond, authorize the issuance of a substitute check or warrant upon such an affidavit as he may prescribe, to be made before any postmaster by the payee or owner of an original check.

"(e) Substitutes, marked as hereinabove provided, drawn on the Treasurer of the United States, shall, after the lapse of the period fixed by section 21 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934 (48 Stat. 1235; U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 31, sec. 725 (t)), for the payment of the original checks, be payable only as the original checks would be payable thereunder.

"(f) The term 'original check' wherever used in this section means any check, warrant, or other order for the payment of money, payable upon demand and not bearing interest, drawn by a duly authorized officer or agent of the United States on its behalf against an account or funds of the United States, whether upon a bank or upon the Treasurer or other paying officer of the United States, but does not include money, coins, or currency of the United States nor instruments issued by any corporation or other entity owned or controlled by the United States, whether in whole or in part, against such corporation's or entity's own funds; as used in subsection (d) of this section it means such an instrument drawn by a duly authorized officer or employee of the Post Office Department."

SEC. 10. This act may be cited as the "Government Losses in Shipment Act."

SEC. 11. This act shall become effective on July 1, 1937.

CLAIM OF THE CITY OF PERTH AMBOY, N. J.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2146) to amend the act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., approved July 23, 1935, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J.", approved July 23, 1935, be amended to read as follows: "That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment for just and fair compensation upon the claim of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., against the United States upon its merits and according to the equities of the case with a view of reimbursing the claimant for money expended in 1918, 1919, and 1920 by the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., growing out of an agreement, formal or informal, or otherwise, with the United States to extend the city's water system for the purpose of supplying water to the Raritan Arsenal and Colonia Base Hospital, No. 2, less the present estimated value of the equipment installed under such agreement.

"SEC. 2. That the suit heretofore instituted under the act of which this is amendatory, by the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., against the United States in the Court of Claims, no. 43325, shall proceed under this act, notwithstanding any lapse of time, laches, or any statute of limitations or any defense, except that said city shall be required to give sufficient assurance to the United States that it will preserve the facilities for furnishing water on account of which this claim is made and will not destroy or render them unfit for use except with the consent of the Secretary of War. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records or certified copies thereof from the files and records of the United States relating to the subject matter in controversy in said suit may be used in evidence by either party and the departments of the United States Government shall give the attorneys for both parties access to such papers, correspondence, and documents as are in the files. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from and payment of any judgment thereon, shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama, who I see reported the bill, what changes are proposed by this measure in the act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to determine this claim.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the changes are very simple. About 2 years ago the Committee on Claims reported favorably a bill, and it was passed, which authorized the city of Perth Amboy, N. J., to file suit against the Government and have the case decided on the equities between the city and the Government with reference to the construction of a water system at Perth Amboy.

The controversy arose on account of the establishment of a military camp. It became necessary, because of the establishment of the camp, to have additional water. The city went through its part of the contract, seemingly, and erected the plant. In the meantime the camp was moved, and the city claims that it is entitled to damages. The committee took that viewpoint of the matter originally and passed a bill which it believed would have enabled all the equities to be decided in the court. Government counsel appeared in the court and set up the fact that under the bill as it was passed the city was limited to damages which occurred in 1 year. As a matter of fact, it took 3 years to construct the plant. Therefore there were 3 years' damages instead of 2, if it could be considered from a collective standpoint. The pending bill simply gives the city the right to recover damages which were incurred during any one of the years instead of 1 year only.

Mr. ROBINSON. What measure of damages is set up by the bill?

Mr. BLACK. The bill does not attempt to set up the measure of damages, but we attempted by very strong language, as the Senator will see if he will read it, absolutely to give the court the right to allow only the damages to which the city was equitably entitled, irrespective of what the city spent. We did not seek to set up the measure of damages.

Mr. ROBINSON. What are the damages for? Are they for moving the camp?

Mr. BLACK. The damage was occasioned by the fact that the Government agreed to use the water from this camp, as I recall. It has been some time since I went over the matter. The Government did not use the water. It was to contribute in that way to the construction of the water project.

Mr. ROBINSON. The city was induced to build the water plant by the promise of the Government to use a certain amount of water, and thus compensate the city for a portion of the construction costs?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Government moved the camp away and did not carry out its contract?

Mr. BLACK. The Government did not carry out its contract with reference to the use of all the water it would have utilized.

Mr. ROBINSON. How long was it bound to use the water?

Mr. BLACK. I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator sees the pertinence of the question. Is the Government to pay damages forever to the city of Perth Amboy for the failure of the Government to keep a camp there?

Mr. BLACK. No; as I recall—although I cannot remember definitely—the original damages were limited at the outset to the amount of the cost of the additional water equipment. I reported on the bill about 2 years ago, and when the matter was brought up a short time ago I did not attempt to look into the measure of damages, but I saw that the court had precluded the city from having the equity of its case tried.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. As I understand, the purpose of the bill is merely to give jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to determine whether or not there was any damage; and if so, how much. Is not that correct?

Mr. BLACK. And whether or not the Government should pay it.

Mr. SMATHERS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will not object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD T. EDWARDS

The bill (H. R. 5438) for the relief of Richard T. Edwards was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADELE FOWLKES

The bill (H. R. 3967) for the relief of Adele Fowlkes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLARD WEBSTER

A. L. MALLERY

The bill (H. R. 4942) for the relief of A. L. Mallery was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. CLIFF SNIDER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1865) for the relief of Mrs. Cliff Snider, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and to insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps"; on line 10, after the words "passenger was", to strike out the words "struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck driven by an enrollee, Joe Holder" and insert "struck by a Government truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps"; and to insert a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Mrs. Cliff Snider, of Smithville, Ga., the sum of $10,000, in full satisfaction of all her claims against the United States for damages sustained when the automobile in which she was a passenger was struck by a Government truck operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps, on the Americus-Andersonville Highway, about 8 miles north of Americus, Ga., on October 25, 1936, resulting in the death of her husband and her own serious personal injury: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION AND REHABILITATION OF MILITARY POSTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2649) to authorize appropriations for construction and rehabilitation at military posts, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill was favorably reported after hearings held by the Senate Military Affairs Committee, at which the Army officers connected with the construction activities of the War Department testified. The War Department presented a construction plan involving about $162,000,000. The items in this bill were selected from the construction program of the Department and represent what the committee considered the most urgent housing needs of the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the bill authorizes an appropriation of $22,993,088.

Mr. SHEPPARD. So it does; and this amount covers the most urgent housing needs of the Army, in the view of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it a part of the Army construction plan?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is a part of the Army construction plan that embraces a total authorization of approximately $162,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will there be a request for an additional appropriation this year if this measure shall be passed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There will be no request for an appropriation this year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$21,460,688" and insert "$22,993,088"; at the bottom of page 3, to strike out "Total, United States, $15,090,588"; at the top of page 4, to insert:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to establish in or near Denver, Colo., an extension to the Air Corps Technical School and to accept on behalf of the United States, free from encumbrance or conditions and without cost to the United States, for use as a site for the extension to such school, the title in fee simple to 960 acres of land, more or less, within and without the city limits of the city of Denver, Colo., including the property known as the "Agnes (Phipps) Memorial Sanitarium", together with existing buildings and equipment located thereon; and, also, a tract of land, within the State of Colorado, suitable for use as an aerial gunnery and bombing range by the Army Air Corps: Provided, That in the event a donor is unable to perfect title to any land tendered as a donation, condemnation of such land is authorized in the name of the United States, and payment of any and all awards for title to such land as is condemned, together with the cost of suit, shall be made by the donor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SELECTION OF MIDSHIPMAN FROM CANAL ZONE AND REPUBLIC OF PANAMA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2276) to provide for an additional midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be at the United States Naval Academy one midshipman to be selected from among the sons of civilians residing in the Canal Zone and the sons of civilian employees of the United States Government and the Panama Railroad Co. residing in the Republic of Panama, whose appointment shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy on the recommendation of the Governor of the Panama Canal.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill merely provides for the selection and appointment of a midshipman from the Canal Zone. It is similar to a bill pending before the Military Affairs Committee for the appointment of a cadet to the Military Academy at West Point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. G. ADAMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2241) for the relief of W. G. Adams, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to W. G. Adams the sum of $500 in full satisfaction for his claim against the United States for damages arising out of personal injuries suffered when he was struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck, near Flagstaff, Ariz., on September 8, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAWSON N. DICK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 821) for the relief of Lawson N. Dick, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "to", to strike out "the date of enactment of this act" and insert "August 28, 1934", and at the end of the section to insert a proviso, so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lawson N. Dick, an employee in the office of the Mississippi River Commission at Vicksburg, Miss., a sum equal to $60 per annum from July 1, 1928, to July 2, 1930, plus $120 per annum from July 3, 1930, to August 28, 1934, less 3½-percent retirement deductions which shall be credited to his account in the civil-service retirement and disability fund, such sum representing additional compensation to which he is entitled under the provisions of the act of May 28, 1928, known as the Welch Act, and the act of July 3, 1930, known as the Brookhart Act: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2 in the following words:

SEC. 2. The annual rate of compensation of said Lawson N. Dick is hereby increased by $120 as of the date of enactment of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS AT SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

The bill (S. 2629) to authorize an exchange of lands between the city of San Diego, Calif., and the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer to the city of San Diego, Calif., free from all encumbrances and without cost to said city of San Diego, all right, title, and interest to the land contained within that part of the Naval Supply Depot described as follows:

JOHN PROSSER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2418) for the relief of John Prosser, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,000"" and insert "$400", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Prosser, of Turtle Lake, Wis., the sum of $400 in full satisfaction of all his claims against the United States for injuries received by him while participating in the arrest of two known post-office burglars: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOIS H. ANTHONY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2301) for the relief of Lois H. Anthony, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to cancel the charges, in the amount of $8,819.36, entered on the accounts of Lois H. Anthony, as clerk in charge of the post office at the Navy Yard, Boston, Mass., by reason of the disallowance by the General Accounting Office of payments made to the said Lois H. Anthony by the Post Office Department for her services in conducting such post office during the period from December 6, 1926, to June 1, 1936.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill is recommended by the Post Office Department, by the Commandant of the United States Navy Yard at Boston, and by the Comptroller General. The purpose of the bill is to authorize and direct the Comptroller General to cancel the charges, in the amount of $8,819.36, entered on the accounts of Lois H. Anthony, as clerk in charge of the post office at the navy yard at Boston, Mass., by reason of the disallowance by the General Accounting Office of payments made to Lois H. Anthony by the Post Office Department for her services in conducting such post office during the period from December 6, 1926, to June 1, 1936.

The bill has the approval of the Postmaster General.

According to the records of the Post Office Department the facts are as follows: Miss Anthony, an employee of the Navy Department, was designated several years ago to serve as clerk in charge of the yard post office and, as such clerk in charge, she received compensation from the Post Office Department each month, the greater portion of which was turned over to assistants employed by her in the station. Eventually the Comptroller General reached the conclusion that no legal authority existed for compensating a person who was already a regular civil-service employee for conducting a contract station on Federal premises. The General Accounting Office disallowed a total amount of $8,819.36, covering payments made to Miss Anthony over a 10-year period. The Post Office Department requested a reconsideration of the Comptroller General's decision, pointing out that practically all of the compensation received by Miss Anthony was disbursed to assistants and represented services actually rendered, from which the Government benefited. However, the Comptroller General reaffirmed his original decision and declined to approve Miss Anthony's accounts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Those under Miss Anthony performed the work, and she has been paid for it; and, as I understand, the General Acounting Office disapproved the bill on the ground that there was no authority of law for the payments?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And this bill is to validate the payments?

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEINRICH SCHMIDT, OF FLENSBURG, GERMANY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 676) for the relief of Heinrich Schmidt, G. m. b. H., of Flensburg, Germany, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Heinrich Schmidt, G. m. b. H., of Flensburg, Germany, owner of the steamship Pollux, of German registry, the sum of $1,151 in full satisfaction of all claims of such Heinrich Schmidt, G. m. b. H., against the United States resulting from the levy and collection by the United States of certain taxes, pursuant to sections 4219 and 4225 of the Revised Statutes, on the tonnage of such steamship Pollux, at the port of Baltimore, Md., on March 9, 1920, similar taxes having subsequently been held in the cases of The Sophie Rickmers (45 F. (2d) 413) and Flensburger Dampfercampagnie (73 Ct. Cls. 646) to be invalid as to ships of such registry: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR LOSSES BY NAVY MEN IN OHIO VALLEY FLOOD, 1937

The bill (S. 2647) to provide for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost while engaged in emergency relief expeditions during the Ohio Valley flood in January and February 1937 was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $545.75, as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse, under such regulations as he may prescribe, enlisted men and former enlisted men of the Navy for the value of personal effects lost while engaged in emergency relief expeditions during the Ohio Valley flood in January and February 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ISSUANCE OF BONDS, ETC., BY TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The bill (S. 2653) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes", approved August 3, 1935, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, Calendar Nos. 782, 783, 784, and 785 are bills which deal with the issuance of bonds in connection with the Territory of Hawaii. I think we should have an explanation of the bills. I do not know that I shall object to them, but I think we should have an explanation in the Senate before the bills are passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills were reported by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who is not in the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bills go over until another day, when they may be explained. The bills may be entirely correct, and I do not know that I shall object to them, but I should like to have an explanation before action is taken upon them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills referred to by the Senator from Tennessee, being Senate bills 2653, 2621, 2622, and 2652, will be passed over.

Mr. TYDINGS subsequently said: Mr. President, while I was out of the Chamber four or five bills dealing with matters affecting the Territory of Hawaii came up, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] said he would like to have a brief explanation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to have the Senator ask to recur to the bills, so that he may make the explanation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the four bills remaining with Order No. 782 on the calendar, being Senate bills 2653, 2621, 2622, and 2652.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, these bills were unanimously reported by the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs. They propose to grant authority so that Hawaii may receive funds from the Government for certain purposes such as P. W. A. and W. P. A. They involve no extra money from the Federal Government, but simply put Hawaii in a position to accept and carry on certain projects there.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, they give Hawaii the power to match funds to such extent as may be required by the P. W. A. and the W. P. A.?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. In the original passing of one of the acts it was not broad enough to allow Hawaii to do what the body governing the Hawaiian people want to do.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not take any appropriation out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not a cent.

There is another bill, being Order of Business 796, which I should like also to have considered. This bill simply amends the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act so as to give them an additional power, with no expenditure on the part of the Federal Government. I mention it now because I am forced to be absent and I hope it will not be objected to when it comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bills referred to by the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2653) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes", approved August 3, 1935, which was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes", approved August 3, 1935, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the Territory of Hawaii, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, is authorized and empowered to issue bonds in the sum of not to exceed $4,803,000 of the character and in the manner provided in that certain act of the legislature of said Territory, enacted at its regular session of 1935, entitled 'An act to provide for public improvements and for the securing of Federal funds for expenditure in connection with funds hereby appropriated for such improvements', as amended by act 23, Session Laws of Hawaii, 1937."

The bill (S. 2621) to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation, to issue sewer bonds was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, may authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation of the Territory of Hawaii, to issue general obligation bonds in the sum of $1,750,000 for the purpose of enabling it to construct main interceptors and trunk lines and to meet its share of expenses for the construction and extension of laterals under improvement district assessments for a sanitary sewer system in the city and county of Honolulu.

SEC. 2. The bonds issued under authority of this act may be either term or serial bonds, maturing, in the case of term bonds, not later than 30 years from the date of issue thereof, and, in the case of serial bonds, payable in substantially equal annual installments, the first installment to mature not later than 5 years and the last installment to mature not later than 30 years from the date of such issue. Such bonds may be issued without the approval of the President of the United States.

SEC. 3. Any legislation enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii in its 1937 session pertaining to the issuance of sewer bonds, as authorized by this act, is hereby ratified and confirmed subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit the amendment of such Territorial legislation by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii from time to time to provide for changes in the improvements authorized by such legislation and for the disposition of unexpended moneys realized from the sale of said bonds.

The bill (S. 2622) to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and to issue bonds of the authority, to authorize said legislature to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii may create a public corporate authority to engage in slum clearance or housing undertakings, or both, within such Territory. The Legislature of said Territory may provide for the appointment and terms of the members of such authority and for the powers of such authority, except that such authority shall be given no power of taxation. The legislature may authorize the Territory or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof to make loans, donations, and conveyances and make available their facilities and services to such authority, and to take other action in aid of slum clearance or housing undertakings, and may, without regard to any Federal acts restricting the disposition of public lands of the Territory, authorize the commissioner of public lands, the Hawaiian Homes Commissioners, and any other officers of the Territory having power to manage and dispose of its public lands, to grant, convey, or lease to such authority parts of the public domain, and may provide that any of the public domain or other property acquired by such authority may be mortgaged by it as security for its bonds. The Legislature of said Territory may authorize such authority to issue bonds or other obligations of such character and maturity and in such manner as the legislature may provide. Such bonds shall not be a debt of the Territory or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof, shall not constitute public indebtedness within the meaning of section 55 of the act approved April 30, 1900, entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii", as amended, and shall not constitute bonds of the Territory of Hawaii within the meaning of the act approved August 3, 1935, entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes." All legislation heretofore enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii dealing with the subject matter of this act and not inconsistent herewith is hereby ratified and confirmed.

The bill (S. 2652) to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Territory of Hawaii, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, is authorized and empowered to issue bonds in the sum of not to exceed $4,029,000 of the character and in the manner provided in that certain act of the legislature of said Territory, enacted at its regular session of 1937, entitled "An act to provide for public improvements."

Such bonds may be either term or serial bonds, maturing, in the case of the term bonds, not later than 30 years from the date of issue thereof, and, in the case of the serial bonds, payable in substantially equal annual installments, the first installment to mature not later than 5 years and the last installment to mature not later than 30 years, from the date of such issue. And said act of said legislature is hereby ratified and confirmed, subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit the amendment of said act of said Territory by the legislature thereof from time to time to provide for changes in the improvements authorized by said act or for the disposition of unexpended moneys appropriated by said act, and that said bonds may be issued without the approval of the President of the United States.

HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION

The bill (S. 2620) to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, I inquire what became of Order of Business 796, being Senate bill 2620, to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920. Evidently that bill has not been called.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] included the consideration of Order of Business 796 in an omnibus request for the consideration of a number of bills relating to Hawaii, and the bill was passed a few moments ago. I heard him specifically refer to the Hawaiian Homes Commission.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to look into that bill and I want it to go over for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that Order of Business 796, being Senate bill 2620, be passed over for the day. In order to keep the record straight, the Chair suggests that the Senator from Oregon ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. McNARY. I make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, the vote is reconsidered, and the bill will be returned to the calendar.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT ON BILL TO REORGANIZE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 17) authorizing the printing of additional copies of Senate Report No. 711, Seventy-fifth Congress, on the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which had been reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, on page 1, line 2, after the word "printed", to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty"; in line 5, after the word "which", to strike out "ten" and insert "seven"; and in line 7, before the word "thousand", to strike out "forty" and insert "twenty-three", so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there shall be printed 30,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 711, current session, on the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, of which 7,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 23,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

CONSOLIDATED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1882) for the relief of the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$113,085.85. Such sum represents" and insert "$92,993.40 in full settlement of all claims against the United States", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation the sum of $92,993.40 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for additional costs incurred by such corporation in the performance of a contract with the Department of War dated February 27, 1933 (contract no. W 535 AC–5732 (1790)): Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIANS OF FORT BERTHOLD RESERVATION, N. DAK.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 642) for the relief of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation in North Dakota, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000 in full and final settlement of all claims and demands of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation in North Dakota, composed of the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans, which claims are based upon stipulations of an unratified treaty dated July 27, 1866 (Kappler's Laws and Treaties, vol. 2, p. 1052): Provided, That the amount when appropriated shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation and shall draw interest in accordance with existing laws: Provided further, That not to exceed 10 percent of the amount herein authorized may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for payment of fees and expenses of attorneys employed under contract approved in accordance with existing law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have a statement concerning that bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in 1920 a bill was passed by the Congress allowing the Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation in North Dakota to come into the Court of Claims to establish claims against the Government. A claim was allowed of a little over $4,000,000; and in the gratuity offsets, amounting to $2,700,000, was included an item of $400,000 which dated back to a treaty of 1866, in which the Government of the United States agreed to pay the Indians $20,000 a year for certain concessions and for uses of land for a period of 20 years.

The treaty was never ratified by the Congress, but the Government carried out this provision by paying the Indians $20,000 a year for 20 years, amounting to $400,000. The Government got the use of the land that was agreed to during that time.

When the bill came up before the Court of Claims, this $400,000, which represented the payment of $20,000 a year for 20 years, was allowed by the court as a gratuity offset. The Indians and their attorneys felt that that particular offset should not have been included, because it was money paid by the Government to the Indians for value received under their treaty. The Secretary of the Interior last year, in his report, stated:

> The claim * * * has no legal standing.

That, of course, is because the treaty was not ratified.

> There is nevertheless a moral obligation on the part of the Government which has not been fulfilled, and in my opinion the legislation will do justice to this group of Indians.

Of course, in the report this year it is stated that the bill is not in accordance with the President's financial program. However, a moral obligation exists. The Indians are entitled to what they claim. The Committee on Indian Affairs, unanimously reported the bill favorably, and I believe the claim is justified.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many Indians are involved?

Mr. FRAZIER. About 1,700 or 1,800, as I remember.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARCH HURLEY CONSERVANCY DISTRICT, N. MEX.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2086) to authorize appropriations for the construction of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,000,000 for the construction of the Arch Hurley Conservancy District in New Mexico" and in lieu thereof to insert "That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to construct a Federal reclamation project for the irrigation of the lands of the Arch Hurley Conservancy District in New Mexico", so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to construct a Federal reclamation project for the irrigation of the lands of the Arch Hurley Conservancy District in New Mexico under the Federal reclamation laws: Provided, That construction work is not to be initiated on said irrigation project until (a) the project shall have been found to be feasible under subsection B of section 4 of the act of December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 702), and (b) a contract shall have been executed with an irrigation or conservation district embracing the land to be irrigated under said project, which contract shall obligate the contracting district to repay the cost of construction of said project in 40 equal annual installments, without interest: (c) contracts shall have been made with each owner of more than 160 irrigable acres under said project, by which he, his successors, and assigns shall be obligated to sell all of his land in excess of 160 irrigable acres at or below prices fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and within the time to be fixed by said Secretary, no water to be furnished to the land of any such large landowner refusing or failing to execute such contract; and (d) contracts shall have been made with all owners of lands to be irrigated under the project by which they will agree that if their land is sold at prices above the appraised value thereof, approved by said Secretary, one-half of such excess shall be paid to the United States to be applied in the inverse order of the due dates upon the construction charge installments coming due thereafter from the owners of said land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of a Federal reclamation project to furnish a water supply for the lands of the Arch Hurley conservancy district in New Mexico."

CULTIVATION REQUIREMENTS IN HOMESTEAD ENTRIES

The bill (S. 1759) to amend an act entitled "An act to eliminate the requirements of cultivation in connection with certain homestead entries", approved August 19, 1935, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in 1935 Congress passed a law relieving homestead settlers from the duty each year of breaking out a certain number of acres of land, as was required under the old homestead law. That was in line with the soil-conservation program which was recommended by the Department and has proved very wise and salutary. Under that law we found that the omission of the word "application" prevented a few homesteaders, probably 50 or 100 in number, from getting the benefits of the act. This bill proposes to amend the act by inserting the words "or application made" in order to correct the defect. That is all there is to the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

> Be it enacted etc., That the act entitled "An act to eliminate the requirements of cultivation in connection with certain homestead entries", approved August 19, 1935, is amended by inserting after the word "settlement" the words "or application made."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 714) relating to the eligibility of certain persons for admission to the civil service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSFER OF CRAWFORD COUNTY, IOWA, TO NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT

The bill (H. R. 3284) to transfer Crawford County, Iowa, from the southern judicial district of Iowa to the northern judicial district of Iowa, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. STAHL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2093) for the relief of George H. Stahl, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments on page 1, line 9, after the word "the" to strike out the figures "13th" and insert "10th", and at the top of page 2, insert a new section as follows:

> SEC. 2. That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Henry A. Behrens, who was a member of Company F, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and who was mustered into the service on July 11, 1898, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on February 28, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers George H. Stahl, who was a member of Company B, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, enlisted July 14, 1898, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 10th day of December 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.
> SEC. 2. That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Henry A. Behrens, who was a member of Company F, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and who was mustered into the service on July 11, 1898, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on February 28, 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of George H. Stahl and Henry A. Behrens."

AMENDMENT TO JUDICIAL CODE

The bill (S. 2410) to amend the Judicial Code, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the author of this bill whether any hearings were held on it?

Mr. MINTON. There were no hearings on it. The interested parties made inquiry about the bill, and were told that there would be no hearings on it, but that they could submit a brief if they wished to do so. No brief was filed and so the bill was reported.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the author of the bill if he does not think that it should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. MINTON. No; not at all. It has to do with matters affecting Federal agencies that deal with interstate commerce. Therefore, the Interstate Commerce Committee is quite as competent to handle it as is the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Under the circumstances, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ANGELO AND AURO CATTANEO

The bill (H. R. 1731) for the relief of Angelo and Auro Cattaneo was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERM OF COURT AT LIVINGSTON, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4795) to provide for a term of court at Livingston, Mont.

Mr. MURRAY. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "Havre", it is proposed to insert "Miles City."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 92 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, sec. 172), is amended to read as follows:

"The State of Montana shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Montana. Terms of the district court shall be held at Helena, Butte, Great Falls, Lewistown, Billings, Missoula, Glasgow, Havre, Miles City, and Livingston at such times as may be fixed by rule of such court: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Glasgow, Lewistown, Livingston, and Havre are furnished free of all expense to the United States. Causes, civil and criminal, may be transferred by the court or a judge thereof from any sitting place designated above to any other sitting place thus designated, when the convenience of the parties or the ends of justice would be promoted by the transfer; and any interlocutory order may be made by the court or judge thereof in either place."

AUTHORIZATION OF DECORATION TO ACORS RATHBUN THOMPSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1918) to authorize the award of a decoration for distinguished service, namely, the Congressional Medal of Honor to Acors Rathbun Thompson, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, on page 1 line 4, after the word "decoration", to strike out "for distinguished service, namely, the Congressional Medal of Honor"; and in line 10, after the word "comrade", to strike out "one Glen B. Ranney, Sixty-sixth Company", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to cause the recommendation for the award of a decoration to Acors Rathbun Thompson, formerly private, Sixty-sixth Company, First Battalion, Fifth Marines, Second Division, American Expeditionary Forces, who, on September 14, 1918, at Jaulny, in the St. Mihiel, sector, France, rescued and carried a wounded comrade through heavy enemy fire to a first-aid station, and who further distinguished himself as a member of a small group, October 4 and 5, 1918, at Blanc Mont Ridge, France, though wounded and constantly exposed to constant enemy machine-gun fire from three sides, was cut off from his main body, repulsed five counter attacks by the enemy, which resulted in the capture of four German officers, 268 men, together with 85 machine guns in position, some mortars, and a heavy fieldpiece, to be considered by the proper boards or authorities, and such award made to said Thompson as his said conduct merits.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the award of a decoration for distinguished service to Acors Rathbun Thompson."

ROGUE RIVER NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The bill (S. 1762) to add certain lands to the Rogue River National Forest in the State of Oregon was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of forest management, watershed protection, and recreational use the north half northwest quarter section 3, the south half northwest quarter section 23, and the west half northeast quarter northeast quarter and the east half northwest quarter northeast quarter section 27, township 37, south, range 3 east, Willamette meridian, of revested Oregon & California land-grant lands are hereby added to and made a part of the Rogue River National Forest in the State of Oregon, subject to all laws and regulations governing national forests: Provided, That the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture shall jointly appraise and agree on the value of the said Oregon & California land-grant lands and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon notice of the appraisal by the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture, to transfer an equal amount of money from the national-forest receipts and credit the same to the Oregon & California land-grant funds, subject to all laws and regulations governing the disposal of money received from the Oregon & California land-grant lands.

CONTROL OF SOIL EROSION, ETC.—CACHE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH

The bill (S. 2221) to facilitate the control of soil erosion and flood damage originating upon lands within the exterior boundaries of the Cache National Forest in the State of Utah was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission established by section 4 of the act of March 1, 1911 (U. S. C., title 16, sec. 513) is hereby authorized to acquire by purchase any lands within the boundaries of the Cache National Forest in the State of Utah which, in his judgment, should become the property of the United States in order that they may be so managed with other lands of the United States as to minimize soil erosion and flood damage; and to pay for said lands that proportion of the entire receipts from the sale of natural resources, and the occupancy of publicly owned lands within said national forest which is equal to that proportion of the gross area of said national forest situated in the State of Utah hereby is authorized to be appropriated for expenditure for that purpose by the Secretary of Agriculture until said lands have been acquired. So far as the State of Utah may be concerned, the provisions of the acts of May 23, 1908 (35 Stat. 260); section 500, title 16, United States Code, of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 843); and section 501, title 16, United States Code, shall be inoperative in relation to the receipts so appropriated, but nothing herein contained shall diminish payments to or expenditures within the State of Idaho under the provisions of said acts.

COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF PEANUT STATISTICS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1998) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of peanuts by the Department of Agriculture", approved June 24, 1936, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 10, after the name "United States", to insert "received, shipped, and"; on page 2, line 8, after the word "than" to strike out two hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "thirty thousand", so as to make the section read:

That the first sentence of the first section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of peanuts by the Department of Agriculture", approved June 24, 1936, is amended to read as follows: "That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to collect and publish statistics of raw peanuts, shelled, unshelled, and crushed, and peanut oil, in the United States, received, shipped, and in the possession of warehousemen, brokers, cleaners, shellers, dealers, growers' cooperative associations, crushers, salters, manufacturers of peanut products, and owners other than the original producers of peanuts: Provided, That the Secretary may, in his discretion, omit for any period of time to collect such statistics from any or all salters of peanuts or manufacturers of peanut products who used, during the calendar year preceding that for which statistics are being collected, less than 30,000 pounds of shelled and unshelled peanuts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 10, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 2 of such act of June 24, 1936, is amended to read as follows: "The Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to collect and publish statistics of the quantity of peanuts picked or threshed by any person owning or operating peanut picking or threshing machines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 16, to renumber the section from "2" to "3", and in section 3, page 2, line 24, after the word "peanut", to insert "and peanut oil received, shipped, and", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the first sentence of section 3 of such act of June 24, 1936, is amended to read as follows: "It shall be the duty of every warehouseman, broker, cleaner, sheller, dealer, growers' cooperative association, crusher, salter, manufacturer of peanut products, and owner or operator of peanut picking or threshing machines to furnish promptly upon request of the Secretary, within the time prescribed by him, completely and correctly to the best of his knowledge, a report of the quantity of peanuts and peanut oil received, shipped, and on hand and in the case of an operator of peanut picking and threshing machines the quantity picked or threshed, segregating in accordance with forms furnished for the purpose by the Secretary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED CHILD-LABOR AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 144) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting child labor was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Over.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the joint resolution proposes to amend the Constitution of the United States and I think we ought not to undertake to dispose of it under the 5-minute rule at least today. So I ask that the measure go over at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN MINERAL PATENTS, MONTANA

The bill (H. R. 7021) validating and confirming certain mineral patents issued for lands situated in township 5 south, range 15 east, Montana principal meridian, in the State of Montana, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2512) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. I note that it was reported by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. As he is not present at the moment, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ETHEL SMITH M'DANIEL

The bill (S. 972) for the relief of Ethel Smith McDaniel was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions and limitations of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Ethel Smith McDaniel, widow of Travis McDaniel, who died on April 16, 1934, and whose death is alleged to have resulted from disability incurred on January 8, 1929, while an employee of the United States Railway Mail Service, and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to receive and consider her claim under the remaining provisions of said Act: Provided, That claim hereunder shall be made within 1 year from the date of the approval of this Act: And provided further, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1507) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

W. D. DAVIS

The bill (H. R. 1851) for the relief of W. D. Davis was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOROTHY M'COURT

The bill (H. R. 607) for the relief of Dorothy McCourt was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN BRENNAN

C. O. EASTMAN

The bill (H. R. 4623) for the relief of C. O. Eastman was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the bill is for the relief of a postmaster who was charged with some postal money orders which had been destroyed in a fire. The postal money orders had been properly paid, and this does not cost the Government anything it ought not to pay. It is recommended by the Post Office Department. The report shows it is recommended by the Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. The letter of the Acting Postmaster General says:

While there was undoubtedly negligence on the part of the clerk in failing to make up the account promptly and to safeguard the paid money orders by placing them in the safe, it nevertheless appears that as the money orders were actually paid there will be no loss to the Government in allowing the former postmaster at Wauseon, Ohio, credit for the disbursement in his accounts.

I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the money-order account of C. O. Eastman, former postmaster at Wauseon, Ohio, with $4,272.07, or so much thereof as is necessary, to relieve him for the alleged loss of paid money orders in a fire in the post office at Wauseon, Ohio, on June 11, 1934, disallowed in the audit of his accounts due to his failure to record the particulars of the said money orders.

E. W. GARRISON

The bill (H. R. 563) for the relief of E. W. Garrison was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF EMPLOYEES OF DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2774) for the relief of certain employees of the Division of Investigation, Department of the Interior, and certain disbursing officers of the Department of the Interior, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow payment or credit, as the case may be, and upon approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, in connection with the following claims or paid vouchers for traveling expenses on change of station or for mileage of personally owned automobiles in the same manner and to the same extent as though the required authorization had been issued prior to the date the expense was incurred:

(1) To allow payment to the following-named persons in the amounts stated, from appropriations chargeable therefor: John L. Buckey, $5.15; Agnes L. Burke, $17.82; Cedia E. Davis, $5.15; Cecil J. Dowd, $28.33; Dan W. Herring, $5.15; John W. Jackson, $141.37; Alexander F. Kelly, $75.40; William H. Selvey, $45.06; Maurice P. Shaner, $47.90; Owen B. Sherwood, $47.96; and Miller L. West, $114.40;

(2) To allow credit in the account of Frank A. Lewis, special disbursing agent, accounts for September and October 1933, as follows: Voucher 2794 (James W. Smith), $63.25; voucher 2795 (C. L. Anderson), $8.65; voucher 2981 (Joseph L. Quinn), $57.95; voucher 2983 (Avary H. Alcorn), $131.40; voucher 3011 (J. M. Flanigan, Jr.), $141.85; voucher 3013 (Howard E. Tyson), $113.70; voucher 3014 (Kent B. Knox), $165.15; voucher 3015 (W. H. Pontius), $114.60; voucher 3016 (Tilden E. Guillory), $28.05; voucher 3018 (F. H. Martin), $112.70; voucher 3024 (A. P. Thornton), $64.85; voucher 3025 (R. L. Knight), $109.65; voucher 3036 (Joe DeuPree), $49.80; voucher 3047 (Walter S. Behrens), $82.40; voucher 3041 (J. N. Inglish), $103.35; voucher 3042 (M. C. Parrish, Jr.), $92.45; voucher 3043 (G. H. Flagg), $110.30; voucher 3044 (J. G. Floyd), $75.70; voucher 3045 (Wilson Keyes), $137.55; voucher 3069 (Halvor P. McGrath), $21; voucher 3070 (Joe C. Hemphill), $33.30; voucher 3077 (Glenn O. Briscoe), $35.10; voucher 3081 (J. H. Lawrence), $84.45; and voucher 3378 (J. H. Lawrence), $14.05;

(3) To allow credit in the account of C. F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, account for November 1934, as follows: Voucher 459021 (W. A. Whittlesey), $58.80.

(4) No part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with these claims, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the bill is recommended by the Bureau of Investigation, Department of the Interior. It grows out of traveling expenses. As I recall, a superior officer gave directions assigning someone to duty and he had a right to take his automobile provided the order specifically authorized it. Through some kind of error in a few cases the order by the superior officer did not specifically mention that the party being sent might take his automobile. Therefore when the matter came before the Comptroller General he very promptly stated the order was not broad enough to cover the item for automobile use. Those who were responsible for the order originally recommend that the claim be allowed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Department recommend it?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes. It was sent over by the Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be read a third time?

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MORSE DRY DOCK & REPAIR CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2757) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the claim of the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $331,879.25, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for repairing and reconditioning the steamships Princess Matoika, Pocahontas, Susquehanna, Potomac, America, and George Washington, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, second session: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] entirely satisfied that the bill is entirely proper?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Claims has gone into the matter and reexamined it frequently, both carefully and critically, and as we have secured additional facts from the War Department the committee reached the conclusion that the bill ought to be reported favorably. I agree fully with the report of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was there any difference of opinion in the committee?

Mr. LOGAN. Not upon the part of those who were present. One member of the committee had said he would like to be present, and was present a time or two, but we could not wait any longer and he was not present when the committee finally passed on the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator was for a very long time a member of the Supreme Court of Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. I was.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the Senator convinced the claim ought to be paid?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; the claim ought to be paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be read a third time?

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

FORMER DISBURSING OFFICERS OF VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6230) for the relief of certain former disbursing officers of the Veterans' Administration and of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Federal Board for Vocational Education, and the United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed in the settlement of accounts of the following-named former disbursing officers of the Veterans' Administration and of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Federal Board for Vocational Education, and the United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), to allow credit in the sums herein stated now standing as disallowances in said accounts on the books of the General Accounting Office: Provided, That this act shall not be interpreted to waive collections by the United States Government of loans on adjusted-service certificates and interest thereon:

First. Miles E. Bailey, former disbursing officer, Bureau of War Risk Insurance (now Veterans' Administration), Washington, D. C., in the sums of $61.75 and $2,733.50, which amounts he expended during the period from December 1917 to January 1919 (symbols 11003 and 11234).

Second. Chester C. Vargas, former disbursing officer, Bureau of War Risk Insurance (now Veterans' Administration), Washington, D. C., in the sums of $63.05 and $330.70, which amounts he expended during the period from February 1919 to August 1919 (symbols 11005 and 11555).

Third. Richard W. Lamb, former distributing officer, United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), Atlanta, Ga., in the sum of $16.32, which amount he expended during the period from February 1923 to January 1925 (symbol 11255).

Fourth. J. B. Schommer, former disbursing officer, Veterans' Administration, Washington, D. C., in the sums of $57.64, $58.45, $3,472.69, and $250.48, which amounts he expended during the periods from May 1, 1931, to August 31, 1931; July 1, 1932, to October 31, 1933; January 1, 1932, to October 31, 1933; and July 1, 1933, to April 30, 1934 (symbols 99220, 11500, 11501, and 11666).

Fifth. C. A. Wood, former disbursing officer at Veterans' Administration regional office, Atlanta, Ga., in the sum of $88.50 (symbol 99102), which amount he expended during the period from September 1, 1932, to September 30, 1932.

Sixth. W. A. Birmingham, former disbursing officer at Veterans' Administration regional office, Buffalo, N. Y., in the sum of $303.43 (symbol 99107), which amount he expended during the period from April 1, 1931, to April 30, 1931.

Seventh. Nina B. Harrison, former disbursing officer at Veterans' Administration facility, Los Angeles, Calif., in the sum of $403 (symbol 99129), which amount she expended during the period from June 1, 1933, to June 30, 1933.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William H. Holmes, former disbursing officer, United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), District of Columbia, the sum of $222.10, of which amount $172.10 was paid by him on September 22, 1932, and $50 in November 1932 by personal checks delivered to the Department of Justice (symbol 11006).

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ursula H. Miller, former disbursing officer, United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), Pittsburgh, Pa., the sum of $72.50, which amount was deducted from her salary as a Federal employee because of the disallowance by the General Accounting Office of that amount expended by her in June 1925 (symbol 11410).

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Harry M. Moeller, former disbursing officer, United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $149.68, which amount was deducted from his salary as a Federal employee because of the disallowance by the General Accounting Office of that amount expended by him in May 1925 (symbol 11398).

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Henry P. Dolan, former disbursing officer, Federal Board for Vocational Education (now Veterans' Administration), Washington, D. C., the sum of $45.38, which amount was deducted from his salary as a Federal employee because of the disallowance by the General Accounting Office of that amount expended by him during the period from April 1919 to December 1920 (symbol 92065).

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter J. Carney, former disbursing officer, United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $72.50, which amount he refunded to the United States because of the disallowance by the General Accounting Office of that amount expended by him in September 1923 (symbol 11253).

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert L. Putman, former disbursing officer, United States Veterans' Bureau (now Veterans' Administration), Cincinnati, Ohio, the sum of $7.35, which amount was deducted from his salary as a Federal employee because of the disallowance by the General Accounting Office of that amount expended by him in February 1924 (11309).

SEC. 8. No part of the amounts appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with these claims, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, it would be difficult to explain the bill in very great detail. When the Congress some years ago authorized the making of loans on certificates which had been issued to veterans, the Veterans' Administration had the amended act before it. It had certificates amounting to some $2,000,000. Some disbursing officers made slight errors. There was one who distributed $53,000,000 with an error of only two or three dollars. The Veterans' Administration has sent the bill to us and asked us to consider it favorably. I should say it is entirely just.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are the amounts $61.75, $63.05, $88.50, and so forth, typical of the claims?

Mr. LOGAN. The claims are small in their individual amounts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would that be about the average amount of the claims?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be read a third time?

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. R. FUCHS

The bill (H. R. 4682) for the relief of W. R. Fuchs was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES B. MURPHY

The bill (H. R. 5337) for the relief of Charles B. Murphy was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERM OF JUDGES IN CANAL ZONE, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1986) to amend section 42 of title 7 of the Canal Zone Code, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to add a new section 2, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph a of section 42 of title 7 of the Canal Zone Code (June 19, 1934) is amended to read as follows:

"a. Be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the judge for a term of 10 years and the district attorney and marshal for terms of 4 years each."

SEC. 2. That title 7, section 29, United States Code, title 48, section 101, Alaska, be amended so that the term of the Federal district judge in Alaska will be 10 years; that section 863, Puerto Rico, be amended so that the term of the Federal district judge shall be 10 years; that section 1405y, Virgin Islands, be so amended that the term of the Federal district judge shall be 10 years; that section 643, Hawaii, be so amended that the term of the Federal district judge shall be 10 years.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I shall explain the bill as best I can. It simply provided as originally introduced that the term of the Federal judge in the Canal Zone should be extended from 4 years to 10 years. That was submitted to the Department of Justice and the Department said that three other territorial judges, in the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, and Alaska, should have their terms extended likewise.

No one suggested this, but I spoke to an old friend of mine who was the Federal judge in the Canal Zone. He was a former law partner of mine. He served 4 years and declined to accept a further appointment, so I have no interest in his case. He said to me that in sending judges outside of the United States to serve only 4 years when it was probable the administration would change or for some reason he might be displaced at the end of the term, it was not fair that he be asked to give up all his practice and lose touch entirely with the people in his own community and his own State, and that it seemed to him the term should be 10 years. This bill was prepared by myself, and was my own idea. I thought it was only fair that the term should be extended to 10 years. I took it up with the Committee on the Judiciary and after some discussion there was no disagreement in the Judiciary Committee, and I was authorized to prepare the amendment and favorably report the bill, which I have done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELEGATES TO FIFTH WORLD CONGRESS OF THE DEAF

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 150) to provide for the appointment of a delegate to the Fifth World Congress of the Deaf was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint a member of the National Association of the Deaf as a delegate to represent the United States at the Fifth World Congress of the Deaf, to be held at Paris, France, from July 31 to August 6, 1937. The delegate so appointed shall make a report to the President.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of such delegate and to be expended in such manner as the President may prescribe.

PUBLIC PARK AND RECREATIONAL SITE, MONTANA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1216) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain land to the State of Montana to be used for the purpose of a public park and recreational site, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 2, line 4, after the word "quarter", to strike out "north half" and insert "lot 3 or"; and on page 2, to strike out lines 8 to 21, inclusive, as follows:

Township 1 north, range 3 west, section 12, southeast quarter northeast quarter and all that part of southeast quarter lying north and east of the right-of-way of United States Highway No. 10S; section 13, all that part of northeast quarter lying north and east of the right-of-way of United States Highway No. 10S.

In the event the State shall fail to devote such land to the purposes of a State public park and recreational site within 5 years after the date of enactment of this act, or fail to maintain such land as a public park and recreational site for any period of 5 consecutive years subsequent to its devotion to such use, or devote such land or any part thereof to another use, such land and all improvements thereon shall revert to the United States.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Township 1 north, range 3 west, section 12, southeast quarter northeast quarter and east half southeast quarter (lots 7 and 12); section 13, east half northeast quarter (lots 1 and 4), and northwest quarter northeast quarter (lot 2).

In the event the State shall fail to devote such lands to the purposes of a State public park and recreational site within 5 years after the date of enactment of this act, or fail to maintain such land as a public park and recreational site for any period of 5 consecutive years subsequent to its devotion to such use, or devote such lands or any part thereof to another use, such land and all improvements thereon shall revert to the United States; and in such event the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to declare such a forfeiture of the grant, and to assume jurisdiction of lot 12, section 17, township 1 north, range 2 west, for national-monument purposes under the act of June 8, 1906 (34 Stat. 225). Any patent issued hereunder shall contain a reservation to the United States of all mineral deposits in the land patented: Provided, That such minerals so reserved shall be prospected for, mined, and removed only in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey to the State of Montana, upon the conditions and limitations hereinafter expressed, the following-described land of the United States in the State of Montana, to be held and used by such State for the purposes of a State public park and recreational site:

MONTANA PRINCIPAL MERIDIAN

Township 1 north, range 2 west, section 7, west half; section 8, south half southwest quarter and southwest quarter southeast quarter; section 17, lots 1, 2, 10, 11, and 12, and north half northwest quarter; section 18, northeast quarter northeast quarter, northwest quarter, northeast quarter southwest quarter, lot 3 or northwest quarter southwest quarter, and north half southeast quarter; section 20, northwest quarter northeast quarter northeast quarter and northwest quarter northeast quarter.

Township 1 north, range 3 west, section 12, southeast quarter northeast quarter and east half southeast quarter (lots 7 and 12); section 13, east half northeast quarter (lots 1 and 4), and northwest quarter northeast quarter (lot 2).

In the event the State shall fail to devote such lands to the purposes of a State public park and recreational site within 5 years after the date of enactment of this act, or fail to maintain such land as a public park and recreational site for any period of 5 consecutive years subsequent to its devotion to such use, or devote such lands or any part thereof to another use, such land and all improvements thereon shall revert to the United States; and in such event the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to declare such a forfeiture of the grant, and to assume jurisdiction of lot 12, section 17, township 1 north, range 2 west, for national-monument purposes under the act of June 8, 1906 (34 Stat. 225). Any patent issued hereunder shall contain a reservation to the United States of all mineral deposits in the land patented: Provided, That such minerals so reserved shall be prospected for, mined, and removed only in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when order of business 796, being Senate bill 2620, was reached on the calendar, I asked that it might go over until I had time to acquaint myself with its provisions. I have had an opportunity since to discuss the matter with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and I have no further objection to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to recurring to Calendar 796?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2620) to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 11, after the word "and", to strike out "Puuahi" and insert "Pauahi (750 acres, more or less), in the district of south"; on page 18, line 4, after the word "one", to insert "nor more than five", and in the same line to strike out "year's" to insert 'years' ", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 203 (1), 203 (4), 204 (2), 207 (1), 208, 208 (1), 208 (5), 208 (6), 208 (7), 209 (1), 209 (2), 209 (3), 209 (4), 215 (1), 215 (2), 215 (3), 216, and 220 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 204 (2). Any available land, including land selected by the Commission out of a larger area, as provided by this act, as may not be immediately needed for the purposes of this act, may be returned to the Commissioner of Public Lands and may be leased by him as provided in subdivision (d) of section 73 of the Organic Act; any lease of Hawaiian homelands hereafter entered into shall contain a withdrawal clause, and the lands so leased shall be withdrawn by the Commissioner of Public Lands, for the purposes of this act, upon the Commission giving at its option not less than 1 nor more than 5 years' notice of such withdrawal: Provided, That the minimum withdrawal-notice period shall be specifically stated in such lease.

"SEC. 207 (1). (a) The Commission is authorized to lease to native Hawaiians the right to the use and occupancy of a tract of Hawaiian homelands within the following acreage limits per each lessee: (1) Not less than 1 nor more than 40 acres of agricultural lands; or (2) not less than 100 nor more than 500 acres of first-class pastoral lands; or (3) not less than 250 nor more than 1,000 acres of second-class pastoral lands: Provided, however, That lots of not more than 1 acre of any class of land may be leased as residence lots. The Commission is also authorized to grant licenses for terms of not to exceed 21 years in each case to public-utility companies or corporations as easements for railroad, telephone lines, electric power and light lines, gas mains, and the like.

"SEC. 208 (1). The original lessee shall be a native Hawaiian, not less than 21 years of age. In case two lessees either original or in succession marry, they shall choose the lease to be retained, and the remaining lease shall be transferred or canceled in accordance with the provisions of succeeding sections.

"SEC. 208 (5). The lessee shall not in any manner transfer to, or mortgage, pledge, or otherwise hold for the benefit of, any other person or group of persons or organizations of any kind, except a native Hawaiian or Hawaiians, and then only upon the approval of the Commission, or agree so to transfer, mortgage, pledge, or otherwise hold, his interest in the tract. Such interest shall not, except in pursuance of such a transfer, mortgage, or pledge to or holding for or agreement with a native Hawaiian or Hawaiians approved of by the Commission, or for any indebtedness due the Commission or for taxes, or for any other indebtedness the payment of which has been assured by the Commission, be subject to attachment, levy, or sale upon court process. The lessee shall not sublet his interest in the tract or improvements thereon.

"SEC. 208 (6). The lessee shall pay all taxes assessed upon the tract and improvements thereon. The Commission may in its discretion pay such taxes and have a lien therefor as provided by section 216 of this Act.

"SEC. 208 (7). The lessee shall perform such other conditions, not in conflict with any provision of this title, as the Commission may stipulate in the lease: Provided, however, That an original lessee shall be exempt from all taxes for the first 5 years from date of lease.

"SEC. 209 (1). Upon the death of the lessee his interest in the tract and the improvements thereon, including growing crops, either on the tract or in any collective contract or program, shall vest and be determined in the following manner. A lessee shall furnish the Commission, in writing, the name or names of such person or persons being a qualified native Hawaiian or Hawaiians, within the limits prescribed in the following sequence of succession, to whom he wishes his interest in the lease to be transferred after his death, this designation to be subject to the approval of the Commission: (1) In the widow or widower; (2) if there is no widow or widower, then in the children; (3) if there are no children, then in the widows or widowers of the children; (4) if there are no such widows or widowers, then in the grandchildren; (5) if there are no grandchildren, then in the brothers and sisters; (6) if there are no brothers or sisters, then in the widows or widowers of the brothers and sisters; (7) if there are no such widows or widowers of the brothers or sisters, then in the nephews and nieces.

"In the absence of such designation the Commission shall choose a qualified native Hawaiian or Hawaiians in accordance with the foregoing sequence, either individually or collectively, except that such successor or successors need not be 21 years of age.

"Upon the death of a lessee, or the cancelation of a lease by the Commission, or the surrender of a lease by the lessee, the Commission shall appraise the value of all such improvements and said growing crops and shall pay to the legal representative of the deceased lessee, or to the previous lessee, as the case may be, the value thereof, less any indebtedness due the Commission, or for taxes, or for any other indebtedness the payment of which has been assured by the Commission, from the previous lessee. Such appraisal shall be made by three appraisers, one of which shall be named by the Commission, one by the previous lessee or the legal representative of his estate, and the third shall be selected by the two appraisers hereinbefore mentioned.

"SEC. 209 (2). After the cancelation of a lease by the Commission in accordance with the provisions of sections 210 and 216 of this title, or the surrender of a lease by a lessee, the Commission is authorized to transfer the lease or to issue a new lease to any qualified Hawaiian regardless of whether or not he is related in any way by blood or marriage to the previous lessee.

"SEC. 209 (3). After the death of a lessee, a successor or successors as defined in section 208 of this title shall not during a period of not less than 6 months nor more than 2 years, the exact length of such period to be fixed by the Commission, be deemed to have violated any of the conditions enumerated in section 208 of this title, even though he is not a native Hawaiian and does not during this period, on his own behalf, occupy or use or cultivate the tract as a home or farm in accordance with the provisions of this title and the stipulations and provisions contained in the lease.

"SEC. 209 (4). Should any successor or successors to a tract be a minor or minors, the Commission may appoint a guardian therefor, subject to the approval of the court of proper jurisdiction. Such guardian shall be authorized to represent the successor or successors in all matters pertaining to the leasehold: Provided, That said guardian shall, in so representing such successor or successors, comply with the provisions of this title and the stipulations and provisions contained in the lease, except that said guardian may not be a native Hawaiian as defined in section 201 of this title.

"SEC. 215 (1). Each contract of loan with the lessee or any successor or successors to his interest in the tract shall be held subject to the following conditions, whether or not stipulated in the contract of loan: The amount of loans at any one time to any lessee of a tract of agricultural or pastoral land shall not exceed $3,000, and to any lessee of a residence lot shall not exceed $1,000: Provided, That where, upon the death of a lessee or the cancelation of a lease by the Commission or the surrender of a lease by the lessee, the Commission shall make the appraisal and payment provided by section 209 (1), the amount of such payment shall be considered as part or all, as the case may be, of any such loan without limitation as to the maximum amounts herein specified in this section.

"SEC. 215 (2). The loans shall be repaid upon an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual installments sufficient to cover (a) interest on the unpaid principal at the rate of 3 percent per annum, and (b) such amount of the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period not exceeding 30 years. The moneys received by the Commission from any installment paid upon such loans shall be covered into the fund. The payment of any installment due shall, with the concurrence therein of at least three of the five members of the Commission, be postponed in whole or in part by the Commission for such reasons as it deems good and sufficient and until such later date as it deems advisable. Such postponed payments shall continue to bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum on the unpaid principal and interest.

"SEC. 215 (3) In case of the borrower's death the Commission shall permit the successor or successors to the tract to assume the contract of loan subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) of this section. In case of the cancelation of a lease by the Commission or the surrender of a lease by a lessee, the Commission may, at its option, declare all annual installments upon the loan immediately due and payable or permit the successor or successors to the tract to assume the contract of loan subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) of this section.

"SEC. 216. The Commission may require the borrower to insure, in each amount as the Commission may by regulation prescribe, all livestock and dwellings and other permanent improvements upon his tract, purchased or constructed out of any moneys loaned from the fund; or in lieu thereof the Commission may directly take out such insurance and add the cost thereof to the amount of annual installments payable under the amortization plan. Whenever the Commission has reason to believe that the borrower has violated any condition enumerated in paragraphs (2), (4), (5), or (6) of section 215 of this title, the Commission shall give due notice and afford opportunity for a hearing to the borrower or the successor or successors to his interest in the tract as the case demands. If upon such hearing the Commission finds that the borrower has violated the condition the Commission may declare all annual installments immediately due and payable, notwithstanding any provision in the contract of loan to the contrary. The Commission shall have a first lien upon the borrower's or lessee's interest in his tract, growing crops, either on the tract or in any collective contract or program, dwellings, or other permanent improvements thereon, and his livestock, to the amount of all annual installments due and unpaid and of all taxes upon such tract and improvements paid by the Commission, and of all indebtedness of the lessee, the payment of which has been assured by the Commission. Such lien shall have priority over any other obligation for which the tract, said growing crops, dwellings, other improvements, or livestock may be security.

The Commission may, at such times as it deems advisable, enforce any such lien by declaring the borrower's interest in his tract, or his successor's interest therein, as the case may be, together with the said growing crops, dwellings, and other permanent improvements thereon, and the livestock, to be forfeited, the lease in respect to such tract canceled, and shall thereupon order the tract to be vacated and the livestock surrendered within a reasonable time. The right to the use and occupancy of the Hawaiian homelands contained in such tract shall thereupon revest in the Commission, and the Commission may take possession of the tract and the improvements and growing crops thereon: Provided, That the Commission shall pay to the borrower any difference which may be due him after the appraisal provided for in paragraph (1) of section 209 of this title has been made.

SEC. 220. The Commission is hereby authorized directly to undertake and carry on general water and other development projects in respect to Hawaiian homelands, and to undertake other activities having to do with the economic and social welfare of the homesteaders. The Legislature of the Territory is authorized to appropriate out of the Treasury of the Territory such sums as it deems necessary to provide the Commission with funds sufficient to execute such projects, to carry on its administration and maintenance activities, and to accumulate a revolving loan fund of $1,000,000. The Legislature is further authorized to issue bonds to the extent required to yield the amount of any sum so appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the consideration of unobjected to bills on the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, notified the Senate that the Speaker had appointed Mr. CANNON of Missouri an additional manager on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6692) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The message announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2291) to amend the act of May 25, 1933 (48 Stat. 73).

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, and Mr. CRAWFORD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5996) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 34, 35, 55, 76, 78, 87, 95, 96, 112, 113, 119, 133, and 134 to the bill, and concurred therein, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 22, 23, 56, 90, 92, 114, 132, 141, and 151 to the bill, and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5969) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 5969) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDITION OF LANDS TO YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park in the State of California, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. WAGNER, and Mr. NYE conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 5996, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 28, 1937.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 34, 35, 55, 76, 78, 87, 95, 96, 112, 113, 119, 133, and 134 to the bill (H. R. 5996) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "$131,700, of which $5,000 shall be available without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and Civil Service requirements for examination of estimates of appropriations and for other purposes."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "For personal services, including not to exceed $2,500 for the Secretary of the Board, $8,040."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "For equipment, transportation, and other necessary expenses, $575."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "$7,167,820."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$468,560, of which $13,000 shall be available for out-patient relief of the poor, including medical and surgical supplies, artificial limbs, and pay of physicians."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"Health Center: For the construction on the site of the Jones Elementary School at First and L Streets, Northwest, of a building for a Health Center, including necessary fixed equipment therefor, $165,000, of which sum $7,000 shall be available for preparation of plans and specifications, administration and inspection, including the employment of personal services without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided, That all buildings belonging to the District of Columbia shall be under the jurisdiction and control of the Commissioners of said District."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: Strike out the matter inserted and stricken out by said amendment and, on page 63 of the House engrossed bill, strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert ": Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, should they deem such action to be to the advantage of the District of Columbia, are hereby authorized to purchase a municipal asphalt plant at a cost not to exceed $30,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "$2,894,340".

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 151 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In line 1 of the said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "7" and insert "2".

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate agree to the House amendments to Senate amendments numbered 9, 22, 23, 56, 90, 92, 114, 132. 141, and 151 to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think that in the case of this appropriation bill, as I have expressed myself with regard to others, the Senator in charge of the bill should make a statement with respect to its provisions, and how it compares with the bill as passed by the House and with the appropriations for last year, what are the controversial items, and so forth.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the amount of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives is $123,001,304.85. The amount of the bill as reported to the Senate is $125,-161,879.85, or an increase of $2,160,575.

Mr. McNARY. Does that increase conform to the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget, and is it in conformity with the financial program of the President?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. There are two principal items in the billl which are above the Budget estimates. One is an item of $900,000 for a new reclamation project in Colorado, the transmountain diversion project. Next there is an increase above the Budget estimates of $2,200,000 for the construction of a national parkway, known as the Natchez Trace, beginning in Tennessee, and passing through Alabama into Mississippi.

Those are the two principal items which are above the Budget estimates.

Mr. McNARY. These items did not have the approval of the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. HAYDEN. No Budget estimates were submitted for them. The Natchez Trace appropriation is authorized by law. We did not appropriate the full amount of the authorization, but we did increase the amount above that appropriated by the House.

Mr. McNARY. I assume, then, that these items run counter to the President's financial program.

Mr. HAYDEN. We did not consult the Budget Bureau about them.

Mr. McNARY. Were those items in the House bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. In the House bill, for the Natchez Trace, there was $500,000. The committee increased the amount to $2,700,000, but within the authorization by law of $10,000,000 for that parkway and the Blue Ridge Parkway. The total amount of the appropriation will be $7,200,000. The authorization for this fiscal year is $10,000,000. It is authorized by law, but was not estimated for by the Budget Bureau.

There are other increases and shifts in the bill, I may say to the Senator. The committee tried to improve conditions, for instance, in the General Land Office. As the Senator from Oregon knows, and all western Senators know, there have been great delays in contested cases relating to the public domain, whether they be homesteads, oil leases, grazing leases, or other matters of that kind. We have tried to provide in this bill enough money for the investigation of these contested matters in the field and for their proper and expeditious treatment in Washington. The committee has added something to the appropriation for the Geological Survey for topographic maps, and so forth, but the net effect is as I have stated to the Senator. I have stated to him the two principal increases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendments reported by the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Office of Solicitor", on page 3, at the end of line 8, to change the appropriation for personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field from $275,000 to $286,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 11, to change the appropriation for personal services in the District of Columbia under the Division of Territories and Island Possessions from $55,520 to $58,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Division of Investigations", on page 3, line 20, after the word "hereunder" and the comma, to strike out "$416,000" and insert "$500,000"; and in line 21, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$27,000" and insert "$30,500", so as to read:

For investigating official matters under the control of the Department of the Interior; for protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; for protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation; for adjusting claims for swamplands and indemnity for swamplands; and for traveling expenses of agents and others employed hereunder, $500,000, including not exceeding $30,500 for personal services in the District of Columbia; not exceeding $38,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motorboats for the use of agents and others employed in the field service; and not to exceed $5,000 to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make a certificate of the amount of such expenditure as he may think it advisable not to specify, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, Department of the Interior", on page 8, line 6, before the word "of", to strike out "$240,000" and insert "$250,000"; and in line 7, before the word "for", to strike out "$75,000" and insert "$85,000", so as to read:

For printing and binding for the Department of the Interior, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, except the Alaska Railroad, the Geological Survey, Vocational Education, and the Bureau of Reclamation, $250,000, of which $55,000 shall be for the National Park Service, $85,000 for the Bureau of Mines, and $50,000 for the Office of Education, no part of which shall be available for correspondence instruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 15, to insert:

NATIONAL BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenditures of the National Bituminous Coal Commission in performing the duties imposed upon said Commission by the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, approved April 26, 1937 (Public, No. 48, 75th Cong.), including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings which, in the discretion of the Commission, are necessary for the efficient discharge of its responsibilities; contract stenographic reporting services; stationery and office supplies; purchase, rental, exchange, operation, maintenance, and repair of reproducing, photographing, and other such equipment, typewriters, calculating machines, mechanical tabulating equipment, and other office appliances and labor-saving devices; printing and binding; witness fees and fees and mileage in accordance with section 8 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937; not to exceed $12,500 for purchase, exchange, hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for use outside the District of Columbia; garage rentals; miscellaneous items, including those for public instruction and information deemed necessary by the Commission; and not to exceed $8,500 for purchase and exchange of newspapers, law books, reference books, and periodicals, $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 16, to insert:

Consumers' Counsel of the National Bituminous Coal Commission, salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenditures of the office of the Consumers' Counsel of the National Bituminous Coal Commission, in performing the duties imposed upon said office of Consumers' Counsel by the Btiuminous Coal Act of 1937, approved April 26, 1937 (Public, No. 48, 75th Cong.), including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, traveling expenses, printing and binding, contract stenographic reporting services, stationery and office supplies and equipment, and not to exceed $1,000 for books and periodicals, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 4, to insert:

PETROLEUM CONSERVATION DIVISION

Salaries and expenses, oil regulation and enforcement: For administering and enforcing the provisions of the act approved February 22, 1935 (49 Stat., p. 30), entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", as amended, and to include necessary personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations, traveling expenses, contract stenographic reporting services, rent, stationery, and office supplies, not to exceed $1,000 for necessary expenses of attendance at meetings and conferences concerned with the work of petroleum conservation when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $4,000 for printing and binding, not to exceed $500 for books and periodicals, and not to exceed $14,000 for the purchase, exchange, hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $285,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I assume that the language in italics is language not contained in the House bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. The amendments relating to the Petroleum Conservation Division and the National Bituminous Coal Commission are in exact accordance with the Budget estimates submitted to the Senate but not considered by the House.

Mr. McNARY. Why were they not considered by the House?

Mr. HAYDEN. By reason of the delay in the passage of the legislation that was enacted. The Senator will remember that the Guffey Coal Act was passed only quite recently. The estimates under it were not submitted in time to be included in the regular Budget estimates, which were made up a year ago.

Mr. McNARY. Do these appropriations carry out the provisions of the authorizations?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; they are authorized by law and were estimated for by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Later in the day, if the occasion should demand, may I offer an amendment to this provision?

Mr. HAYDEN. I would have no objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then I give notice that later in the consideration of the bill I shall offer an amendment to increase the sum in line 16 on page 10 from $3,000,000 to $3,600,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. Without any further information, the proposal is subject to a point of order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to give additional information.

When the members of the Bituminous Coal Commission made their estimates before the Bureau of the Budget they submitted a schedule which, as I recall, provided for the establishment of five regional offices. The total amount required to provide for these offices, for 23 statistical offices, and for general expense was something in excess of $5,000,000. The Budget Bureau cut the amount to $3,000,000, and sent to Congress an estimate for $3,000,000. The function of the five regional offices——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not care to exact from the Senator a historical discussion. I simply wish to know whether the item conforms to the rule. The Senator ought to know what the rule is.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have listened to the Senator from Oregon, and have tried to learn from him.

Mr. McNARY. Has the item had the sanction of a standing or select committee of the Senate? If not, has it back of it a Budget recommendation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It has neither the sanction of the committee nor the sanction of a Budget estimate.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. Then it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I grant that. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I wanted the Senator to state.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "War Minerals Relief Commission", on page 12, line 10, after the word "elsewhere" and the comma, to strike out "$18,000" and insert "$20,000"; so as to read:

Administrative expenses: For administrative expenses made necessary by section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases on contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes", approved March 2, 1919 (40 Stat., p. 1272), including personal services, without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations; traveling and subsistence expenses; supplies and all other expenses incident to the proper prosecution of this work, both in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General Land Office, on page 12, line 16, before the word "including", to strike out "$587,700" and insert "$637,700"; so as to read:

SALARIES

For Commissioner of the General Land Office and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $637,700, including one clerk, who shall be designated by the President, to sign land patents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 17, to insert:

Transcribing records: For special personal services in the District of Columbia to transcribe worn and defaced records of the General Land Office, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 20, to insert:

Binding records: For personal services in the District of Columbia, purchase and maintenance of equipment, and all other expenses requisite for and incidental to the establishment, operation, and maintenance of a branch of the Government Printing Office in the Interior Building, to bind, rebind, and repair books of record in the General Land Office, to be expended under the supervision of the Public Printer, $24,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General Expenses", on page 14, line 3, after the name "Interior" and the comma, to strike out "$675,000" and insert "$1,000,000", so as to read:

Surveying public lands: For surveys and resurveys of public lands, examination of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, making fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $1,000,000, including not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Indian Affairs—Salaries", on page 17, line 7, after the name "District of Columbia" and the comma, to strike out "$505,270" and insert "$510,090", so as to read:

For the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $510,090.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General Expenses", on page 17, line 16, after the word "available" to strike out "$32,000" and insert "$35,000"; so as to read:

For transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Bureau of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for radio, telegraph, and telephone toll messages on business pertaining to the Indian Service sent and received by the Bureau of Indian Affairs at Washington, and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, $35,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri asked that this item under general expenses on line 17, page 17, be passed over. At his request, until he can return to the Senate, I ask to have the amendment passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee,

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 23, after the word "bill" to strike out "therefore" and insert "therefore"; so as to read:

For advertising, inspection, storage, and all other expenses incident to the purchase of goods and supplies for the Indian Service and for payment of railroad, pipe-line, and other transportation costs of such goods and supplies, $700,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in payment for any services except bill therefor is rendered within 1 year from the time the service is performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 5, after the word "equipment" and the comma to strike out "$210,540" and insert "$216,540"; so as to read:

For pay of judges of Indian courts, pay of Indian police, and pay of employees engaged in the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, marihuana, and deleterious drugs among Indians, including traveling expenses, supplies, and equipment, $216,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 19, after the word "expenses" and the comma, to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$160,000", and in line 21, after the name "District of Columbia", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence may be allowed to Indians actually traveling away from their place of residence when assisting in organization work.

So as to read:

For expenses of organizing Indian chartered corporations, or other tribal organizations, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 986), including personal services, purchase of equipment and supplies, not to exceed $3,000 for printing and binding, and other necessary expenses, $160,000, of which not to exceed $25,000 may be used for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $3 per diem in lieu of subsistence may be allowed to Indians actually traveling away from their place of residence when assisting in organization work.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I did not quite catch the item on page 18. I wonder if I may ask the chairman of the subcommittee to have that amendment passed over.

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly. I can state the purpose of the increase, however. It is due to the application of the Wheeler-Howard Act to the State of Oklahoma; and the Senator from Oklahoma was very anxious to have the Budget estimate allowed. The Budget estimate was $160,000. The amount appropriated by the House was $100,000. The understanding of our committee was that practically the entire $60,000 is to be used in Oklahoma for organizing chartered corporations under the Wheeler-Howard Act. It is especially applicable to Oklahoma.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is, the additional amount?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. If I may make a statement at this particular time, I fully appreciate what the Senator from Arizona has stated, that this particular item is to be used for the purpose of organizing chartered corporations under the Wheeler-Howard Act.

Mr. HAYDEN. In Oklahoma.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The additional amount is to be used for that purpose; but, nevertheless, the original amount of $100,000 was to be used throughout the entire Indian area under the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act. Since the passage of that act considerable opposition has arisen; and I may say now that so far as the Senators from New Mexico are concerned, and so far as the Senators from some other States are concerned, including the proponent of the original Wheeler-Howard Act, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], inasmuch as the Indians themselves do not wish to carry on under the provisions of that act, and there is now pending before the Congress and before a standing committee of this body a bill for the repeal of the Wheeler-Howard Act, we do not think this particular item has any place in this appropriation bill.

Of course, if the Wheeler-Howard Act had been accepted by the Indians as a whole, there might have been some justification for the item; but my Indians in New Mexico have turned down the Wheeler-Howard Act and voted against it. The Wheeler-Howard Act was supposed to have for its purpose giving to the Indian the right to govern himself; yet, now that the Indian has turned it down, Congress is asked for an appropriation by which the Indian Office employees may go amongst the Indians in order to carry out and try to put into effect the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act.

Of course, I appreciate that every Senator knows more about his individual State than I do; but, so far as New Mexico is concerned, inasmuch as my Indians do not desire to be under the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act, I do not see that I would be justified in voting for an appropriation that will give the employees of the Indian Office the opportunity to travel back and forth over the entire State and try to insist on the Indians accepting the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act.

I believe that the proponents of that measure should know more about whether it is justifiable for Congress to appropriate some money to carry out its provisions. I know that, so far as New Mexico is concerned, we hope that Congress will not appropriate one dime by which to make it possible for the Indian Office to go into my State and force the Indians of the State to accept money which they do not want.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on line 19, page 18.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I should like to offer an amendment to the amendment, to read: "Provided, That no part of this money shall be used within the State of New Mexico."

Mr. McNARY. Where would the amendment come in the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. It would have to follow the proviso now in the bill at the end of page 18, and should read, "Provided further", and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "work" in line 25, page 18, and before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the words "Provided, that none of this money shall be used in the State of New Mexico."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, from my viewpoint there could be no objection to agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. Under the Wheeler-Howard Indian Reorganization Act every tribe of Indians had the right to vote on whether or not they would accept the provisions of the so-called Wheeler-Howard Act. The Navajo Tribe of Indians, the largest tribe, located in both New Mexico and Arizona, voted on this provision, and decided not to accept the provisions of the act. There is no provision of law whereby they can have a second vote; therefore, so far as they are concerned, the Navajos are not under the act, and so far as they are concerned, the act would not apply to them, and so far as they are concerned, the act is repealed.

So far as an amendment providing that no part of the funds hereby appropriated should be spent in New Mexico, the money would not be spent there, anyway, in my opinion, and there could be no point in trying to force the Indians of that State to accept the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico again stated.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk, and ask that it be stated in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, line 25, after the word "work" and before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure in the State of New Mexico.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in the light of the statement made by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have not any objection to the amendment to the amendment, and I think it is perfectly proper, but I do think the Senate ought to realize what it is appropriating this money for. The provision is:

For expenses of organizing Indian chartered corporations, or other tribal organizations, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 986), including personal services, purchase of equipment and supplies, not to exceed $3,000 for printing and binding, and other necessary expenses, $160,000, of which not to exceed $25,000 may be used for personal services in the District of Columbia.

In other words, we are asked to appropriate $25,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia to carry on work to get these Indians into these chartered companies under the so-called Wheeler-Howard Act. Likewise we are asked to appropriate $160,000 for other expenses. What is that for?

Mr. HAYDEN. The increase recommended by the Senate committee is for the organization of chartered corporations in Oklahoma. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] was very anxious that it be done.

With respect to the $25,000, the committee made careful inquiry in regard to that. The attorneys and others who draft such charters are employed out of Washington. There is a general form that is used in respect to such organizations, and for that reason there must be someone in the central office here to have general supervision over the entire matter throughout the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. While I sponsored the so-called Wheeler-Howard Act, I must say that there has been great waste of public money in the Indian Office, and they have employed many, many people from out of the city of Chicago and the city of New York, and a lot of uplifters, and sent them around to the Indian reservations throughout the country. Many of those people never saw an Indian reservation in their lives, and there is a great waste of public moneys on the part of the Indian Office at the present time.

Hearings have been held by the Committee on Indian Affairs, where the Indians themselves have appeared and complained about the matter, and have referred to the waste and the inefficiency. Since I have been connected with the Committee on Indian Affairs I have never known of as much waste of public money and as much extravagance and as much inefficiency as has been shown during the administration under Mr. Collier. I think it is time the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations should look into some of these appropriations and some of the waste that is going on at some of the Indian reservations throughout the country. As a matter of fact, it is a matter of ridicule to a great many of the people in the West. I know that in New Mexico and in my State and all through the West they are just held up to ridicule for many of the things that are going on.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the plan the Senator from Montana sponsored when he had his bill passed by the Senate was that the Indians should manage their own affairs.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. These chartered corporations and tribal organizations were to be for the purpose of carrying out that plan. Apparently the Senator has abandoned the idea that it is desirable for the Indians to manage their own affairs, and does not want them to organize in that way, but prefers to have their business done by the old Indian Bureau method.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is entirely wrong about that. I have been one of those who have advocated that the Indians carry on their own business as much as they possibly can. But let there be no mistake about it, the Indians are not today carrying on their own affairs. Testimony came out before the Committee on Indian Affairs showing that in New Mexico and in other States at the present time the Indian Office is going around controlling the elections of the Indians, and they have kept in vogue the same old practice of controlling the Indian councils that was in vogue under the Harding administration, when Mr. Fall was Secretary of the Interior. There is no difference, and today the Indians in my State have no more control over their affairs than they had before we passed the Wheeler-Howard bill. I was for the Wheeler-Howard bill because I thought the Indians were to get a new deal, but anyone who knows a thing about an Indian reservation in this county, and who knows how they are being run, knows of the waste and extravagance, and knows how the Indian Office has sent a lot of uplifters from New York City and Chicago and from other places, who would not know an Indian if they met him on the street, who never saw an Indian except in a moving-picture show in Chicago or some other place. They are sent out to tell the Indians how they should carry on their farming operations, how they should manage their tribal relations, how they should raise their stock and cattle.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator another question in connection with the Wheeler-Howard Act. That act authorized the expenditure of $2,000,000 a year for the acquisition of land. Neither the House nor the Senate committee agreed to allow the appropriation of that much money. Was that action wise, or unwise?

Mr. WHEELER. I think they were probably wise. I know nothing about the specific matter of the purchase of land. So far as my State is concerned, the Indians do not need any more land, and are not asking for any more land. I cannot speak for New Mexico or any other State with reference to that.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator spoke about cutting down expenditures. The principal expenditures authorized under the Wheeler-Howard Act were for the purchase of land.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know where the Indian Office got the money, but I know they have increased the personnel in that office and on the reservations, and we have heard on every hand of waste and inefficiency. One Indian appeared and testified, for instance, that in North Carolina, where there are 700 Indians, 300 are on relief, getting $30 a month. He said the Indians did not any longer walk in North Carolina, but that they ride in taxicabs now. The trouble with the whole Indian Office is that on many of the reservations they have no one who knows anything about Indians or the Indian traditions excepting what they have read out of the books.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The expenditures to which the Senator has referred are not expenditures made in the ordinary way by appropriations made in the Interior Department appropriation bill. Large sums of money have been made available to the Office of Indian Affairs out of the relief appropriations. I am quite sure that if the Senator will check up the matter he will find that almost invariably the expenditures which he criticises were expenditures from relief funds, and not from money carried in the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Referring to this particular item, I fully agree that the Wheeler-Howard Act was passed for the purpose of giving the Indians self-government, and one of the objections I have to this particular item is that it tends to lessen that self-government. Of course, if the Senator from any State desires that the act shall apply to his State, I am in favor of having him get what he wants; but for the very reason that I do not desire the Indians to have others impress their opinions upon them, and because I do not want the Office of Indian Affairs as a whole to be using Government money in order to impose their own particular desires upon the Indians, I oppose generally the particular item under consideration.

Mr. President, I do not want agents of the Indian Service to be running around the desert in my State with the idea of impressing their desires upon the Indians of my State. The Indians in my State today are thoroughly disgusted by reason of what has occurred in this respect heretofore. Those Indians today are more dissatisfied with the waste and extravagance indulged in by the Office of Indian Affairs than they were in the palmy days of Mr. Fall. The Office of Indian Affairs, in what it does, loses sight of the real objectives of the Congress and the administration in providing appropriations. That is what I object to. We do not want Indian agents by the hundreds running around the deserts of New Mexico, Arizona, or other States in Ford cars and imposing their wishes upon the Indians. However, if the Senator from Arizona desires this expenditure in his State, I am for him.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me on that point?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from New Mexico whether they think it was ever the intention of the law for Government funds to be spent by the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of the Interior to propagandize among the Indians in favor of this particular measure.

I have before me a magazine published by the Bureau of Indian Affairs dated March 1, 1937, to which I shall refer later in greater detail. This magazine is apparently published at Government expense, without any authority of law whatever. In it there is a discussion of the Wheeler-Howard Reorganization Act in which the Bureau is attempting to crack the whip over the heads of Indians in behalf of their acceptance of that act.

On page 3 of this magazine, published by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the edition of March 1, 1937, appears among other things this language:

> The Wheeler-Howard, or Indian Reorganization Act, was introduced in 1934. One of its many essential features was language giving the Secretary of the Interior power to bring the allotted lands into a condition where they could be used by the Indians, could be economically administered, could yield increased revenue in cash or kind to the Indians, and could be prevented from going to fee patent. The vested right of allottees to their equities was fully protected by the language, and the guardianship authority of the Secretary was not increased in principle by the language.
>
> A great uproar, directed against the whole of the Wheeler-Howard bill, made of the allotment section its principal talking point. Fear was thrown into the allotted Indians—fear that their holdings might be confiscated, that land might be taken from those who have and given to those who have not. No such consequence was intended or could have followed from the language of the bill.

And the following language is underlined in the document sent out from the Office of Indian Affairs:

> But the fear-nerve had been struck as though with a lash—

I presume that is what the Senator from New Mexico has been referring to here in the last few minutes.

I continue to read—

> reason and fact were of little avail; and in short, to get the other necessary things contained in the bill, the exceedingly important language about allotments was allowed to be stricken out.

Then the article goes on for some pages in the discussion of that measure.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] has been referring to the efforts of Indian agents in creating sentiment among the Indians. I recall that a few weeks ago, when the deficiency bill was before the Senate, the Senator from New Mexico made the statement that in fact there were more Indian agents in his territory than there were Indians.

Mr. CHAVEZ. And, Mr. President, I still stand by that statement.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator stands by his statement made at that time. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from New Mexico, or any other Senator who may be interested, to the use of Government funds to propagandize in favor of a particular measure.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Of course I hope the Senator from Missouri understands my position.

Mr. CLARK. I not only understand it but I agree with the position taken by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Wheeler-Howard Act was sponsored in this body by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. It was sponsored on the House side by former Representative Howard, of Nebraska. I happened to be a member of the Indian Affairs Committee of the House at that time; and because I wanted the Indians to get fair play, because I wanted the Indians to have self-government, I supported the Wheeler-Howard bill. But when I saw the Office of Indian Affairs setting aside all the efforts of the Indians in that direction, I became dissatisfied with the administration of the act.

If Senators wish to see dissatisfied Indians, they can find them almost anywhere throughout the United States. Senators will find dissatisfied Indians on the Klamath Reservation in Oregon; they will find them in the State of Montana; they will find them in the State of Washington. Indians from the latter State have been in my office within the last 6 or 7 days, making complaint. Senators will find dissatisfied Indians in New Mexico. Nowhere will they find Indians who are satisfied with the way in which expenditures have been made.

Mr. President, I am not complaining about legitimate expenses. In order to prove that, I may say that I think one of the best items in this bill is the item which will provide for a legitimate, honest expenditure in the State of Arizona in order to provide for a reclamation project which will put people on their feet; but when waste is seen, as I have seen it in New Mexico, I cannot see why the United States Government should furnish the Office of Indian Affairs with money with which to propagandize the Indians into accepting something they do not want.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, what is the status of the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now pending.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no objection to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] to the amendment reported by the committee on page 18, at the end of line 25.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the amendment of the committee on page 17, line 17, dealing with the general expenses of the Office of Indian Affairs, was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I should like to have that amendment considered at this time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I asked to have that amendment passed over temporarily so that I could go to my office and procure some exhibits which it seems to me should be put into the RECORD at this time.

Senators will recall that a few weeks ago, when the deficiency appropriation bill was before this body for consideration, the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] rose and offered an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill in behalf of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I do not recall the exact sum. Can the Senator from Arizona inform me as to the exact amount contained in his amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not recall it at the moment. It may have been $100,000.

Mr. CLARK. My recollection is that it was in the neighborhood of $100,000. The statement was made to the Senate at that time that this deficit had been incurred by reason of taking care of old and indigent Indians, by reason of an extraordinary drought and the extraordinary and unusual situation then existing in certain Indian territory. At that time I asked the Senator from Arizona, who is also the very able and efficient vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing and chairman of the Printing Committee of the Senate, whether any part of that deficiency had been incurred by the publication, unauthorized by law, of a magazine by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, conducted partly for the putting out of propaganda, not only as to Indian affairs, but as to other matters. It was the impression of the Senator from Arizona at that time that no part of the deficit in the Office of Indian Affairs has been incurred in that way.

Mr. President, I took the trouble to write to the Comptroller General of the United States and inquire as to the authority of law for this publication and the funds out of which this magazine was maintained.

I may say first, Mr. President, that I had previously in the Senate of the United States called attention to section 201 of the Criminal Code of the United States, having to do with the use of Government funds for propaganda. Inasmuch as that was some time ago, I take the liberty again of calling the attention of the Senate to that provision.

Section 201, title 18, of the Criminal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure of the United States, provides as follows:

SEC. 201. Use of appropriations to pay for personal service to influence Members of Congress to favor or oppose legislation: No part of the money appropriated by any act shall, in the absence of express authorization by Congress, be used directly or indirectly to pay for any personal service, advertisement, telegram, telephone, letter, printed or written matter, or other device—

Which, in my opinion, includes this magazine—

intended or designed to influence in any manner a Member of Congress, to favor or oppose, by vote or otherwise, any legislation or appropriation by Congress, whether before or after the introduction of any bill or resolution proposing such legislation or appropriation; but this shall not prevent officers and employees of the United States from communicating to Members of Congress on the request of any Member or to Congress, through the proper official channels, requests for legislation or appropriations which they deem necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business.

Any officer or employee of the United States—

And I assume that includes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs—

Any officer or employee of the United States who, after notice and hearing by the superior officer vested with the power of removing him, is found to have violated or attempted to violate this section, shall be removed by such superior officer from office or employment. Any officer or employee of the United States who violates or attempts to violate this section shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both. (July 11, 1919, c. 6, sec. 6, 41 Stat. 68.)

Mr. President, previous to the consideration of the deficiency bill in this Chamber I had addressed to the Comptroller General of the United States a letter requesting information as to this magazine, Indians at Work, I asked both the authority of law for its publication and the source from which the funds for its publication were derived. Having received no answer to the first letter, and the first telephonic request, I wrote a letter on March 30, 1937, formally requesting the information. On May 17, 1937, 6 weeks after I had requested the information, I received the following answer:

MY DEAR SENATOR: Further referece is made to your letter of March 30, 1937, ackowledged April 8, requesting information as to the appropriation charged for the Office of Indian Affairs' publication, Indians at Work, and the authority for such expenditure.

In reply to my request of April 8, 1937, for a report concerning said publication, the Secretary of the Interior advised me by letter of May 6, 1937—

Some 6 weeks after my request—

as follows:

Indians at Work is a multilithed pamphlet, prepared semimonthly by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. For your information there is enclosed a copy of circular letter no. 42, dated August 3, 1933, at which time this biweekly paper was first issued. Copies of this, as well as copies of all other E. C. W. circulars have heretofore been sent your office. Approval of this circular was given by Mr. J. J. McEntee, Assistant Director of Emergency Conservation Work, and constitutes our authority for this work. This pamphlet was initiated to interest—

I should like Senators present to listen to this, because it is a most illuminating statement by the Secretary of the Interior and the Director of the P. W. A.—

This pamphlet was initiated to interest emergency conservation enrollees and workers in the emergency organization and all expenses in connection therewith up until about 2 years ago were paid from emergency conservation funds.

Mr. President, it appears from the statement of the Secretary of the Interior that it is not only necessary to give a man or woman a job, put him to work, and take him off the relief rolls and support him, but it is necessary to use public funds to get out propaganda literature to interest him in the work of the conservation program.

I continue reading from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior:

As more and more general service data was included, one-half of the expense of preparation was charged to the general appropriation for "Support of Indians and administration of Indian property," the other half being borne by "Emergency conservation funds." This arrangement exists at the present time.

In other words, Mr. President, it is demonstrated out of the mouth of the Secretary of the Interior himself that at least a large part of the deficit which was to be covered by the amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill defeated by the Senate 6 or 7 weeks ago was incurred for the publication of this propaganda magazine. The other half is apparently taken from funds set up by the Congress of the United States for the relief of unemployment and for the care of distressed and indigent citizens of the United States. The Secretary goes on to say:

The interest of the Indians (and others) was so great that it was necessary to increase the number of copies of each issue until at the present time approximately 12,000 copies are being issued twice a month.

I assume that, among others who are interested in this magazine, were a vast number of special Indian agents to whom the Senator from New Mexico has just referred.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. May I say to the Senator from Missouri that the expenditures he has suggested would not be sufficient to satisfy the Indian agents in my State.

Mr. CLARK. I assume, then, that the Indian agents in New Mexico are being discriminated against. I think they would have a just ground of complaint to the Senator from New Mexico.

The letter of the Secretary of the Interior continues:

The pamphlet is multilithed and assembled in the Miscellaneous Service Division of the Department of the Interior. It is distributed through the Mails and Files Section of the Indian Office.

Then the Comptroller General goes on to say:

The appropriation for emergency conservation work, one of the appropriations referred to in the Secretary's letter, supra, was made in the deficiency appropriation act of June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1597, 1601), and the other appropriation referred to was made in the Department of the Interior Appropriation Act of the same date (49 Stat. 1757, 1778)—

The exact items covered by the increase in the appropriation now recommended by the Committee on Appropriations—

The copy of circular letter no. 42, referred to in the Secretary's letter, is enclosed herewith.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Comptroller General and the enclosure be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter and enclosure were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,

The copy of circular letter No. 42, referred to in the Secretary's letter, is enclosed herewith.

I trust the foregoing is the information desired by you in the matter.

Acting Comptroller General of the United States.

[Enclosure]

INDIAN EMERGENCY CONSERVATION WORK, CIRCULAR LETTER NO. 42, BIWEEKLY PAPER

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, August 3, 1933.

To Superintendents and Field Personnel:

This Office is planning to get out a biweekly paper, in pamphlet form, covering Emergency Conservation Work on the various reservations. We shall endeavor to make it interesting and informative, and we believe it will be appreciated in the field.

We should like your cooperation in this matter. Please furnish stories of human interest, production, accomplishments, news stories, pictures, humorous anecdotes, etc. "Before and after" photographs will be appreciated. Articles dealing with recreational activities, family and other camps, will be of interest. These articles should be submitted as often as possible or at least once a week.

Furthermore, we are planning to publish in each number the best story and report submitted, with credit given to the agency or person furnishing it. If your agency is doing something special, along any line of the program, let the others hear about it.

Please remember that the production end should be emphasized. Production and accomplishments are important. While Emergency Conservation Work is primarily a relief measure, we want to know the work accomplished and the benefits received by the Indians.

It is believed the paper will be of help and interest to the field force and the Indians. If you like it, let us know; if you don't, send suggestions as to improvement.

JOHN COLLIER, Commissioner.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, having reference to section 201 of the Criminal Code let us see what this magazine, Indians at Work, consists of.

The first item on page 1 is an editorial written by John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

Indians at Work, a News Sheet for Indians and the Indian Service, volume IV, March 1, 1937, no. 14.

I ask unanimous consent at this point, Mr. President, that this article, comprising eight multilithed pages, be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Indians, it is often said, have in the Supreme Court their best friend. So far as courts go, the statement certainly is true; and looking at Indian affairs across the 105 years since the John Marshall decision on the Cherokee case, one recognizes that the Supreme Court has been the Indians' best friend not only among courts but within the Government.

Indians, therefore, will be particularly concerned over the debate now raging in connection with the President's Court message to Congress.

All of those who are crying to high heaven against the President's proposal, admit that some of the reforms he is advocating are necessary. The attack against the President's proposal strikes chiefly at the part which deals with membership upon the Supreme Court. Efforts are being made to break this part of the reform off from the other parts.

A legislative analogy, which will be understood by Indians, is here mentioned.

As Indians well know, the Secretary of the Interior as guardian of Indian property exercises powers very broad indeed. These powers are necessary to effective guardianship. They are not enumerated here; enough that they are broad and usually are unreviewable.

But one power, and, as it happens, the power which the Indians most need for the Secretary to have and to exercise, is not granted under existing law.

This is the power to do those things which would get the allotted lands back into a state of consolidation, of simplified legal status, of availability for Indian use, and of economical administration. Such a result is necessary if the lands (a) are to be used by the Indians; and (b) are not ultimately to pass to the auction block; while (c) in the meantime they are costing so much to administer that frequently the administrative outlay exceeds the income yield from the land.

Inasmuch as the value of Indian allotted lands far exceeds the value of Indian unallotted land, and more Indians are dependent for their future upon allotted than upon unallotted land, the importance of getting some device for salvaging the allotted lands is too clear to need argument.

The Wheeler-Howard, or Indian Reorganization Act, was introduced in 1934. One of its many essential features was language giving the Secretary of the Interior power to bring the allotted lands into a condition where they could be used by the Indians, could be economically administered, could yield increased revenue in cash or kind to the Indians, and could be prevented from going to fee patent. The vested right of allottees to their equities was fully protected by the language, and the guardianship authority of the Secretary was not increased in principle by the language.

A great uproar, directed against the whole of the Wheeler-Howard bill, made of the allotment section its principal talking point. Fear was thrown into the allotted Indians—fear that their holdings might be confiscated, that land might be taken from those who have and given to those who have not. No such consequence was intended or could have followed from the language of the bill, but the fear nerve had been struck as though with a lash; reason and fact were of little avail; and in short, to get the other necessary things contained in the bill, the exceedingly important language about allotments was allowed to be stricken out.

Therefore, today as 3 years ago, Indian-allotted lands are in thousands of cases unusable by the Indians; administrative costs, measured against land yield, continue to increase each year; each year a larger part of all the allotted lands drifts into the heirship status and then into the triple-complicated heirship status that comes with the third generation. Through consequences of allotment, which the original Wheeler-Howard bill would have corrected but which remain uncorrected, more land is being lost to Indian use each year than can possibly be compensated for through new land purchase under the Indian Reorganization Act.

The debate over the President's court proposals is taking a course not unlike the debate over the Wheeler-Howard Act in 1934. Let us pray that the course of legislation will not be the same.

The President's court proposals are numerous, and they are important at all levels, but clearly the most important of them, and likewise the most reasonable of all of them, is the proposal for additional judges upon the Supreme Court.

So conservative, actually, is the Supreme Court feature of the President's plan, that it turns out to have been proposed 24 years ago by none other than that member of the present Supreme Court who is ranked with the ultra-conservatives, Mr. Justice McReynolds. He made the proposal when Attorney General, in 1913.

There is no constitutional requirement as to the number of Supreme Court Justices. The number has been varied from time to time by Congress.

Whenever, through death or resignation, a vacancy arises upon the Supreme Court, it is the President who nominates the new judge. As most of the judges are elderly, it follows that any President at any time, as a mere result of deaths, might be able to "pack" the Supreme Court. If resignations and deaths happen not to come, then the President and Congress may find themselves confronted by a court "packed" by some earlier President whose political philosophy may have been the opposite of the prevailing philosophy and whose choice of judges may have been made at an earlier and different economic or social epoch.

A word as to the mere dispatch of business by the Supreme Court with its present number of members. The critics of the President's plan are announcing that the Supreme Court is not behind hand on its calendars. That is true, because, since February 13, 1925, the right of a hearing of the Supreme Court has been drastically curtailed. For a vast range of cases, this right has been made into a privilege, rarely accorded, and no longer a right. The aggrieved party petitions the Supreme Court to review his case. About eight hundred of these petitions for a writ of certiorari go before the Court each year. Frequently the cases are momentous ones, and generally they are complicated cases with a long anterior record. The appeals admitted as a matter of rare privilege are likely to be just as important and just as complicated as the smaller class of appeals submitted as a matter of right. Almost never is oral argument permitted upon these petitions. Usually they are denied, and almost never is an explanation vouchsafed by the Court. There is a widespread belief that these petitions often are disposed of by a single judge, and even that the research leading to a decision is frequently delegated to secretaries. The common belief almost necessarily is a correct belief; this follows from a merely statistical consideration of the number of petitions disposed of each year.

There comes to mind, as an illustration, a single one of the approximately 800 petitions denied by the Supreme Court in one of the years 5 or 6 years back.

This was a noted cases arising out of a century-old conflict over land titles in the Pueblo country of New Mexico.

Both the courts and Congress had recognized that the Pueblo Indians' titles to various areas had not been extinguished.

Congress had legislated that certain of these titles could be extinguished, but that compensation must be granted. And pursuant to this legislation, the titles had been extinguished; but in certain important instances no compensation had been granted.

In other cases, the Pueblo Lands Board had ignored the findings of its own appraisers and arbitrarily had slashed the compensation.

Thus, assuming that the Constitution applied to Indians, there was an apparent denial of due process and a taking of property without compensation.

The case was handled for the Indians by competent attorneys. It was brief in extenso, and behind the brief lay a volume of record, and behind that prior Supreme Court opinions pointing toward action favorable to the Indians if a petition for certiorari were granted. The essential subject matter, which would need to have been read to determine the admissibility of the appeal, ran into hundreds of pages.

Knowing the policy of the Supreme Court toward petitions for certiorari, and knowing that under conditions as they existed, this policy was in fact a necessary one, because otherwise the Court would be swamped utterly by the cases admitted for review, those who prepared the Pueblos' petition and those who financed it entertained almost no hope of getting the case into the Supreme Court at all. They justifiably believed that if they did get into the Court they would win.

It was a matter, of course, to have the petition denied and denied without explanation. And out of court, without a hearing, without a word as to the reason why, went this case, along with hundreds of others, at the October term of the Court. Later, Congress, acting on a unanimous report by its Senate and House Indian Committee, provided justice and gave the compensation which the Court had refused to hear arguments about. Even the Budget concurred. Such remedy is, of course, not to be hoped for in 999 of every 1,000 slighted cases.

The above case will help Indians to realize that there are multiple reasons for the President's proposal that added Justices shall be placed on the Supreme Court to increase its power to do business and to help bear the load of elder Justices.

The fundamental reason for the President's Supreme Court proposal clearly is one of social policy—it is to insure a court possessed of a frame of mind receptive toward modern solutions for modern problems.

But, in addition, it is a proposal to get the Supreme Court into a shape, in the matter of sheer manpower, to perform its functions as a court of last resort, passing as a real court upon Constitution controversies applied to particular cases. The Court as now made up could not meet its responsibility if every Justice among the nine were a Solomon of wisdom and a Napoleon of execution.

It was never the intent of the Constitution or of the people that the Court should delegate to one of its members the practical determination of issues in litigation under conditions where he in turn would be compelled to delegate to a secretary much or all of the research upon which his decision would be predicated.

It is no friendly act, either to the Constitution or the present Court, to demand that such an un-American way of handling business shall continue to be forced upon the Supreme Court.

* * * * * * *

Is the debate over the Supreme Court a proper subject matter for an editorial in Indians at Work? Decidedly, yes. In my first paragraph Indians are reminded of their own peculiar indebtedness to and dependency on the Supreme Court. But, in addition, Indians are wholly concerned with the preservation and the increase of efficient, productive democracy in the United States. No debate, reaching, as the Court debate does, to the heart of the human and social problem of our country can be outside the discussions and concern of Indians—the most recently enfranchised of our citizens and the individuals of the whole country most dependent upon the Federal institution.

JOHN COLLIER,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLARK. I do not desire to detain the Senate by reading the editorial further than is sufficient to connect the author of the article and anyone who approves of it with an absolute open and flagrant violation of section 201.

I refer again to the first propaganda effort in regard to the Wheeler-Howard or Indian Reorganization Act.

This appears on page 3:

The Wheeler-Howard or Indian Reorganization Act was introduced in 1934. One of its many essential features was language giving the Secretary of the Interior power to bring the allotted lands into a condition where they could be used by the Indians, could be economically administered, could yield increased revenue in cash or kind to the Indians, and could be prevented from going to fee patent. The vested right of allottees to their equities was fully protected by the language, and the guardianship authority of the Secretary was not increased in principle by the language.

A great uproar—

This could only be directed toward the use of the horde of Indian agents and Indian contractors with a view toward influencing the action of Senators and Members of Congress in violation of section 201—

A great uproar, directed against the whole of the Wheeler-Howard bill, made of the allotment section its principal talking point. Fear was thrown into the allotted Indians—fear that their holdings might be confiscated, that land might be taken from those who have and given to those who have not. No such consequence was intended or could have followed from the language of the bill, but the fear nerve had been struck as though with a lash—

That language is underlined—reason and fact were of little avail——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. My understanding its they not only sent out what the Senator is reading, but in addition they sent out news letters to all the Indian reservations of the country, and such news letters were and are nothing more than propaganda of one kind or another.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator agree with me, in view of the fact that legislation was already pending for the repeal or for the modification of the so-called Indian reservation act, the Wheeler-Howard bill, that the sending out of this matter to Indian agents and to the Indians, some of whom were voters in various States affected, could only be intended for the purpose of influencing the action of Congress, in violation of section 201 of the Criminal Code?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is any question about it. I think that, as a matter of fact, in some of their propaganda they have expressly mentioned the names of various Senators. I must say that the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs is probably the best propaganda agent in the United States.

Mr. CLARK. I think this pamphlet which I hold in my hand completely demonstrates that to be a fact.

Mr. WHEELER. As a propagandist he is excellent. As an executive of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, in my judgment, he has been a complete failure. That is not only my judgment about it, but I think that is the judgment, if we could get a vote upon it, of everybody connected with the Indian Bureau for a great period of years. The whole Indian administration is in the most chaotic condition it has ever been.

Mr. CLARK. I think the Senator will agree that the man who devotes himself very largely to propaganda is likely to neglect his duties as an executive.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator from Montana has said. I think I should remind him that we participate in these appointments. In the number of years I have been here through various administrations I think the Senate has paid very little attention to the consideration of nominees for the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It seems to be a very unfortunate bureau. No President has ever thought it necessary, apparently, to select a man with any executive ability, any initiative, any business experience, any common sense, and therefore the administration of the Indian Bureau is not now unusual. From the very beginning of the Wilson administration we have had men there such as one who, in one case, broke into tears when discussing a very practical matter. That is where we are now and probably will continue to be until we pay more attention to the interest and joint responsibility which we have in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, as to the conduct of the affairs of the Indian Bureau, I express no opinion whatever. I am directing myself to a specific violation of the law and to a very vicious custom, which has apparently grown up in some of the executive departments, of using public funds for propagandizing purposes in absolute, flagrant, and open violation of the law.

As to the merits of the Indian Bureau reorganization bill, I am frank to say I do not know anything about it and express no opinion one way or the other. As to the administration of the Office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I express no opinion one way or the other, because I do not know anything about it.

I am inviting the attention of Senators to this matter of propaganda. The remarks of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] may be entirely correct, but what I am bringing to the attention of the Senate is not an omission in the examination and consideration of the confirmation of an appointee to be Commissioner of Indian Affairs but evidence of the repeated flouting of the law on the part of the heads of executive bureaus and departments in using public funds for propaganda purposes. I intend to make further reference to these departments to show, not only with regard to the Bureau of Indian Affairs but with regard to other bureaus and other matters which have nothing in the world to do with Indian affairs, that this publication to which I have referred is an absolute violation of section 201 of the Criminal Code.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have taken considerable interest in Indian affairs, because they come constanly before the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member. The criticism which has been visited on the head of the administration of Indian affairs might well be passed on down through its various officials, because, so far as I have been able to determine, one of the greatest troubles is that we have too many white people employed to look after Indian affairs. I have never seen so many employees of various kinds. To give an illustration, the Klamath Indians in Oregon, I believe, who were supposed to be well to do because they had large quantities of timber which were being sold, were in charge of a number of employees who, it seems, were being paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the timber. There was a little reservation of some 20 miles square, and there were 57 white employees. Fifty-four of the fifty-seven white employees each had an automobile to travel around on the little piece of ground which the Indians owned.

They not only have automobiles furnished by the Bureau of Indian Affairs and paid for out of the Indians' funds, but they all receive good salaries. Most of them receive from $2,000 or $2,100 up to as high as $4,000 or $5,000. Fifty-four of them each had automobiles, and the only ones who did not have automobiles were three unfortunate stenographers, as I remember, who were left out for some reason. I do not know why they should have been left out, because the other 54 employees out of the 57 each had an automobile.

I think, in the interest of protection of the Indians, this body ought to have a committee which will look into these matters and see that the Indians are honestly dealt with and that the money appropriated for them goes to the Indians and not to those who would exploit the Indians.

Mr. CLARK. Let me ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. I know the great ability and long experience of the Senator from Tennessee, one of the most useful members of the Appropriations Committee. Does the Senator know anything peculiar to the Bureau of Indian Affairs which entitles its head to set at defiance the statutes of the United States by using public funds for propagandizing purposes?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not at all, and I am utterly opposed to it, but I have been unable to get any kind of information from the Office of Indian Affairs during the Republican administration as well as during the Democratic administration.

Mr. CLARK. I am trying to give the Senator some information. Let me finish reading the paragraph referring to the Wheeler-Howard Act which I was reading a few moments ago when I was interrupted:

> No such consequence was intended or could have followed from the language of the bill, but the fear nerve had been struck as though with a lash; reason and fact were of little avail; and, in short, to get the other necessary things contained in the bill, the exceedingly important language about allotments was allowed to be stricken out.
> Therefore, today as 3 years ago, Indian allotted lands are in thousands of cases unusable by the Indians; administrative costs, measured against land yield, continue to increase each year; each year a larger part of all the allotted lands drift into the heirship status and then into the triple-complicated heirship status that comes with the third generation. Through consequences of allotment, which the original Wheeler-Howard bill would have corrected but which remain uncorrected, more land is being lost to Indian use each year than can possibly be compensated for through new land purchase under the Indian Reorganization Act.

Does the Senator have any doubt, in view of the measures proposed for modification of the Wheeler-Howard Reorganization Act and the measures for the repeal of the Wheeler-Howard Reorganization Act, that that is intended purely and simply as an effort to influence the action of Congress?

Mr. McKELLAR. In my judgment, there is a clique in the Office of Indian Affairs which wants to run that Bureau without regard to the Congress. The only interest they have in the Congress at all is to get appropriations which will enable them to carry out their aims and purposes. They think practically nothing of the Indians. I am utterly ashamed of the administration of the Office of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator have any doubt the language I have just read is a bare-faced attempt to influence Congress as to future action by using public funds in violation of section 201 of the Criminal Code?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt about it. I want to give the Senator the favorite answer to the question as to why they are spending money. Their favorite answer is, "Oh, well, it does not make any difference. It comes out of the Indians' own funds. It comes out of the tribal funds." That is one of the favorite answers to any question that may be asked about the expenditure of money—"Oh, it does not come out of the Government. It comes out of the tribal funds"—as much as to say that when it comes out of tribal funds anyone of the officials of the Indian Office has the right to take what he wants.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] has just stated on his responsibility as a Senator that not only are these funds being used for the purpose of influencing Congress in violation of law, but they are actually being used to influence the Indians, as the Senator from New Mexico believes, in detriment to their own interests and rights.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. It is provided in some of the regulations issued that the Indians shall be hired at a per diem of $3 in order to carry out the propaganda of the Indian Office which it has in mind. The Senator from Tennesse is correct. Not only does the Indian Office disregard Congress, but it has no regard whatsoever for the Indians.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. My judgment is that of the money we are going to appropriate this afternoon, presumably for the Indians, the Indians will get very little. We will build houses—$10,000, $12,000, $15,000 houses—but not for the Navajos. We will provide typewriters, but not for the Indian girls. We will provide automobiles by the hundred. In my State it was testified last summer, before the honorable Senator from Oklahoma, that there were over 700 automobiles in one agency alone, over that many trucks, but not for the Indians. We may send an Indian girl to Phoenix, Ariz.; and yet that poor little creature, prepared so that she can pound a typewriter, after she gets back to the reservation will be herding a bunch of goats within 3 weeks. We have people in my State now, some of them from New Jersey, teaching the Navajos to pound silver, and long-haired girls from the city of New York teaching them to dance—people from the eastern sections of the country teaching the Navajos of my State!

I do not object to providing money, and the Congress has always been good to the Indian, but the difficulty has been that we have had too much bureau and not enough Indian.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with the statement of the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. It is like the old cry of "Lo, the poor Indian!" I do not know anything about Indian affairs, but I was just looking at the statute which the Senator says is being violated, and I should like to know why this propaganda is being sent to Members of the Congress.

Mr. CLARK. I am sorry the Senator from Indiana has not had more opportunity to examine the statute; but if he will examine it he will find that the statute applies to the use of public funds not only as to propagandizing matters addressed to Members of the House of Representatives and Members of the United States Senate, but as to anything used in any way, by telephone, telegraph, mail, printed matter, multilith matter, or anything else, for the purpose of ultimately influencing the action of Members of Congress.

If the Senator from Indiana will listen to what I now intend to read from this section, he will see the point to which I have been addressing my remarks. We have accidentally entered upon the discussion of a phase of the internal affairs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to which I did not presently desire to address myself. I read the extracts from Mr. Collier's magazine, "Indians at Work", with regard to the Wheeler-Howard Act, simply as preliminary to reading certain other extracts.

Passing by for the moment his effort to influence Congress on the Wheeler-Howard Indian reorganization measure, Mr. Collier proceeds to a discussion of the measure intended to pack the Supreme Court of the United States—certainly not a matter immediately concerned with the affairs of the Indian Bureau, and certainly something which falls within the purview of section 201 of the Criminal Code of the United States.

Having given a very unfavorable review of the action of Congress with regard to the Wheeler-Howard Reorganization Act, because the Congress of the United States had had the effrontery to amend a bill sponsored by the Interior Department, by striking out one provision of which Mr. Collier seemed to approve, and having berated Congress over several pages for that assumption of authority, Mr. Collier, over his own signature, in this publication put out at Government expense, continues:

> The debate over the President's court proposals is taking a course not unlike the debate over the Wheeler-Howard Act of 1934. Let us pray that the course of legislation will not be the same.

And you may be certain that when Mr. Collier prays that the course of legislation by the Congress of the United States will not be the same, every Indian agent, every employee of the Office of Indian Affairs, every contractor selling supplies to the Bureau of Indian Affairs will echo the same prayer. Mr. Collier is doubtless familiar with the old saying that "the most sensitive nerve in the human anatomy is the nerve leading to the pocketbook." He also knows that when he says, "Let us pray", those depending on his favor for enrichment or support will not only fall upon their marrow bones to pray but will get up and get busy to try to propagandize Congress for his wishes.

The debate over the President's court proposals is taking a course not unlike the debate over the Wheeler-Howard Act of 1934. Let us pray——

Let us pray—Indian agents, contractors, everyone dependent upon the favor of the Bureau of Indian Affairs—

Let us pray that the course of legislation will not be the same.

The President's court proposals are numerous, and they are important at all levels; but clearly the most important of them, and likewise the most reasonable of all of them, is the proposal for additional judges upon the Supreme Court.

So conservative, actually, is the Supreme Court feature of the President's plan that it turns out to have been proposed 24 years ago by none other than that member of the present Supreme Court who is ranked with the ultraconservatives.

"Now, you poor, benighted Indians, we are trying to do something for your welfare. Every Indian within the sound of my voice or the reach of my magazine, take notice, because you get allotments. Every agent gets a salary, and every contractor makes rich profits."

It turns out to have been proposed 24 years ago by none other than that member of the present Supreme Court who is ranked with the ultraconservatives, Mr. Justice McReynolds. He made the proposal when Attorney General in 1913.

And I am sure that every Indian for whose welfare Mr. Collier was so deeply concerned when he used Government funds in violation of the law to send out this propaganda document was thoroughly convinced as to the merits of the Supreme Court proposal when Mr. Collier told him that at one time Mr. Justice McReynolds had said something that could be construed as an advocacy of this proposal.

Then Mr. Collier goes on:

There is no constitutional requirement as to the number of Supreme Court Justices. The number has been varied from time to time by Congress.

And I am sure every Indian in the United States will be relieved as to his future welfare when he receives that assurance from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Whenever, through death or resignation, a vacancy arises upon the Supreme Court, it is the President who nominates the new judge. As most of the judges are elderly, it follows that any President at any time, as a mere result of deaths, might be able to pack the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I gladly yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Has the Senator seen any of the recent magazines in which a compromise may have been urged? I did not know whether or not the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had now told the Indians to be for a compromise.

Mr. CLARK. I dare say that is true, Mr. President, although I have pursued the matter no further than the original exhibit.

If resignations and deaths happen not to come—

Says Mr. Collier—

then the President and Congress may find themselves confronted by a Court packed by some earlier President whose political philosophy may have been the opposite of the prevailing philosophy, and whose choice of judges may have been made at an earlier and different economic or social epoch.

A word as to the mere dispatch of business by the Supreme Court with its present number of members.

Having discussed the general background of this epochal legislation, Mr. Collier, as the father of the Indians, so to speak, representing the Great White Father at Washington, or at least the stepfather of the Indians, proceeds to educate them in such matters—ordinarily considered matters for lawyers rather than for laymen, but proper for consideration by the Indians—as writs of certiorari, and matters of that sort. Having demonstrated his capacity to the Indian Service upon matters of general constitutional theory, it was only a step by the noble Collier to proceed to the elucidation of such highly technical matters of law as the writ of certiorari.

The critics of the President's plan are announcing that the Supreme Court is not behindhand on its calendars. That is true, because, since February 13, 1925, the right of a hearing of the Supreme Court has been drastically curtailed. For a vast range of cases, this right has been made into a privilege, rarely accorded, and no longer a right. The aggrieved party petitions the Supreme Court to review his case. About 800 of these petitions for a writ of certiorari go before the Court each year. Frequently the cases are momentous ones, and generally they are complicated cases with a long anterior record.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not surprised that Mr. Collier is in favor of a reorganization of the Supreme Court. As a matter of fact, long before the President sent his message to Congress, Mr. Collier wanted to reorganize the lower courts. He wanted to set up seven or eight traveling judges to go all over the United States and hear Indian cases only. That provision was in the original bill which he sent down to Congress. He wanted, I think, eight or nine special judges to hear Indian cases only, and wanted to take the jurisdiction away from the present Federal district judges; but, of course, Congress struck out that provision. I am not surprised that he now wants to get the Indians lined up to pack the Court with six additional judges; but I am wondering whether or not he has changed his first opinion, and whether the Senator has seen any of his later bulletins.

Mr. CLARK. I am ashamed to say to the Senator from Montana that the first bulletin was sufficient for me. So complete a case was made in that bulletin that I have not pursued the matter further. It took me 7 weeks from the time I officially made the inquiry on my responsibility as a Senator to get any information at all as to this magazine, and I figured that if I undertook to pursue the inquiry as to subsequent issues of the magazine I should be involved in almost interminable delay, and I wish to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. Collier then goes into a rather lengthy discussion of one particular case in which he feels that the Supreme Court made an error in refusing to grant a writ of certiorari, stating, however, that the lawyers for the appellants in that case, when they filed the application for writ of certiorari, had so little confidence in the merits of the case that they had almost no hope of having it granted by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Then Mr. Collier goes on, and this is certainly clearly within the statute—that is, section 201—

The above case will help Indians to realize that there are multiple reasons for the President's proposal that added Justices shall be placed on the Supreme Court to increase its power to do business and to help bear the load of elder Justices.

The fundamental reason for the President's Supreme Court proposal—

I am sure the Indians will be glad to know—clearly is one of social policy; it is to insure a Court possessed of a frame of mind receptive toward modern solutions for modern problems.

But, in addition, it is a proposal to get the Supreme Court into a shape, in the matter of sheer man-power, to perform its functions as a court of last resort, passing as a real Court upon constitutional controversies applied to particular cases. The Court, as now made up, could not meet its responsibility if every Justice among the nine were a Solomon of wisdom and a Napoleon of execution.

It was never the intent of the Constitution—

I am sure the Indians will be glad to know this—or of the people that the Court should delegate to one of its members the practical determination of issues in litigation under conditions where he, in turn, would be compelled to delegate to a secretary much or all of the research upon which his decision would be predicated.

It is no friendly act, either to the Constitution or the present Court, to demand that such an un-American way of handling business shall continue to be forced upon the Supreme Court.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield gladly.

Mr. WHEELER. There are seven Indian reservations in my State, and, to show how little influence the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has with those Indians, not one of those long-haired Indians has ever written me a letter about the Supreme Court.

Mr. CLARK. They apparently were not affected by Mr. Collier's great constitutional argument.

Mr. WHEELER. They have not paid any attention to it. They do not pay any attention to him on this or anything else. Nevertheless, I appreciate the fact that he is trying to get the Indian vote lined up against the Senators from the various States where there are Indian reservations.

Mr. CLARK. And the Indian agent vote. The Senator from Montana, of course, is familiar with the fact that there are a large number of Senators on this floor and a number of Members in the other body of the Congress who represent States in which the Indian agent influence might be very considerable, and the Indian contractor influence might be very much larger, to say nothing of those Indians who might have some influence and be qualified to vote. Certainly there can be no purpose whatever for the insertion of such an editorial as the one in this magazine which I have just read, except an effort to influence those Senators and Representatives from the States in which the influence of the Office of Indian Affairs might be of some weight.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. CLARK. Gladly.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the administration has had the Department of Agriculture trying to influence the farmers who were getting money from the Department of Agriculture, they have had the Department of Labor trying to influence labor organizations, they have had the Post Office Department trying to influence those who got post-office appointments, and they have had the office of the Attorney General seeking to influence those who got patronage and came under their domination; so it is not to be wondered at that the Indian Office should try to line up the Indians and all the employees working under that office.

We hear of propaganda being spread in favor of this plan. Never in the history of the United States, certainly never since I have been a Member of the Congress, has there been such tremendous propaganda put out by the various departments in favor of legislation as has been spread in regard to this particular proposal.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with the Senator. I have read in the Senate, not once, but several times, the provision of law applicable to this situation. I have proved today out of the mouth of the Secretary of the Interior himself, and out of the specific language of the publication which I have quoted, issued by the Office of Indian Affairs, a flagrant, open, and notorious violation of that statute. I direct the attention of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Attorney General to this violation of the law and to the specific and mandatory provisions of the statute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee appearing on page 17, line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall occupy the floor but a moment for various reasons. I would not have taken the floor except for the fact that I have listened to the able address of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

I was one of the Senators who endorsed Mr. Collier for the position which he now holds. I believed that he would effectuate reforms in the Office of Indian Affairs, that he would reduce expenses, and abolish some of the evils which were manifest, and which were growing constantly in that office.

I recall, during a somewhat prolonged discussion of appropriations for Indian affairs a few years ago, that it was shown that the appropriations were increasing materially from year to year and that the expenses of administration were likewise increasing. My recollection is that those debates showed that out of the enormous appropriation then made, approximately $24,000,000, 25 percent, possibly more, was consumed in payment of salaries of more than five or six thousand employees.

I have learned since coming into the Chamber a moment ago that the appropriation bill now before us carries for the Office of Indian Affairs an appropriation of $33,000,000. The promised reforms have not been brought about, the expenditures have increased, and I have risen only to express my very great regret that the Office of Indian Affairs under Mr. Collier's administration has not lived up to the promises made or the expectations of some of us who strongly endorsed Mr. Collier.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 13, 14, 25, 26, 27, 36, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 2½, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 22, 23, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 57, 58, and 64; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "who are in need of relief"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "who are in need of relief"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. In carrying out the purpose of the foregoing appropriation the President is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of special funds in the nature of revolving funds for use, until June 30, 1938, in the purchase, repair, distribution, or rental of materials, supplies, equipment, and tools: Provided, That the requirement in Section one hereof that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood control and water conservation projects authorized by other law and prosecuted hereunder."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "made available in this joint resolution"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "the President shall find that the project to be financed with such loan or grant will not cause or promote competition of the products of convict labor with the products of free labor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 201. The Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works (herein called the 'Administration') is hereby continued until July 1, 1939, and until such date is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform on June 29, 1937. All provisions of law existing on June 29, 1937, and relating to the availability of funds for carrying out any of the functions of such Administration are hereby continued until July 1, 1939, except that the date specified in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, prior to which, in the determination of the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works (herein called the 'Administrator'), a project can be substantially completed is hereby changed from 'July 1, 1938' to 'July 1, 1939'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 202. The amount which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized by existing law to have invested at any one time in securities purchased from the Administration is hereby increased from $250,000,000 to $400,000,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 203. The amount of funds which the Administrator, upon direction of the President, is authorized to use for grants from moneys realized from the sale of securities is hereby increased from $300,000,000 to $359,000,000; and after the date of the enactment of this joint resolution no allotment shall be made by the Administrator for any project the application for which has not been approved by the examining divisions of the Administration prior to such date."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 204. The paragraph in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, under the caption 'Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works' is hereby amended by (a) striking out the words 'in connection with the liquidation' and (b) striking out the sum of '$10,000,000' and inserting in lieu thereof the sum '$15,000,000'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 205. The funds available to the Administrator for the making of loans or grants or loans and grants may be used for projects (in addition to other purposes for which funds may be used) of the following classes, in amounts not to exceed the sums specified for each such class: (a) For school projects (other than those included in subdivisions (b) and (c) of this section) to replace, eliminate, or ameliorate existing school facilities or conditions which, in the determination of the Administrator, are hazardous to the life, safety, or health of school children, $60,000,000 for grants and $11,000,000 for loans; (b) for projects which have been authorized, or for the financing of which bonds or other obligations have been authorized, at elections held prior to the date of enactment of this joint resolution, or for projects for which an authority or board constituting an independent corporation without taxing power has been specifically created by a State legislature prior to such date, $70,000,000 for grants and $22,000,000 for loans; (c) for projects for which appropriations have been made by the legislatures of the States, $15,000,000 for grants and $2,000,000 for loans; (d) for projects to be financed, except for the grant, by the issuance to contractors of tax or assessment securities at not less than their par value: Provided, That an allotment shall not be made for any such project unless the applicant has, in the determination of the Administrator, made or incurred substantial expenditures or obligations in contemplation of receiving an allotment, $5,000,000 for grants; (e) for projects for which funds have been tentatively earmarked by the Administrator but for which formal allotments have not been made, $54,000,000 for grants and $78,000,000 for loans: Provided, That the grant for any such project shall not exceed the amount tentatively earmarked as a grant for such project: Provided further, That the amount specified for any of the foregoing classes may be increased by not to exceed 15 per centum thereof by transferring an amount or amounts from any other class or classes in order to effectuate the purposes of the title."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 207. Title II of this joint resolution may be cited as the 'Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference, which represents a complete agreement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Colorado what happened to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] requiring certain publicity in respect to employees drawing more than a thousand dollars a year.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have to inform the Senator that the Senate conferees were unable to retain that provision in the bill. However, the Senate conferees receded only after communication with Mr. Hopkins, the Administrator, and after receiving from him the assurance that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] could have the information which he desired upon his request.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does that privilege attach solely to the Senator from Pennsylvania, or is it to be general?

Mr. ADAMS. The request was only in reference to the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I have no doubt that the Senator from Michigan and other Senators would be accorded the same privilege.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I may be assured that he can now obtain the information which he sought so strenuously and futilely for so long a period.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the direct information which we received from Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question, which I think possibly I should propound to the Senator from Arizona, who is more familiar with the details of title 2? I should like to know, in the changes which have been made in title 2, what change, if any, was made with reference to the earmarking of the funds to continue the construction of projects which have been delayed by litigation.

Mr. ADAMS. I will ask the Senator from Arizona, who is an expert on that matter, to reply.

Mr. HAYDEN. No change was made. The House accepted the provision as approved by the Senate. Those projects are several large ones, one sometimes known as the tri-county project, in Nebraska, another one the General State Authority of Pennsylvania, another known as the Santee-Cooper project in South Carolina. There is also a slum-clearance and housing project in the city of Chicago. In several instances the projects have been held up due to litigation in court, but the amounts provided for them have been tentatively earmarked. It is the intention of Congress to make the required sums available.

Mr. BYRNES. In the litigation, certainly in Nebraska and South Carolina, attorneys representing the power companies have urged that funds were not available as one argument before the court, and I was therefore anxious to have the Senator state that the conference report does what the bill as originally introduced intended.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the Senator from South Carolina will examine the remarks I made when the amendment was adopted by the Senate, as they appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 21, 1937, when the amendment was adopted by the Senate, he will find a specific reference to all projects of class (e) which clearly indicates the intention of Congress to provide funds to carry them out.

Mr. BYRNES. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arizona about two amendments which were placed in the bill on the floor of the Senate. One was an amendment authorizing the P. W. A. to accept the authorities which might have been created by legislation in the States. Was that amendment agreed to?

Mr. HAYDEN. The amendment was agreed to with a modification, with which I think the Senator from Oklahoma is entirely familiar, which more clearly defines the nature of the board or agency created by the States with authority to issue bonds.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. My second inquiry is this: An amendment was incorporated in the bill on the floor of the Senate increasing the amount from $300,000,000 to $340,000,000. What was the action on that amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. There was this change in the situation: That as we agreed on the bill in conference we dealt only with the amount available for grants, leaving the amounts for loans unstated, because it was unnecessary to state them.

The amounts for grants are increased over the amounts agreed upon by the House of Representatives in a sufficient amount to take care of all the grants specified in the various classes contained in the House bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Those two amendments were intended primarily to assist two projects, one in Oklahoma and one in Montana. My question now is: Is the law as contemplated by the report sufficiently broad to enable those two projects to be considered and possibly approved?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no question that they can be considered under the law. Whether or not they will be approved is, of course, a matter within the discretion of the Administrator.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator explain what the effect of the amendment will be? The original amendment carried the date of April 24, and the Russell amendment changed that to the effective date of the act.

Mr. HAYDEN. The conferees agreed upon it with a statement changing it from the effective date to the date of approval. That was the only change.

Mr. HATCH. The effect of the amendment remains as it was under the Russell amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. And the amendment relating to bond issues heretofore authorized is substantially the same?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is unchanged.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Indian lands", on page 23, line 20, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$900,000" and insert "$1,000,000", and in line 22, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$34,000", so as to read:

For the acquisition of lands, interest in lands, water rights and surface rights to lands, and for expenses incident to such acquisition, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 985), including personal services, purchase of equipment and supplies, and other necessary expenses, $1,000,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1937, of which not to exceed $34,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 2, after the word "reservations", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of the Interior may also incur obligations, and enter into contracts for the acquisition of additional land, not exceeding a total of $500,000, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof, and appropriations hereafter made for the acquisition of land pursuant to the authorization contained in the act of June 18, 1934, shall be available for the purpose of discharging the obligation or obligations so created.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the purpose of that amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Wheeler-Howard Act authorizes the expenditure of $200,000 for the acquisition of land in each year. The Budget estimate was for a million dollars to be authorized each year, and authority to contract for the purchase of land in the amount of an additional million dollars. The Secretary of the Interior originally asked for authority to contract for the purchase of an additional million dollars. The committee fixed the figure at half of that amount—$500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 12, after the word "thereon", to insert "and of improvements on former public-domain lands", so as to read:

For payment, pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 15, 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1272), to the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in full compensation as to claim for the principal sum for 64,560 acres of land in western Colorado set aside as a naval oil reserve by Executive orders dated December 6, 1916, and September 27, 1924, $161,400: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and with the approval of the tribe expressed through its tribal council, not more than $100,000 of the amount apportioned to the Indians of the Uintah and Ouray Reservation, Utah, together with $100,000 additional from tribal funds now on deposit to the credit of the Ute Indians in Utah, may be expended for the acquisition of privately owned lands or interests therein, together with the improvements thereon, and of improvements on former public-domain lands, for said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 21, to insert:

The unexpended balance of $5,004.25 of the appropriation "Purchase of land for landless Indians in California, act of March 3, 1925, special fund", which appropriation was repealed by section 4 (b 24) of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934 (48 Stat. 1227), is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended for payment of obligations heretofore incurred or to be incurred hereafter in the acquisition of land in California, with such improvements as may be appurtenant thereto, for the relief of homeless Indians of that State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead, "Industrial assistance and advancement", on page 26, line 9, after the word "allotments", to strike out "other than the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin", and in line 16, after the word "lands" and the comma, to strike out "$260,000" and insert "$300,000", so as to read:

For the preservation of timber on Indian reservations and allotments, the education of Indians in the proper care of forests, and the general administration of forestry and grazing work, including fire prevention and payment of reasonable rewards for information leading to arrest and conviction of a person or persons setting forest fires, or taking or otherwise destroying timber, in contravention of law on Indian lands, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 25, after the word "purposes" and the comma, to strike out "$80,000" and insert "$90,000", so as to read:

For transfer to the Geological Survey for expenditures to be made in inspecting mines and examining mineral deposits on Indian lands and in supervising mining operations on restricted, tribal, and allotted Indian lands leased under the provisions of the acts of February 28, 1891 (U. S. C., title 25, secs. 336, 371, 397), May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 312), March 3, 1909 (U. S. C., title 25, sec. 396), and other acts authorizing the leasing of such lands for mining purposes, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 6, after the word "equipment" and the comma, to strike out "$600,220" and insert "$640,000", so as to read:

For the purpose of developing agriculture and stock raising among the Indians, including necessary personnel, traveling, and other expenses, and purchase of supplies and equipment, $640,000, of which not to exceed $15,000 may be used to conduct agricultural experiments and demonstrations on Indian school or agency farms and to maintain a supply of suitable plants or seed for issue to Indians, and not to exceed $30,000 may be used for the operation and maintenance of a sheep-breeding station on the Navajo Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 21, after the word "crops" and the comma, to strike out "$165,000" and insert "$390,000", so as to read:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $390,000, which sum may be used for the purchase of seeds, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, and for advances to Indians having irrigable allotments to assist them in the development and cultivation thereof, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable Indians to become self-supporting:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 10, after the word "That", to insert "except for the Navajo Indians in Arizona and New Mexico", so as to make the further proviso read:

Provided further, That except for the Navajo Indians in Arizona and New Mexico not to exceed $25,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 13, after the word "Indians", to insert a colon and the following additional provisos:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to make advances from this appropriation to old, disabled, or indigent Indian allottees, for their support, to remain a charge and lien against their land until paid: Provided further, That not to exceed $15,000 may be advanced to worthy Indian youths to enable them to take educational courses, including courses in nursing, home economics, forestry, and other industrial subjects in colleges, universities, or other institutions, and advances so made shall be reimbursed in not to exceed 8 years, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That not to exceed $275,000 may be advanced to the Navajo Tribe of Indians for the purchase, feeding, sale, slaughter, or other disposition of sheep, goats, and other livestock belonging to the Navajo Indians, including the erection of necessary structures, the purchase of machinery and equipment, materials and supplies, the purchase or lease of land or buildings, salaries of employees, traveling expenses, advertising, and all other necessary expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 5, after the word "expenses" and the comma, to strike out "$42,500" and insert "$50,000", so as to read:

For the development, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of Indian arts and crafts, as authorized by the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat., p. 891), including personal services, purchase and transportation of equipment and supplies, purchase of periodicals, directories, and books of reference, purchase and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, telegraph and telephone services, cost of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of personal effects of employees upon permanent change of station, expenses of exhibits and of attendance at meetings concerned with the development of Indian arts and crafts, traveling expenses, including payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of members of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, serving without other compensation from the United States, while absent from their homes, not to exceed $2,500 for printing and binding, and other necessary expenses, $50,000, of which not to exceed $16,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Irrigation and drainage", on page 36, line 3, after the word "and", to strike out "$111,000" and insert "$161,000"; in line 7, after the word "and", to strike out "$111,000" and insert "$161,000"; and in line 11, to strike out "$299,500" and insert "$349,500", so as to read:

For operation and maintenance of the San Carlos project for the irrigation of lands in the Gila River Indian Reservation, Ariz., including not to exceed $2,000 for purchase of land, $76,300, reimbursable, together with $112,200 (operation and maintenance collections) and $161,000 (power revenues), of which latter sum not to exceed $25,000 shall be available for major repairs in case of unforeseen emergencies caused by fire, flood, or storm, from which amounts of $112,200 and $161,000, respectively, expenditures shall not exceed the aggregate receipts covered into the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934; in all, $349,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 16, after the word "Indians", to insert a comma and "and such revenues are hereby made available for payment of irrigation operation and maintenance charges assessed against tribal or allotted lands of said Pima Indians in accordance with tribal resolution of June 16, 1937, and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Pima Indians are hereby authorized to employ an attorney and an accountant for the purpose of advising them in connection with the legality and equity of these operation and maintenance assessments at a cost of not to exceed $2,000 including all expenses connected therewith payable from tribal funds", so as to read:

For continuing subjugation and for cropping operations on the lands of the Pima Indians in Arizona, there shall be available so much as may be necessary of the revenues derived from these operations and deposited into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of such Indians, and such revenues are hereby made available for payment of irrigation operation and maintenance charges assessed against tribal or allotted lands of said Pima Indians in accordance with tribal resolution of June 16, 1937, and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Pima Indians are hereby authorized to employ an attorney and an accountant for the purpose of advising them in connection with the legality and equity of these operation and maintenance assessments at a cost of not to exceed $2,000 including all expenses connected therewith payable from tribal funds.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States $105,000 of any funds on deposit to the credit of the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin (except the Menominee log funds), and to expend said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for a per-capita payment of $50 to each enrolled member of the Menominee Tribe: Provided, That such payment shall be in lieu of the payment authorized by the act of June 15, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 964), for the fair market stumpage value of timber cut on the Menominee Reservation during the fiscal year 1937: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior the payment herein authorized may be made in two installments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Reclamation", on page 81, line 14, after the word "revenues", to strike out "as hereinafter stated", so as to read:

Rio Grande project, New Mexico-Texas: For operation and maintenance, $350,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enter into a contract with the El Paso County water improvement district no. 1 and the Elephant Butte irrigation district of New Mexico, by which the districts will be relieved of the obligation of making payment of the construction cost chargeable to the development of power of Elephant Butte Dam in the amount determined as equitable by the Secretary of the Interior in return for the conveyance by the said two districts to the United States of all the districts' right, title, interest, and estate in the use of said dam and other project works, including the project water supply, for the development of hydroelectric energy: Provided further, That in such contracts it shall be stated that the use of the dam, project works, and water supply for power purposes shall not deplete or interfere with the use thereof for irrigation purposes: Provided further, That the net earnings of the power plant and system belonging to the United States and any other available revenues shall be applied, until the cost thereof has been met, upon the cost of the power development, including (1) the cost of power facilities, (2) the amount invested, as herein authorized, in the cost of Elephant Butte Dam, and (3) the amount invested by the Bureau of Reclamation in Caballo Dam: Provided further, That after the cost of the power development has been met the net earnings of the power plant and system shall be disposed of as Congress may direct.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 6, to insert "Gila Project, Arizona, $1,250,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Gila project is authorized by law and a Budget estimate which was submitted for this amount. The project will obtain its supply of water from the Colorado River. The sole source of water for the project will be water impounded by the Boulder Canyon Dam. In order to make it perfectly clear that the project shall be operated in accordance with the Boulder Canyon Project Act, and shall be subject to and controlled by the Colorado River compact as provided by that act, I have agreed with the Senators from the upper-basin States that there shall be added to the bill a legislative provision which I now offer. The text of the amendment does not change existing law, but merely directs attention to an act of Congress which applies to the Gila project and which makes the Colorado River compact effective so far as the Gila project is concerned.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I say for the RECORD that the amendment which is now being offered by the Senator from Arizona is in accordance with an understanding which has been had by him with the Senators from the States in the upper basin of the Colorado River? The language of the amendment was submitted to the attorney general for Wyoming, who in turn took it up with the attorneys general for Colorado and New Mexico. It is now in accordance with suggestions received from them. I believe that it is altogether satisfactory to the upper-basin States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 85, line 7, it is proposed to strike out—

Gila project, Arizona, $1,250,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Gila project, Arizona, $1,250,000, said Gila project, including the waters to be diverted and used thereby and the lands and structures for the diversion and storage thereof to be subject to the provisions of the Boulder Canyon Project Act of December 21, 1928, and subject to and controlled by the provisions of the Colorado River compact signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., November 24, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arizona to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 11, to insert:

Colorado-Big Thompson project, Colorado: For construction in accordance with the plan described in Senate Document No. 80, Seventy-fifth Congress, $900,000: Provided, That no construction thereof shall be commenced until the repayment of all costs of the project shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, be assured by appropriate contracts with, water-conservancy districts, or irrigation districts or water-users' associations organized under the laws of Colorado, or other form of organization satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 23, to insert:

Frenchtown project, Montana, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 10, after the word "investigations" and the comma, to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$250,000", so as to read:

Colorado River Basin investigations, $250,000.

For administrative expenses on account of the above projects, including personal services and other expenses in the District of Columbia and in the field, $750,000, in addition to and for the same objects of expenditure as are hereinbefore enumerated in paragraphs 2 and 3 under the caption "Bureau of Reclamation"; in all, $10,535,000: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $75,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, after line 19, to insert:

The unexpended balances of the amounts appropriated from the reclamation fund, special fund, under the caption "Bureau of Reclamation, Construction", in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, shall remain available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1938.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the amendment which has just been agreed to covers all of the unexpended balances which were appropriated by the Interior Department Act for 1937 for these various projects.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is exactly correct, and was so stated by the Commissioner of Reclamation in requesting the adoption of this amendment. It is in accordance with the Budget Bureau estimates and is designed to carry out the purpose stated by the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 1, after the word "fund" and the comma, to strike out "$9,416,600" and insert "$11,701,600", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 121, line 2, to strike out "$24,000" and insert "$50,000", so as to read:

Historic sites and buildings: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the preservation of historic American sites, buildings, objects, and antiquities of national significance, and for other purposes", approved August 21, 1935 (49 Stat., p. 666), $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, line 4, after the word "vehicles" and the semicolon, to strike out "$7,137,280" and insert "$7,237,280", and in line 5, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$5,036,980" and insert "$5,136,980", so as to read:

Salaries and general expenses, public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of public buildings, monuments, memorials, and grounds in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, including the National Archives Building; per-diem employees at rates of pay approved by the Director, not exceeding current rates for similar services in the District of Columbia; rent of buildings; demolition of buildings; expenses incident to moving various executive departments and establishments in connection with the assignment, allocation, transfer, and survey of building space; traveling expenses and carfare; leather and rubber articles and gas masks for the protection of public property and employees; arms and ammunition for the guard force; not exceeding $13,000 for uniforms for employees; and the purchase, maintenance, repair, exchange, storage, and operation of four motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; $7,237,280, of which amount not to exceed $5,136,980 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $500,000 shall be available for major repairs and improvements to public buildings, monuments, memorials, and grounds in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 16, after the word "equipment", to insert "per-diem employees at rates of pay approved by the Director not exceeding current rates for similar services in the District of Columbia, the hire of draft animals with or without drivers at local rates approved by the Director, traveling expenses and carfare, and leather and rubber articles for the protection of public property and employees, $176,000", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses, National Capital parks: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, Arlington Memorial Bridge, George Washington Memorial Parkway, Federal parks in the District of Columbia, and other Federal lands authorized by the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), including the pay and allowances in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 27, 1924, as amended, of the police force for the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway and the George Washington Memorial Parkway, and the purchase of one passenger-carrying automobile and operation, maintenance, repair, exchange, and storage of three automobiles, revolvers, ammunition, uniforms, and equipment, per-diem employees at rates of pay approved by the Director not exceeding current rates for similar services in the District of Columbia, the hire of draft animals with or without drivers at local rates approved by the Director, traveling expenses and carfare, and leather and rubber articles for the protection of public property and employees, $176,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Office of Education—Vocational education", on page 126, line 2, after "1488)" and the comma, to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$425,000", so as to read:

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Salaries and expenses: For carrying out the provisions of section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education, etc.", approved February 23, 1917, as amended by the act of October 6, 1917 (U. S. C., title 20, sec. 15), and of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved June 8, 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1488), $425,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, after line 2, to strike out:

Further development of vocational education: For carrying out the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved June 8, 1936 (49 Stat., pp. 1488–1490), $14,483,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Further development of vocational education: For the first installment of a 4-year program to carry out the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved June 6, 1936 (49 Stat., pp. 1488–1490):

For salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects, $1,031,000;

For salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of home-economics subjects, $1,021,000;

For salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and director of trade and industrial subjects, $1,032,000;

For salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of, and maintenance of teacher training in, distributive occupational subjects, $649,000;

For preparing teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural, trade, and industrial, and home-economics subjects, $557,000;

In all, $4,290,000.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senate to reject the amendment which is now pending so as to restore the appropriation provided by the House.

This is an appropriation made for the purpose of the development of vocational education under an act which was passed by the last Congress, and which supplements, of course, the original appropriation under the act of 1916.

The Budget Bureau recommended some $3,000,000 in round numbers—I do not undertake to use the exact odd numbers—but the House Appropriations Committee, notwithstanding, recommended some $7,000,000 under the act known as the George-Deen Act passed during the last Congress.

When the matter came on the floor of the House, the House itself inserted in the bill the full amount authorized under that act for the expansion and further development of vocational education. The Senate Committee on Appropriations reduced the amount carried in the bill as it came from the House to $4,000,000, in round numbers, which is a million dollars, in round numbers, above the Budget estimate, but some $10,000,000, in round figures, below the amount appropriated by the House.

Mr. President, I may say that when the bill under which this appropriation was made was introduced, conferences were had, and those who were sponsoring the bill definitely agreed that no additional appropriation would be asked for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937. Since the approval of that act many of the States throughout the country have made provision for the use of the entire appropriation. Forty-five States have made provision for the use of the full amount.

There are more than 15,000 rural high schools in the United States. There are only about 6,100 such high schools which provide vocational training. There are some 4,000 additional high schools that have asked for this money.

The same proportion applies to those schools that make provision for the teaching of home economics. So the question of need for this appropriation is hardly open to debate; in fact, it is not open to debate; and, if it were open to debate, Congress settled that matter last year when the act was passed, when for the first time since the passage of the original act provision for a continuing, additional annual appropriation was made.

As I have said, 45 States are actually in position to make or have made provision for the use of the full amount authorized by the George-Deen Act. Three or four State legislatures have petitioned the Congress to make the full appropriation, among them the great State of Texas, the State of Wisconsin, the State of Arkansas, and, I believe, the State of Nebraska, though I am not sure about the last-named State.

The needs and the demands for vocational education are not only strong but are growing stronger. We have unemployment, particularly among the young men and young women of the country. The young men and young women who have just become or who are becoming of age and who are without any special vocational training have become helpless, or almost so, so far as securing employment is concerned under the adverse conditions which we have recently experienced. Not only is that true now, but it will be increasingly so, for the reason that industry will not be able longer to provide apprenticeships and will not be able longer to furnish the necessary training to the young men who want to go into trades or into occupations training for which may be furnished under the Vocational Act. With minimum wages and with maximum hours and with the keen competition, of course, that must necessarily come, in order to maintain itself on a new economic basis industry will be obliged to find well-trained and well-equipped and well-qualified men and women to do the job that is before it, if it can find such men and such women.

The figures and statistics furnished by one similar institution, an institution providing vocational training in California, afford a striking illustration of what I am trying now to say. During the last year some 3,000 young men found employment after receiving training in this particular vocational institution. The ages of the young men ranged from 18 to 25 years.

In order to meet new conditions, indeed, in order to meet satisfactorily any condition, vocational training in agriculture, home economics, the trades, industries, and distributive occupational industries as well, must go forward in earnest in this country and must take even a wider scope than it has hitherto taken.

Mr. President, it is quite true that some three or four States in the Union may not use all of the money carried in the bill as it came from the House, should that amount be retained by the Senate, but in that event the money does not go out of the Treasury. It simply is not used. It automatically becomes a fund available for the purposes of the Treasury hereafter. In other words, there is no use of the money unless the State is appropriating to match the fund on the basis provided in the George-Deen Act. There can be no misuse of the funds or dissipation of the funds because the States must actually use the money before any money is paid out of the Treasury.

What happens, in fact, is this: The schools putting in vocational courses, whether in agriculture, trade, or the industries select their own teachers. The teachers must, of course, meet certain standards and certain requirements. The schools pay their teachers and, in effect, a requisition is made through the Bureau of Education to reimburse the schools carrying on the vocational work, and, therefore, there can be no actual dissipation or actual wastage of the money.

Mr. President, I may say also that at this time and in this bill it seems to me we ought not to hesitate to restore the amount proposed by the House to be appropriated, because we are making large appropriations for other uses, and this use is certainly one which commends itself most heartily to the country and is one which serves the real purposes of the country.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator whether or not he has any figures as to what would be the result in the employment of teachers in connection with this reduction? I ask that because in the last hour I have received information from gentlemen from my State as to what would be the result in Alabama alone.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not those figures. All this appropriation really goes into salaries. It really goes into compensation and pay. None of it is used for the purpose of buying equipment or materials of any kind. It all goes into the salaries paid to teachers, as I understand.

Mr. BLACK. In that connection Alabama, like a number of other States, during the last year has added very substantially to its opportunities for vocational training. I have been informed that if this reduction as reported by the committee should go into effect, it would require the discharge of more than 100 teachers who have already been employed to teach vocational training in Alabama next year. I was informed also that it would cut off thousands of adults who are taking such training. If that be true as to one State it can easily be seen, if the same result should occur in other States, how disastrous it would be with reference to vocational education.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator's information must be correct so far as the coming fiscal year is concerned. Of course the bill would actually cut in half the appropriation which was contemplated by all the States. The net effect of the adoption of the committee amendment would be to cut the fund in half, and, therefore, it would necessitate the failure to employ those teachers, if it did not result in actual release of teachers from contracts made.

Mr. BLACK. It is my understanding contracts have already been made, and the State of Alabama will be in the same situation in that respect as other States will be. I hope we shall be able to reinstate the full amount proposed by the House to be appropriated for this purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

In Georgia alone some 500 additional schools have made application for additional vocational teachers, and preparations have been made, and no doubt contracts have been made, because the new school year for vocational work is commencing in July in many of the States. Necessarily those teachers who have been engaged would now find themselves unable to enter upon the performance of their contracts if the appropriation should be reduced.

The appropriation of $14,000,000 in round figures is not all additional money. It is, of course, so far as this particular appropriation is concerned, but under the original act for vocational education $7,000,000 in round figures was appropriated annually. In 1928 Congress passed a bill providing for an additional appropriation, which went up by steps or stages over a period of 6 years to $2,500,000 additional, making some $9,500,000 or nearly $10,000,000 which was thereafter available for vocational education for the United States.

In 1934, when that act was about to expire, Congress passed another bill known as the George-Ellzey bill, which made a flat additional appropriation of $3,000,000 annually for vocational education. We are yet operating under that act, which expires the 30th of the present month. Under that act between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000 is appropriated for vocational education. That act which expires June 30 and carries an authorization for $3,000,000, will, of course, pass out of the picture after June 30. What is actually being done under the Senate amendment is to appropriate in round figures only $4,000,000 against the $3,000,000 which for some years has been appropriated under special or supplemental acts. Actually not a single additional dollar is made available for the teaching of vocational agriculture or domestic economy within the rural high schools of the country, because under the George-Deen Act two additional activities were added—distributive occupational education and teachers' training. The George-Ellzey Act which expires June 30 contained no provision for an additional appropriation for teacher training, so that it will be impossible under this appropriation to provide for the training of a single additional farm boy in agriculture or a single additional farm girl in economics.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. During the last few moments I have received three telegrams on this identical item; and, sustaining what has just been said, I desire to call attention to one or two lines from these telegrams.

I quote part of a telegram received from Oklahoma City:

> Vocational agricultural program, vocational work in Oklahoma popular. One hundred and fifty new teachers called for. Thirty-five new teachers employed.

And if the item is reduced, of course, the teachers called for will not be used, and the teachers employed likewise will not be used.

The telegram from which I have just quoted is signed by H. J. Denton, president, Oklahoma Agricultural Cooperative Council.

I have received another telegram from the President of the Oklahoma Farmers' Union. I desire to read one or two lines from this telegram:

> More than 150 farm communities in Oklahoma want vocational education programs. Many, acting in good faith, have already employed qualified teachers and expended large sums on equipment for conserving and restoring our soil.

Mr. President, in my State the demand for an increased appropriation comes from the farm population. There is no doubt that the teachers themselves, if they were heard from, would be most vociferous in asking for the money; but I am not urging the appropriation on that basis. I am urging the increased appropriation on the basis of the farm demand, directly from farmers and farm organizations.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion. I think the Senate well understands that in the case of this particular appropriation, if the States are not prepared to match it, the money will not go out of the Treasury; and I think it also true that no money can go out of the Treasury until the appropriation, even if made, is by the President allocated, or at least notice given by him of allocations actually made to the several States which are ready to meet the fund.

Telegrams and letters of course have reached me from time to time because I have been somewhat active in connection with this type of legislation. I should like to read just a few lines from the director of the State Board of Vocational Education of Wisconsin, typical of all the other thoughtful letters upon the subject:

> Much of the social legislation recently enacted is greatly dependent upon Federal aid for vocational education—

Writes the director.

> With our rapidly changing industrial processes and technological changes, it is highly important that our increasing number of unemployable people be given vocational training preparatory for job opportunities. Those already employed must be prepared to meet industrial changes, and given an opportunity to combine education with labor. Unless the Federal Government participates in a substantial way to aid the cause of vocational education, we shall soon be faced with a permanent army of unemployable people as well as unemployed.
> I do not look upon Federal participation in an adequate vocational-training program as an expense. It is rather in the nature of an investment that brings back to our country a wealth return commensurate with the wise administration of vocational courses to improve the employability of our people.

And not only is the director of vocational education in the State of Wisconsin, Mr. Hambrick, asking for the full amount, but that State is one of the States whose legislature petitioned the Congress to make an appropriation of the full amount for the fiscal year 1938.

Mr. President, I think the Senate should reject this amendment, because then the matter will be put beyond peradventure of doubt. The fiscal year and the school year for vocational work and training are upon many of our States. If the Senate shall reject the amendment made by the Appropriations Committee, the matter will be put at rest so far as this particular item in the bill is concerned, and the States may go on with confidence with the programs they have already commenced; and let me say that if this full appropriation is allowed, in round numbers the total contribution of the Federal Government to vocational training—not only in agriculture but in domestic science, the trades and industries, distributive occupational training, and teaching, for all of these various types of education—will amount to no more than $21,000,000. That is a negligible appropriation for this country to make in a line of educational work which has demonstrated its value, and which can be carried on and is being carried on by the States, under the jurisdiction of the States, with the aid and assistance of the Federal authorities here at Washington, but without interference with the internal affairs and management of the schools of the country.

Mr. President, if it were a question of economy, and if we had resolved not to make additional apropriations, we should face a different question; but in this very bill, which has reduced the appropriation for vocational education by $10,000,000, we find increases of more than $12,000,000 for various other purposes, doubtless all good; so it is not a question of economy. In this very bill, which cuts down the House appropriation for this worthy object and purpose, we find a total sum exceeding by more than $2,000,000 the appropriation carried in the House bill. So it cannot be argued as a question of economy. The facts put the argument out of the question.

Mr. President, the people of this country do not want Congress to take this appropriation out of the hides of the farm boys and girls and the young men seeking vocational education in the trades and industries.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to give the Senate a brief statement of the reasons that induced the Committee on Appropriations to suggest a reduction in this appropriation.

Senators should understand, first of all, that there is a permanent annual appropriation for vocational education under what is known as the Smith-Hughes Act which amounts to $7,157,000. That money is automatically appropriated each year without action by Congress. In addition to that, as the Senator from Georgia has well stated, during the current fiscal year Congress appropriated an extra $3,084,000, so that the amount of money that is expended for vocational education during the current fiscal year is $10,200,000.

The Budget estimate for this item was $3,000,000; but upon examining the situation in the committee we found that the $3,000,000 would have to be divided five ways instead of three ways. The $3,000,000 heretofore has been spent for vocational instruction in agriculture, home economics, and trades, and industries. Under the George-Dean Act, as passed last year, two new subjects were introduced—teacher training and instruction in distributive occupations. To divide the same amount of money five ways instead of three, without increasing the Federal appropriation, was obviously unfair. The committee therefore proposes to carry on, in exactly the same manner as for the present fiscal year, all activities which heretofore have been provided for, and to add two new activities—teacher training and instruction in distributive occupations—to the extent of one-half the amount authorized by law. If that were done, there would be available in this fiscal year the old $7,000,000, plus $4,200,000, or $11,400,000, for all purposes.

The House Committee on Appropriations came to the same general conclusion as the Senate committee, that to appropriate the entire amount would be unwise. Their recommendation was to appropriate 50 percent of the authorizations, or $7,000,000, for the next fiscal year. On that basis there would be $7,000,000 from the old Smith-Hughes Act and $7,000,000 more from the George-Deen authorization, making a total of $14,000,000.

What the Senator from Georgia now proposes is to make a total appropriation of $21,000,000; to jump the amount of money we have expended for this purpose from the $7,000,000 plus of the Smith-Hughes Act and the $3,000,000 under the George-Ellzey Act which he mentions, a total of $10,000,000, in 1 year to $21,000,000.

The best information the Senate committee could get was that there are not enough well-trained teachers of vocational education in the United States to make proper use of the money. It is the same situation we had about 25 years ago, when Congress for the first time made appropriations for county farm advisers. A sum of money was made available rather unexpectedly, but the necessary trained and equipped personnel was not to be found, so the authorities would go into a county where, for lack of anything else, they would pick out the best farmer in the county and say, "Let us put him on the job of telling the other farmers how to farm."

He himself might know how to farm, but he did not know how to teach others how to farm. Anyone who has had anything to do with education knows that it is vital in any educational program to understand the methods of giving instruction.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, at what place does this information appear in the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. The information I am giving to the Senate I have derived from the report of a special committee appointed by the President of the United States. The President appointed an advisory Committee on Education at the time the George-Deen Act was approved. My information is that the President hesitated a long time about approving that measure, believing that it was too great and too sudden a jump into this new field; but finally he determined to approve the act, and at the same time to appoint an advisory committee to determine how it should be carried out. That committee reported to the President on April 24 of this year. I read some extracts from the report:

> Our feeling that there should be no expansion of the funds provided for vocational education until after there has been a thorough replanning of Federal relations to all education is reenforced by the studies we have already made of the vocational-education statutes and administration.
>
> The basic vocational-education statute, the Smith-Hughes Act, has not been revised since its enactment 20 years ago. Even as supplemented by additional legislation, it does not provide the basis under present conditions for a sound program of Federal aid to vocational education. The several vocational statutes are a patchwork of complex and obscure provisions, many of which are inconsistent with present conditions and needs.
>
> The basis for the distribution of funds among the States as provided in the vocational-educational statutes tends in many cases to increase rather than to decrease inequalities in educational opportunity. Inequalities arise from the operation of the State minimum allotments and from the matching provisions. They arise also from the difficulties encountered in attempts to administer a vocational program in small rural high schools. The areas most in need of aid are the ones least able to meet the matching and other qualifying provisions.
> We believe that the training of the personnel necessary for extension and improvement of vocational education is a problem of the first importance and one that should receive early attention. Readjustments to make possible an expansion and improvement in the training of teachers could be made under current appropriations. At present, however, the teacher personnel is not available in most of the States to staff enlarged programs of vocational education unless certification standards are materially reduced and teachers are employed who are not well qualified.

This was a commission of educators appointed by the President of the United States, who examined into the subject of vocational education in all the States of the Union. They made a report to the President that properly qualified, trained personnel does not exist, and upon that basis the committee of the Senate makes the statement which it included in its report.

I have no doubt that there are exceptions to that rule in certain States. There may be some States where there is an ample number of qualified teachers, whereas in others there are not enough. But, taking the country as a whole, the Commission appointed by the President to study how this great piece of legislation should be carried out makes this finding in a report to the President.

Mr. ELLENDER. Did not the President's Commission recommend an expenditure of $20,000,000 for vocational training?

Mr. HAYDEN. They did not. The Commission recommended that there be no increase at all.

Mr. ELLENDER. My information is that it had recommended an expenditure of not less than $20,000,000.

In this connection, Mr. President, I might add that whereas the report of the President's Committee may not recommend an expenditure of $20,000,000, the fact remains that a greater sum than that was spent by other agencies of the Government in order to give to the youth of our Nation a chance to study vocational training. I am quite certain that the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Works Progress Administration, and National Youth Administration have spent many more millions for vocational training than the small amount now asked, and it may be because of such expenditures that the President's Commission did not name a specific sum, but recommended that financial support by the Federal Government for vocational training be continued without curtailment during the coming fiscal year. I am of the opinion that we could more effectively carry on vocational training to the youth of our Nation through the public schools established in each State than by any other method now in force or that has been proposed.

I do not know that I could add any more than has already been said on the subject. The hearings before the committee show that approximately 500,000 boys and girls are graduated each year from the high schools of our Nation, and most of them, because of lack of finances, are unable to enter college. I believe this administration would help greatly toward relieving unemployment should it provide the means for giving to our boys and girls a chance to study a vocation while they are in attendance at our high schools. Especially would it benefit those who are afforded an opportunity of studying home economics, animal husbandry, and agriculture in general.

We will make no mistake by inducing the youth of our country to become producers of wealth by placing them in a position whereby they can grow their own living on the farm, become home owners, and make them independent citizens. I am proud to state that in my own home parish we have a high school that teaches vocational training in agriculture to the youth of our community. I have never experienced such interest in farming as is evidenced by the boys who specialize in agriculture. A large percentage of them study agriculture and many of them have made good on the farm after graduating from high school. I know of one boy in particular, C. A. Duplantis, Jr., who was a State leader in the Future Farmers of America, and who today owns a large farm and is making a success as a farmer. He has purchased the necessary equipment and is doing very well. This young man, together with many others who graduated from the high school in my parish, are doing well, and there is no doubt in my mind but that the training that these boys received in high school developed in them the urge for farming, and I cannot help but feel that they will succeed.

Mr. President, I believe that this small additional appropriation will, in the long run, do more good toward relieving unemployment, than if many more millions were spent through other Government agencies now attempting to help the youth of our country. The school systems in practically all of our States are highly organized and are in charge of well-trained teachers. These schools have the proper organization to undertake this work. Before any Federal money is advanced to a State high school, a thorough investigation is made of the facilities of the school applying, and I am sure that no money will be advanced by the Federal Government unless and until it can be shown that the school applying for this money will spend it properly toward the vocational training of the boys and girls attending such school.

I repeat, Mr. President, the money will be spent for a good purpose, and I hope that the Senate will not agree to the amendment proposed by the Appropriations Committee. The House of Representatives, after a thorough study, recommended the appropriation of fourteen millions and some-odd dollars, and the Senate should by all means stand by the recommendations of the House.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator is mistaken, because I have just read their report to the President, wherein they recommend no expansion until there is further study. The commission also makes this statement:

> We would also call attention to the fact that the vocational education program under the Smith-Hughes and related statutes is not the only program through which the Federal Government is now providing assistance in meeting the needs for vocational training. Such training has become increasingly important among the purposes of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

As a matter of fact in the act passed a few days ago we specifically directed that vocational education be expanded in the Civilian Conservation Corps. I read further:

> It is also receiving attention in the educational programs of the Works Progress Administration and the National Youth Administration. We plan to give further consideration to the experience of these emergency and new programs, and to the needs in the newer fields of vocational education such as the distributive and the public-service occupations.

This is another quotation from the committee report:

> In the judgment of this committee the necessary statistical studies for planning economically sound programs of vocational education do not exist.

We called before our committee the Commissioner of Education. Of course, he was bound by the Budget estimate of $3,000,000; he could not advocate any expenditure of any more money. We did ask him, however, to make a break-down of the authorization in the George-Deen Act to indicate a 3- or 4-year program whereby we could step gradually into this new activity. Instead of jumping from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 in 1 year, I am sure that it is the sound judgment of the best educators in the United States that it ought to be broken down into a program covering advances over 3 or 4 years.

Let me comment further upon a remark made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] a few moments ago. He stated that heretofore there had been a stepping-up from year to year in these appropriations. That is true as to every kind of vocational education work that has been undertaken either by the Department of the Interior or by the Department of Agriculture. In all instances, except in this, the authorizing legislation steps it up a year at a time. For some reason last year Congress authorized a lump sum of $14,000,000 without a step-up.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the reason for that was that we had been carrying on the program since 1917, and we had been constantly trying to step it up to above $20,000,000, and last year happened to be the year in which we got the bill through the Congress. The last appropriation that was made did not contain any step-ups; it was the act passed in 1934, which provided a flat appropriation of an additional sum of $3,000,000 annually.

Mr. HAYDEN. But that $3,000,000 had been arrived at by a series of step-ups, had it not?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, it had; but let me say that the Senator is reading from a report I have not seen. It is a very simple matter to explain why the commission which wrote that report wants to deal with the subject in another way. I will take occasion to say something about it directly.

It was back during the administration of President Hoover when I introduced into this body a bill for a permanent appropriation, and the step-ups were made by Mr. Hoover, who would not approve a bill for a blank increase and on a permanent basis. I had no objection to taking what we could get, but we were simply driven to it; and now, after these long years of experimentation and of demonstration of the value of this work, when there is a desire to carry on vocational agriculture in the W. P. A. and in the National Youth Association there is a disposition to come in and interfere with this program for the single purpose of having the funds handled in Washington only.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not so interpret the recommendation made to the President in the report of this commission. The commission has nothing to do with the Works Progress Administration; it has nothing to do with the Civilian Conservation Corps; it has nothing to do with any of these other activities. It is a committee of educators, the best the President could assemble, who were asked to study this subject and they reported.

There are several significant facts to be considered; first, that we have been appropriationg $10,000,000 a year, and they urge that there is not the necessity and that it is unwise, due to the lack of trained personnel, to undertake this work on so grand a scale in such a hurry.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr, President, I should like to ask the Senator about how many or what percentage of the pupils in the public schools would be able to get the benefit of vocational education even under the appropriation made by the House of $14,000,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. I cannot furnish the Senator with that information. I had occasion to meet the president of a great State university not so very long ago. My recollection is that under the $14,000,000 program there would be some 84 or 86 high schools in his State which could institute programs of vocational education. That would be what the program meant. I asked him to tell me candidly whether they had in his State the trained personnel to put into those eighty-odd high schools, and his answer was, "No; we have not." His conclusion was that it would be very much better to wait a year or two and allow the State university properly to prepare instructors.

Mr. PEPPER. Does not the Senator think that it might be a little better to err on the side of giving the benefit of this service to the larger number of people, rather than on the other side?

Mr. HAYDEN. This money goes entirely to one pay roll, and if incompetent instructors are placed on the pay roll, they will not be gotten off the pay roll. On the other hand, if time is taken properly to prepare the instructors, there will be better instructors, there will not be men giving out misinformation to pupils who are studying vocational subjects.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator does not have any figures as to the number of unemployed school teachers in the United States, does he?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am sure I have not, but I rather suspect that the better school teachers are employed, and that those who are not well qualified are out of jobs.

Mr. PEPPER. That is a suspicion which, I dare say, the school teachers of the United States wish were well founded.

Mr. HAYDEN. If that is the case, and we are in a big hurry, we go out and pick up anyone who says he is qualified and put him on a pay roll. This money goes to salaries only, it goes to add to the pay rolls in the States. No State could have made a vast series of contracts. I was surprised to hear the Senator from Alabama say that it meant the discharge of a large number of teachers. That could not be possible, because the amount of money which has been heretofore appropriated by Congress is increased by the committee amendment, so no one could lose a job. Where a school board had come to a teacher and said, "If we get this Federal money we will hire you, and if we do not get it we will not", if that means discharging someone, it presents a different picture from what I ordinarily understand the term "discharge" to mean.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator anticipate that the teachers will prepare themselves for this kind of work upon no more basic assurance than that there probably will be an appropriation in the future?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is exactly the assurance we have tried to give and to write into the law.

That was for the further development of vocational education for the first installment of a 4-year program to be carried out under the George-Deen Act. Then in our committee report we set up exactly what that program is to be, upon which the State may rely.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, with reference to the teachers, I may state that it is my understanding that they have already been employed upon the basis of a reasonable expectation that the program would be carried out. In addition to that fact, a great many additions have been made to the schools; and from the statements made to me by a friend from Alabama who is closely connected with the subject, I am confident that it would mean the discharge of many from employment, and it would mean a release of others from the promise of employment which has been made. While it is distressing that 100 men should be released from an agreement which may have been made, the bad feature is that it would mean the loss of that much training for the pupils who would otherwise receive vocational education in line with the authorization which had been previously made.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Board had knowledge of at least two facts if they did not know all the facts. The first is that Congress had passed a bill authorizing this undertaking to be made. The second is that, instead of asking the Congress, when the Budget was made up last January, for the $14,000,000 authorized by law, the request was for only $3,000,000. What basis did they have for hiring teachers in the light of a Budget estimate that was only $3,000,000 out of a $14,000,000 authorization?

Mr. BLACK. In my judgment, they had plenty of basis. They knew that Congress itself had authorized $14,000,000. They knew that Congress itself would be the body to vote, and that the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget would not be final. Naturally, they probably assumed that if Congress last year thought we ought to have $14,000,000 to give the boys and girls vocational education, Congress would not change its mind simply because a Budget Director reported an estimate of $3,000,000.

So far as I am concerned, I have not changed my mind, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget to the contrary notwithstanding. I still believe we ought to carry out the $14,000,000 authorization, and I am confident the money can be used to the advantage of the education of the farmers' sons and daughters, and not only for them but for others who are taking vocational-education training.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought something besides farming was taught.

Mr. BLACK. Teaching is provided for others. However, a suggestion was made awhile ago with reference to rural schools, and that is the reason I mentioned the matter. But simply because the Bureau of the Budget sent to Congress a $3,000,000 estimate, or because some committee made a report that it did not believe the full amount of money could be used to advantage, I hope we shall not be persuaded either by the Bureau of the Budget or by the committee, because, as stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], if we do not have the teachers and cannot use the money to advantage, it will be returned into the Treasury.

Mr. HAYDEN. No, Mr. President; that is not what will happen at all.

Mr. BLACK. What will happen?

Mr. HAYDEN. Ill-trained and incompetent teachers will be employed, because this money is all for pay roll, and not a dollar of it will be allowed to get away if it is made available. Do not let the Senator deceive himself and think that any of this money will ever come back to the Treasury.

Mr. BLACK. It may be that the teachers will not be trained as well as they would be if they had several years of experience; but how will they get the experience unless they are trained? Let us train them for the work.

Mr. HAYDEN. Who are the agents now, and who are those who get training in agriculture? We have established a system of this kind, and throughout the United States the universities are giving courses of instruction to young people, and they get into that field. In the beginning, as I stated a while ago, there had to be employed the man who was supposed to be the best farmer in the county; and the Department of Agriculture will say today that people were placed on the pay roll then who never should have been put on it, and once on they never get off.

Mr. BLACK. I am not sure they are not better equipped to teach than others.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Is not the Senator aware of the fact that in every State we have agricultural colleges, and in many States we have agricultural colleges of high character that are turning out well-trained men and women?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is exactly what the committee proposes to take advantage of.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me remind the Senator that we have had such colleges for years; and, instead of a shortage of teachers, employment cannot be found for the teachers who are actually graduated by these training schools.

Let me ask the Senator also if he does not know that before any school can qualify and can participate in the distribution of this fund, it must have a teaching staff which meets the requirements of the Department in Washington. The school must come up to that standard. Persons who are not trained cannot be placed at the head of these schools.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, let us see what kind of people we get. I will admit for the sake of the argument that there are available plenty of persons who are qualified as teachers in agricultural subjects. Then we come to the question of home economics. Whether there is such a bountiful supply in that field, I cannot certify. Certainly with respect to the trades and industries they do not exist. Those who have been employed generally are tradesmen, carpenters, blacksmiths, and mechanics, who have not had the training in teaching methods. Now we enter into teaching in a wholly new field, that of distributive occupations—that is to say, vocational education in distribution occupations. That is something entirely new, something that never has been taught in the high schools before. We may get a grocery clerk to act as teacher. The business of grocer is a distributive occupation. We may get someone who is engaged in some retail business, distributive occupation, and put him in the high school to teach it, but we will have better instruction if we wait a year or two and have the universities properly prepare the teachers.

Money is provided in the bill for teachers' training for these purposes. It is an increase over the old Smith-Hughes Act, providing $1,089,000. We propose to add to that $557,000 for teacher training in these subjects. That is the way to bring about a better system.

I do not desire to take the time of the Senate by any elaboration of the proposition; but I can state frankly that it is the best judgment of those who have studied the problem of vocational education throughout the United States that we should not make this sudden increase in the appropriation, but should do as we have done in all cases, step it up.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, is it not a fact that we have increased the appropriation that is now available?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The committee has added how much to the amount that is being used?

Mr. HAYDEN. It has added for salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of, and maintenance of teacher training in, distributive occupational subjects, $649,000; and for preparing teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural, trade and industrial, and home-economics subjects, $557,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In other words, we have added more than $1,000,000 to the amount that is now available?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask how much the committee added to the amount which is now available for the teaching of vocational agriculture?

Mr. HAYDEN. We have reappropriated the amount now available for this particular year.

Mr. GEORGE. Nothing has been added besides that?

Mr. HAYDEN. Nothing besides that.

Mr. GEORGE. How much has been added to the teaching of home economics?

Mr. HAYDEN. We have left those three projects exactly as they were, as recommended by the President's commission.

Mr. GEORGE. And nothing has been added to trade and industry?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the same as the other items.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, as illustrating the nature of the problem which is presented by this question I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations found itself confronted with the necessity of making provision for expenditures that are absolutely essential under law, as well as making expenditures or continuing expenditures for objects which are merely desirable. Among the Budget estimates which came to us was one providing for $3,000,000 for the enforcement of what is known as the Guffey Coal Act. When the Congress passed the bituminous coal act it created a special commission to administer the coal industry and committed to that Commission certain duties, some of which were mandatory and some of which were discretionary. This Bituminous Coal Commission has the duty of administering the bituminous coal industry throughout the United States. For the purpose of making that administration acceptable and reasonable and convenient to all of the coal-mining districts it was provided that the Coal Commission could establish regional offices in order that those who are engaged in producing coal, those who are engaged in mining coal, and those who are engaged in purchasing coal might not find it necessary to go to the expense of coming to Washington every time a question arose.

The cost of establishing these five regional offices throughout the United States was something over $600,000.

The Bituminous Coal Commission went to the Budget Bureau and laid down an estimate calling for the expenditure of a little more than $5,000,000. The Bureau of the Budget cut that estimate to $3,000,000. The committee accepted the action of the Bureau of the Budget. The Coal Commission accepted the action of the Bureau of the Budget. And this bill, as it has now been presented to the Senate, calls for the expenditure of $3,000,000 to carry on only a portion of the work which the Congress by law has committed to this Commission. The Budget Bureau and the committee were trying to save a little money.

It is perfectly obvious to the members of the Appropriations Committee that the Commission cannot possibly carry out all of its duties in an efficient manner and in a manner that will be convenient for those who are intimately affected by the operations of the law on the money which we are now appropriating, but the committee was under the necessity of making some attempt to keep the appropriations within the revenues of the Federal Government. There is not a Member of the Senate who does not know that we are facing a stupendous deficit, and that every dollar we add to this appropriation bill, whether it be for vocational education or for anything else, will increase the deficit. Let us not make any mistake about that.

When the Appropriations Committee comes upon the floor urging the Senate, as it does, to hold appropriations down to those which are deemed to be essential, we are immediately confronted with the demand emanating from all sections of the country, sent here by telegrams to Members of the House and Members of the Senate, saying "this must be done, that must be done; increase this appropriation, increase that appropriation", all without the slightest consideration for estimates or revenues. We have increased this appropriation by $1,000,000, but the theme song seems to be "no additional appropriation is made available."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to ask the Senator whether he does not think it probable that money spent now for vocational education will save a relief appropriation in years to come?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not know what may happen in years to come, but I do know that any increase in this appropriation at this time is going to increase the deficit of the Federal administration, and the Finance Committee is not bringing in any measure to provide new taxation.

Mr. PEPPER. And the failure to spend the money for this kind of a purpose is going to cause a deficit in the population of the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I doubt that very much. I think that is one of the happy arguments that are made by those who are anxious to get upon the pay roll of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if the Appropriations Committee of the Senate of the United States is to have any credit at all in this body it really ought to be sustained upon an important amendment of this character.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of rejecting the committee amendment insofar as it relates to the appropriation for vocational education. As I understand, these items should be considered on their merits and on the basis of the purpose for which the appropriation is designed. The Coal Commission, it seems to me, has absolutely no relevancy so far as the merits of this particular appropriation affecting vocational education are concerned.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator came upon the floor a few days ago urging an amendment of the tax laws, which would have increased the revenues of the Federal Government. I was happy to support his amendment but it was defeated. He may with propriety ask for increased expenditures for he has tried to get increased revenues.

The question, however, as I see it, is not whether a particular expenditure is meritorious, but whether, in view of the present condition of the Federal Treasury, we can afford to expend additional funds for purposes of this kind which are really not essential, no matter how meritorious they may be.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I take the other view, and I contend that we cannot afford not to spend the money for vocational education.

I appreciated very greatly the Senator's support of the amendment which I offered to the tax measure a few days ago, but, as I started to say before being interrupted, I do not believe the action which the committee has taken with regard to other amendments should influence Senators in their judgment in determining whether or not this amendment should be accepted or rejected.

So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of giving the Coal Commission a sufficient appropriation so that it may fulfill the responsibilities and perform obligations that have been devolved on it by the Congress in enacting the statute. But that is not the issue upon which the Senate is about to vote. The question is whether or not the Senate is willing to appropriate the full authorization for vocational education.

I think that every Senator who has studied the hearings taken by the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate in relation to the relief bill, and every Senator who listened to the arguments upon that measure when it was under consideration must be impressed with the fact that one of the chief factors in our problem of unemployment in this country today is that each year approximately 500,000 young men and young women, untrained and unsuited to find responsible places of employment in their communities, are coming of working age.

It is well enough for the Senator from Arizona to take the position that this program should not be expanded so rapidly in order that time may be afforded to train teachers for it; but the fact of the matter is, Mr. President, that the depression is now in its eighth year and we have not adopted an adequate program for vocational education. That is one of the factors that is contributing to the permanent unemployment problem with which this country is confronted.

Even if we provide the full authorization by rejecting the committee amendment we will not, in my judgment, have adopted a program for vocational education in the United States which is commensurate or adequate to deal with it. Therefore I hope that the committee amendment will be rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to state the reasons actuating me in supporting the subcommittee with reference to this amendment.

At the time the President signed the George-Deen Act he issued a statement that he would appoint a committee to make an investigation of the subject. The report of that committee has been referred to by the Senator from Arizona. The committee which was composed of distinguished educators reported:

> The committee is unanimous in the recommendation that financial support by the Federal Government for the types of vocational education now receiving support should be continued without curtailment during the coming fiscal year. We are not in favor of the enlargement of Federal support at this time.

After that report was considered by the subcommittee of which the Senator from Arizona is chairman, the subcommittee reported to the full Committee on Appropriations the sum carried in the bill. I think the membership of this body will say that the Senator from Arizona has never been regarded as being niggardly or economical when it comes to appropriations, and certainly he has never failed to show interest in the cause of vocational education. I believe that the cause of vocational education would be best promoted by following the report of the committee, which increases the amount available by more than $1,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

Reference has been made to the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget. Of course, we are not bound entirely by the Budget estimate, and neither are we bound by the fact that an authorization has heretofore been established by the Congress for a given amount. If the Congress appropriated this year every dollar that has been authorized by acts of Congress the deficit would be much greater than we anticipate. As to the Budget estimate I call attention to the fact that about the time that this matter was considered in the House the President sent a message to the Congress in which he said:

> It is a matter of concern to you and to me, who are working for a balanced Budget, that so many special groups exert the strongest pressure to bring about increases in Government expenditures. They pay little attention to the fact that the Budget as submitted represents a coordinated fiscal program and that material departures therefrom destroy the whole purpose of the program. If we are to avoid a continuation of deficits we must resist the importunities or provide the necessary revenue to meet the increasing cost.

The President said in the same Budget message:

> While I recognize many opportunities to improve social and economic conditions through Federal acts, I am convinced that the success of our whole program and the permanent security of our people demands that we adjust all expenditures within the limit of my Budget estimate.

His Budget estimate was $3,000,000. The report of the Senate Appropriations Committee exceeds that amount. In my opinion the amount recommended by the committee provides all the funds that are essential and all that can be wisely expended during the next fiscal year.

I want to pay tribute to the most effective work that has been done in a propaganda way in a long, long time. We have become quite excited at times in our investigation of lobbyists and propagandists, and ordinarily we call for the appointment of a committee to investigate. There comes to my attention with reference to this matter an instance of most effective propaganda.

When this matter was pending in the House after the House Appropriations Committee had gone into it thoroughly and made its report, some Members of Congress became quite active to increase the appropriation of $14,000,000. That amount was finally provided in the bill as it came to the Senate. Some House Members did not know from whence the pressure came. Finally it was learned that there had been sent throughout the country a telegram similar to the following:

> Dr. L. A. WILSON,
> State Department of Education, Albany, N. Y.:
> Seems quite apparent that House Appropriations Committee may not recommend sufficient amount for George-Dean vocational appropriation. Amendment to report of appropriations committee will be submitted on floor of House by Congressman FULLER, Arkansas, to increase amount recommended by committee for vocation education. Very essential that your Congressman contact, cooperate with, and support Congressman FULLER and his amendment. Unless this is done vocational appropriations for next 5 years will be in serious danger. This is most urgent crisis we have faced during the last 3 years. We must have flood of telegrams and air-mail letters from influential persons and organizations to all your Congressmen requesting them to cooperate with Congressman FULLER. Chances for satisfactory vocational appropriation depend upon magnitude and thoroughness of this effort. Telegrams and letters must reach Congressmen Tuesday and Wednesday at the latest. Telegrams to Congressman FITZPATRICK should not mention Fuller amendment but should urge full fourteen million vocational appropriation. A thorough job should be done in his congressional district.
> (Signed) L. H. DENNIS,
> Secretary, American Vocational Association, Denrike Building, 1010 Vermont Ave., Washington, D .C.

The telegrams came and the votes came and the $14,000,000 was appropriated. The bill was reported to the Senate by the Senate Appropriations Committee last Saturday. A few moments ago I was advised that 73 telegrams had been received in my office during the last 3 hours. They read alike, and that they are inspired is evident. Somebody has been spending from 60 to 75 cents per telegram to wire me to vote for the proposed increase in this appropriation. I do not blame the Mr. Dennis whose name appears on the telegram I have read. I suspect that he has inspired these telegrams. I do not blame this man for wiring throughout my State, not only to educators, but to American Legion Posts and labor organizations and farm organizations; but it is the most thorough job that has been done since the days when we received telegrams to oppose the utility holding-company bill.

This telegram says that "a thorough job should be done in the congressional district" of a certain Congressman. It may be I have been singled out for similar attention, but one Senator bows his head to indicate that he has been subject to the same bombardment in the last few hours. My purpose in referring to it is to send a message to this gentleman in the city of Washington that I have received his telegrams via South Carolina and, having received them, that I am going to stand by the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee because I believe it is the wise thing to do for the cause of vocational education in this country. I believe that we should increase this appropriation gradually, and that neither Mr. Dennis nor any other man located in an office in the city of Washington can send telegrams to my State to flood me with messages and influence my vote on this or any other question.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am strongly in favor of a substantial appropriation for vocational education. It is no new proposition. It has been invoked since the World War. We started vocational training for the veterans of the World War. That was a very popular movement. It did a great deal of good. It has been going on in a great many schools for several years. It seems to me it is one of the methods for a permanent solution of the unemployment situation.

Only recently someone told me about a check-up in his State in regard to those on relief and the unemployed to see whether or not any of those on relief at the present time had ever had vocational educational training within the last 2 or 3 years. A thorough check-up disclosed that not a single one on relief had taken vocational training.

This afternoon I received a telegram from the president of the State school of science, Mr. E. F. Riley, of Wahpeton, N. Dak., reading as follows:

> This school turned away 300 students desiring trades training last year. All of them could have been placed in jobs. Demand for trade-trained youth far exceeds supply. State legislature appropriated funds for a new building now ready to start construction; also appropriated funds for additional instructors to take care of students who could not be admitted last year. All these preparations made expecting the full allotment of George-Deen funds in accordance with the act.

That is just one school. I presume they heard this morning about the appropriation being reduced. Three or four other State institutions in my State, I am sure, would join in a similar message because they are strongly in favor of vocational training.

It seems to me, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said, that we cannot afford to cut down vocational training, especially when we have so many unemployed and are confronted with cutting down relief and unemployment of necessity. Vocational training, it seems to me, is the best method of taking care of the young people who are coming along, and will be on the unemployed list or on relief if they are not trained to some vocation so they can earn an honest living.

I hope the amendment of the committee will be rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Logan	Reynolds
Andrews	Copeland	Lonergan	Robinson
Ashurst	Dieterich	Lundeen	Russell
Austin	Ellender	McAdoo	Schwartz
Bailey	Frazier	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	George	McGill	Sheppard
Barkley	Gerry	McKellar	Smathers
Berry	Green	Minton	Steiwer
Bilbo	Guffey	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Hale	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Hayden	Nye	Townsend
Burke	Holt	O'Mahoney	Truman
Byrnes	Hughes	Overton	Van Nuys
Capper	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper	Wagner
Caraway	King	Pittman	Walsh
Chavez	La Follette	Pope	Wheeler
Clark	Lodge	Radcliffe

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BLACK. I ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment in the form of a substitute for the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Alabama, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the committee amendment on page 126, it is proposed to insert the following:

> Further development of vocational education: For carrying out the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved June 8, 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1488–1490), $7,241,500: Provided, That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the apportionment to the States and Territories shall be computed on the basis of 50 percent of the sum authorized for each of the purposes enumerated in sections 1, 2, and 3: Provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 providing minimum allotments, the allotment of funds to any State or Territory for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, shall be not less than 50 percent of the minimum amount specified for each of the purposes enumerated in these sections: Provided further, That the apportionment to the States shall be computed on the basis of not to exceed $7,398,750 for the fiscal year 1938.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, first a parliamentary inquiry.

The item for vocational education carried in the bill as it came from the House has been stricken out by the Senate Appropriations Committee; and the question, of course, is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Senate committee. Those who favor it will vote "yea." Those who are opposed to it, who wish to restore the provision inserted in the bill in the House, will vote "nay." The inquiry is, Is the amendment just proposed by the Senator from Alabama in order at this stage of the proceedings?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order in lieu of the entire amendment reported by the committee, but it has the effect of a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Then the vote will come first on that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will come first on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on that point I wish merely to say—I will not make any argument about it—that the amendment to the committee amendment, as I understand, is the provision as reported by the House Appropriations Committee; not the amendment as adopted by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, now the parliamentary situation as I have just stated it. Those who wish to sustain the Senate committee should vote "yea", and those who wish to reject that amendment and restore the provision made by the House should vote "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the inquiry I made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before the roll call begins, in view of the fact that a great number of the Senators now in their seats were not here during the debate, it seems to me attention should be called to the fact that the committee amendment provides for approximately $1,000,000 more than is now being expended, and that the bulk of the sum which appears in the House bill was added upon the floor of the House. So the request which is now being made to vote down the committee amendment is a request to increase the appropriation without support by the Appropriations Committee in either the Senate or the House; and, as I called to the attention of the Senate a few moments ago, every dollar of this appropriation over and above that which has been recommended by the Committee on Appropriations is adding to the deficit now existing in the Federal Treasury.

The Appropriations Committee is emphatically in favor of the committee amendment.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming if the amount at present left in the bill by the committee would not be adding to the deficit.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It would. That is just another reason why it should not be increased.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is like the fellow who had lots of debts—why worry about them? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is right; spend all that you have, and all that you do not have.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I had not expected to say anything else, but I cannot refrain from calling to the attention of the Senate and calling to the attention of the country the fact that the Appropriations Committee have increased the appropriations carried in the House bill, which totaled $123,000,000, in round numbers, by more than $2,000,000 to $125,000,000. What happened? They simply cut the heart and life out of this appropriation for vocational education and then added other items in excess of the reduction made in the appropriation.

Where is the economy? My distinguished friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], is disturbed because someone sent him a telegram. I have received telegrams about almost every important issue I have ever faced since I became a Member of the Senate. I have never been afraid that anyone would convince me unless I believed honestly that he was right. I have never been afraid that anyone would make me do the wrong thing, and I do not think the Senator from South Carolina is disturbed about that. But he is disturbed now because these telegrams are coming in. I have not spent a dime to bring a telegram here, and never would if I stayed here another 20 years.

I think every Member of the Senate knows that very well. But the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate did not make this report until sometime Saturday. There was no news of it until Saturday night. The people of this country are interested in this vocational educational provision, and they have a right to be interested in it. I say again to the Senator from South Carolina and to others who are disturbed about it that you cannot take all of your economy out of the hides of the boys and the girls who want some sort of vocational education in the rural high schools without hearing from them. You will hear from it now or at some other time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. While the report of the committee carries a million dollars more than is now being expended——

Mr. GEORGE. Two million more.

Mr. BARKLEY. How does the amount reported compare with the amount authorized under the act of last year?

Mr. GEORGE. I am not so familiar with the reports of the Committee on Appropriations, but I will read the figures:

Amount of regular and supplemental estimates for 1938, $124,463,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am speaking of this particular vocational education item.

Mr. GEORGE. Approximately $10,000,000 more.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am seeking to obtain information as to the relation between the amount carried in the committee amendment and the authorization for this purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. The amount carried in the committee amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. The amount which reduced the House appropriation from fourteen million to four million. How much less is that than the amount which was authorized under the law to be appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. GEORGE. Approximately $10,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the item in the House bill absorbs the entire authorization?

Mr. GEORGE. It does.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, during the present fiscal year there is available for vocational education $7,157,000 under the Smith-Hughes Act, which is a permanent appropriation, and $3,084,000 under what is known as the George-Ellzey Act, which will expire this year. The committee recommends a total appropriation of $4,290,000 in lieu of the $3,084,000. So that the total amount available for vocational education if the committee amendment shall prevail will be $7,000,000 under the Smith-Hughes Act, $4,200,000 under the George-Deen Act, a total of $11,448,000, an increase of over a million dollars above the appropriation of last year.

The proposal we are to vote on will include the amount of $7,000,000, will add $14,000,000 to that, and will make the total for vocational education $21,955,000, or an increase over the present amount of money appropriated for vocational education in this fiscal year of about $11,000,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. That will still be within the amount which the Congress has authorized by law to be appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no question about that. The only difference is that the authorization is of one lump sum, and heretofore Congress has stepped up such appropriations. The committee suggested a program that will increase the amount each year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has referred to the fact that while the committee has decreased the appropriation, it has increased others. What are two or three of the outstanding increases, and for what purposes are they appropriated, so that we may judge the merits of this decrease in comparison with the increases which have been referred to?

Mr. HAYDEN. The principal increase is the appropriation for the so-called Natchez Trace, which is in the same situation as this item. There is a law for the appropriation of $10,000,000 for the Natchez Trace Highway in Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, and for the so-called Blue Ridge Parkway. The committee recommended $7,200,000 for those two purposes; that is one of the principal increases allowed in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the pending amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 126, line 3, to strike out the following:

Further development of vocational education: For carrying out the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved June 8, 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1488–1490), $14,483,000.

And to insert the following:

Further development of vocational education: For the first installment of a 4-year program to carry out the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved June 8, 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1488–1490):

For salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects, $1,031,000;

For salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of home-economics subjects, $1,021,000;

For salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of trade and industrial subjects, $1,032,000;

For salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, supervisors, and directors of, and maintenance of teacher training in, distributive occupational subjects, $649,000;

For preparing teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural, trade and industrial, and home-economics subjects, $557,000;

In all, $4,290,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIETERICH (when Mr. LEWIS' name was called). I announce that my colleague is detained from the Senate on departmental matters.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent, and I do not know how he would vote if present. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are detained in important committee meetings. If present and voting, I am advised that they would vote "nay."

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are detained on important public business.

The Senators from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW and Mr. HITCHCOCK] are detained in Government Departments on matters pertaining to their State.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] are detained on departmental matters.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] is necessarily detained from the Senate. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "nay."

I desire to add that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is necessarily detained from the Senate, is opposed to the committee amendment, and, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote on this question if present.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—26

Adams	Green	McKellar	Steiwer
Ashurst	Guffey	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Bailey	Hale	Murray	Townsend
Burke	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Truman

Davis	Herring	Moore

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 3, to insert: "In all, $4,290,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 130, line 3, after the word "of" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000"; so as to read:

Not to exceed an aggregate of $3,000 of appropriations available to the Office of Education for salaries and expenses for vocational education shall be used for expenses of attendance at meetings of educational associations and other organizations which in the discretion of the Commissioner of Education are necessary for the efficient discharge of its responsibilities.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Government in the Territories—Government of the Virgin Islands", on page 135, after line 12, to insert:

For defraying the deficits in the treasuries of the municipal governments because of the excess of current expenses over current revenues for the fiscal year 1938, municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, $60,000, and municipality of St. Croix, $50,000; in all, $110,000, to be paid to the said treasuries in monthly installments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. HAYDEN. By direction of the committee, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

Furniture, furnishings, and equipment, new Interior Department Building: The provisions of Section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not apply to any expenditure authorized under this head in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1619), when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. By direction of the committee, I offer a further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission created by the joint resolution approved May 23, 1928, as amended, shall cease and terminate June 30, 1938, and the unexpended balances of the appropriations heretofore made for carrying out the purposes of such joint resolution, as amended, shall be available until June 30, 1938.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Finally, Mr. President, I offer a further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 142, after line 3, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph as follows:

SEC. 3. The appropriations and authority with respect to appropriations contained herein shall be available from and including July 1, 1937, for the purposes respectively provided in such appropriations and authority. All obligations incurred during the period between July 1, 1937, and the date of the enactment of this act in anticipation of such appropriations and authority are hereby ratified and confirmed if in accordance with the terms thereof.

Mr. HAYDEN. That amendment is offered in the event that the bill shall not become a law before the end of the fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. I offer a further amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 142, line 4, it is proposed to change the section number to read "4."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in line 16, page 10, I move to amend by striking out "$3,000,000" and inserting "$3,600,000" in lieu thereof.

This amendment is intended to provide the sum necessary to permit the Bituminous Coal Commission to provide five regional offices throughout the United States in accordance with the terms of the Bituminous Coal Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To make that amendment in order it will be necessary that the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment, on page 10, line 16, was agreed to, be reconsidered. I gave notice that I should make this request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The amendment is that the figures "$3,000,000" be stricken out, and the figures "$3,600,000" inserted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to the committee amendment on page 10, line 16.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the committee amendment on page 10, line 16.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the bill, the following:

No portion of the money appropriated in this or any other act shall be used for the payment of expenses or compensation of any officer or employee of the United States or any other person while en route to, engaged in, or returning from any dedication, cornerstone laying, or ceremonies connected with the beginning, completion, or progress of any building, bridge, highway, or other public works constructed from funds of the United States.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, that amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, of course, the amendment in its present form is subject to a point of order; but the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] realizes clearly that I can amend it to make it in order on this bill by limiting its application to this bill. It seems to me it ought not to apply particularly to this particular appropriation bill, however, because, as a matter of fact, the officials whose salaries and traveling expenses are covered in this bill have not been the most flagrant violators in regard to expending public funds in the matter of traveling to make political speeches ostensibly at the dedication of post-office buildings or subtreasuries or roads or highways or other things. If the Senator from Arizona makes the point of order, I will amend my amendment by striking out the words "or any other act" and offer the amendment again in that form.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this bill, in that it seeks to change existing law, and is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK. I would be glad to have the Senator from Arizona state his views on that point. If amended as I have suggested, this is a limitation only on the funds appropriated in this bill, because I have stricken out the words "or any other act."

If the Senator from Arizona will withhold his point of order just a moment I will say that it is a matter of knowledge common to everyone that a very great amount of public funds have been expended, not only in the last 3 or 4 years during this administration, but over a period of years, by public officials, officials of the Treasury Department, the Post Office Department, Interior Department, and every other department of the Government, who have taken advantage of the dedication of a public building or the opening of a highway or the opening of a bridge or any other public work upon which the funds of the Government of the United States are expended to hold forth their own views and make political stump speeches. I submit that in a time when the country is interested in economy, as we all claim to be, there could not be any more wanton expenditure of money than this expenditure to keep officials out of their offices in attempts to influence Congress.

In the form in which I have last offered the amendment I suggest to the Senator from Arizona and to the Chair that it is an entirely proper limitation on an appropriation bill at any time for Congress to say that "no part of these funds shall be expended" in a certain way.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have been trying to think of anyone connected with the Department of the Interior who has traveled over the United States laying cornerstones and making speeches. I cannot remember any such instance.

Mr. CLARK. I can inform the Senator from Arizona of several instances of my own knowledge.

Mr. HAYDEN. In the Interior Department?

Mr. CLARK. Yes. As a matter of fact, I do not wish to make any invidious personal references and therefore offered the amendment to apply to all Government activities. If the Senator from Arizona desires me to do so, I can tell of certain instances in which I have heard officers in the Department covered by the bill now before us. I do not desire to do that because it seems to me to be a principle of general application that Government officials ought not to take advantage of occasions such as I have mentioned to go throughout the country and impose their political views on the people of the United States, who after all, are taxpayers and pay all the expenses of the Government.

Mr. HAYDEN. The only dedicatory occasion I remember in connection with the Interior Department was held in the city of Washington where the Secretary of the Interior took part in the dedication ceremonies of the new Interior Department Building. There was no expense to the United States in that connection.

Mr. CLARK. No one has any objection to such a thing as that. We all know of such instances as I have mentioned, and it would take an investigation by a Senate committee to compile a list anywhere near complete; it probably would not even then be a complete list of the number of dedications that have been held in connection with public-works projects and W. P. A. projects—Treasury buildings and most notably post-office buildings, and this, that, and the other thing. The amendment I offered simply applies to every governmental activity and applies against the expenditure of public funds in propaganda in that connection.

Mr. HAYDEN. No appropriation for the Works Progress Administration is carried in this bill. No expenditure by the Public Works Administration is provided for in the bill. Those are provided for in deficiency bills and are not in any manner connected with the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Then the amendment certainly would not injure anybody and I do not see why the Senator from Arizona should object to it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Merely on principle.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator object to the principles of prohibiting the expenditure of Government funds by employees in going around and making stump speeches?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; but that implies criticims of a department not guilty of that practice, when the Senator desires to reach officers in other departments who may have done what he has stated.

Mr. CLARK. I offered the amendment in general terms. The Senator from Arizona announced he was going to make the point of order against it. I revised the amendment and reduced it to a status where it seems to me it is entirely in order on this bill. If the amendment should be adopted on this bill I intend to offer it on every other appropriation bill that comes along. Further than that, whether the amendment is adopted or not, I intend to offer it on every appropriation bill that comes before the Senate. I think it is a very vicious practice that ought to be stopped.

Mr. HAYDEN. Realizing that this is the last appropriation bill to be passed at this session of Congress, if the Senator is going to offer his amendment he will have to wait until next January to do it. Why pick on this particular measure at the last moment when the officials of the Interior Department have not been guilty of the practice to which the Senator objects?

Mr. CLARK. The officials of the Interior Department in common with those of all other departments have been guilty of the practice. I announce my intention of offering the amendment on every future appropriation bill. I intend to offer the amendment on every appropriation bill that comes before the Senate so long as I remain a Member of the Senate, until the principle is established.

Mr. HAYDEN. Perhaps we have discussed it long enough. I insist upon my point of order and ask the Chair to rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the amendment as modified by the Senator from Missouri is in order because it is merely a limitation upon the appropriation provided for in the pending bill.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. (Putting the question.) The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	McCarran	Radcliffe
Andrews	Frazier	McGill	Robinson
Bailey	George	McKellar	Schwartz
Bankhead	Gerry	Minton	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Green	Murray	Sheppard
Bilbo	Guffey	Neely	Smathers
Black	Hale	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper	Truman
Clark	La Follette	Pittman	Wagner
Connally	McAdoo	Pope	Wheeler

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. With the consent of the Senator from Missouri, I wish to make an inquiry. My inquiry is whether or not——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present, and no business can be transacted until one is obtained.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I should like to complete my inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order until a quorum is obtained.

Mr. ADAMS. I was recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a point of order. A parliamentary inquiry is in order. That is not business. The Senator from Colorado is making a point of order.

Mr. ADAMS. I thought I was recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ADAMS. My inquiry was to be directed to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who has an amendment pending. My inquiry is whether or not the amendment adds anything to the present law, and whether or not under the present law any official of the Government can spend Government funds in traveling about the country for the purpose of dedicating buildings or making political speeches.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, manifestly at this juncture this proceeding is out of order. Until a quorum has been ascertained to be present, no business is in order; so I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Chief Clerk called the names of the absent Senators; and Mr. ASHURST, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. BONE, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. DIETERICH, Mr. DONAHEY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. KING, Mr. LEE, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. LODGE, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. OVERTON, and Mr. VAN NUYS answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. He has offered an amendment which seeks to forbid the use of any of the money appropriated by this bill for the traveling expenses of any public official to a dedication or to the laying of a cornerstone. My inquiry is whether or not, under the law as it now exists, any public official is authorized to use public money for traveling expenses for such purposes; because, unless the present law authorizes these personal trips, I see no occasion for voting for a repetition and restatement of what is already the law.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that, so far as I know, there is nothing in the law which forbids the use of public funds for trips to participate in dedications, or the laying of cornerstones, or the opening of parks or highways, or anything of the sort.

There is, to be sure, a statute, to which I have referred previously today—section 201 of the Criminal Code—which prohibits the use of Government funds generally for the purpose of trying to influence the action of Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I will yield in just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me. When a member of the Cabinet or any other Government official takes a trip for the purpose of opening up a public work, it is always then a question of fact as to whether he is violating section 201 of the Criminal Code by making a political speech.

I will say that I myself have been present at instances of that sort which were rather appalling to me. Not only has that occurred when the Republican Party was in power, and when I thought very bad taste was used, and when I thought that it was an abuse of public funds, but even when my own party was in power I have been present on occasions of that sort. I have been present when I was in entire accord with the propositions and policies that were being advocated by the speaker. Even when I myself have been lauded in very agreeable terms, I have felt that it was an abuse of public money. We all know of instances where some of our most prominent public officials probably have not been in their offices for an average of 3 days a month for the past 6 months, because of their activities in connection with the laying of cornerstones and making dedications and matters of that sort. It seems to me, without any reflection on anybody, as a matter of general public policy, that the situation should be corrected.

I shall be glad now to yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Missouri. Suppose the Senator's amendment should be adopted, what good would it do?

A man goes out on official business to inspect a project. While there, he dedicates it. Someone there probably invites him to make a speech on politics, or someone else makes a speech. What are we going to do about it?

I do not object to gentlemen making speeches. We are a political people. Our's is a political country. Everybody knows these men are away at Government expense. The masses of the public know it, and they more or less discount the utterances of the speakers. I am not going to vote for the Senator's amendment. Let them talk.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator think some officials really ought to put in a few days in Washington once in a while, attending to business, instead of cruising around over the country making dedications and laying cornerstones? Does the Senator think that having the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, or the Third Assistant Postmaster General, or the Second Assistant Postmaster General, or the First Assistant Postmaster General, or even the Postmaster General himself on hand to dedicate a building renders the Postal Service any more efficient than it would be if they simply opened the building and started to operate, take the mail through, and attend to the Postal Service, without any cornerstone laying and without any dedication?

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator that it is more the duty of the Post Office Department to deliver the mail than it is to deliver comments. Still, I do not think the amendment would be of any avail, and I shall not vote for it.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator think that a hospital built with P. W. A. funds would cure any more people by reason of having the Secretary of the Interior, or the Assistant Secretary, or the Assistant Director of the P. W. A., or anyone else there, than it would without that?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator a question. A public official, a Senator, a Representative, a Cabinet member, or any other public official, goes out and dedicates a building or a project, and while he is in town he makes a political speech. Is his mouth to be closed? Let him talk. I do not object to that.

Mr. CLARK. I draw the attention of the Senator to the fact that when a Senator goes out to attend one of these exercises he pays his own way, but when a Government official goes out to the laying of a cornerstone he travels at public expense, ostensibly on official business.

Mr. CONNALLY. Most of the people know that they talk about things they are told to talk about, and that frequently they are not reflecting their own views; and I do not object to that.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator think any public purpose is to be served by the expenditure of public funds in that way?

Mr. CONNALLY. They are going to expend the funds; let us not abuse our minds with any other idea.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with the Senator, in view of the fact that section 201 of the Criminal Code has been so flagrantly violated for so many years. It may be that the addition of another provision will not help in that situation, but I am offering the amendment, and I hope the Senator from Texas will see his way clear to support it.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator from Texas does not believe it possible to close the mouths of these officials, and there is no use in trying, and personally I do not want to try.

Mr. CLARK. I have no desire to close the mouth of anyone in this country. Any of them, so far as I am concerned, have a right to express their opinions as citizens at any time they please; but I think it is a miscarriage of the governmental function to have them express their opinions at governmental expense.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Can the Senator give us any information as to the number of post offices which have been dedicated since the 5th of February on the patriotic theme "Down with the Supreme Court"?

Mr. CLARK. I have only the information which has been contained in the public press, but I can say to the Senator that I am certain the number is very large.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Can the Senator give us any estimate as to the number of days the Members of the Senate—and I say this without any criticism whatsoever—receiving pay from the United States Government presumably to represent their States in this body, have missed sessions of the Senate while they were out making speeches on the other side of the Court question?

Mr. CLARK. I am not able to tell the Senator from Washington, particularly by reason of the fact that the Senate has been in session very few days during the present session of Congress. Since the Court bill was introduced there has been a cloud over the Senate during the entire session. Very few bills of any importance have been taken up. We have frequently adjourned for as long as 2 or 3 days at a time, and it would be impossible to tell the number of days any Senator has been away. I know of no means by which any Senator has been able to attend a dedication, or a cornerstone laying, or any other public function, at the public expense. If the Senator from Washington knows of any way by which that can be done, I should be very glad to have him disclose it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I know of no instances where Senators have had their expenses paid out of public funds, but I understand that there have been certain organizations in this country which have been interested in the Court matter which have at least made offers to Senators that their expenses would be paid if they made speeches against the proposal, and certain additions to the amount.

Mr. CLARK. I should be very glad to have the Senator take the floor in his own time and elucidate that suggestion. So far as I am concerned, no such proposition has been made to me. I have been in attendance at the sessions of the Senate continually except when I was detained by reason of certain misfortunes in my family. Senators on both sides have been out addressing the public at various times on the Court issue, which has nothing whatever to do with the subject I am discussing, which is the use by public officials, executive officials, of public funds for the purpose of attending ostensible public functions, which have nothing to do with public duties, but are really political discussions. Whether or not they were political discussions, I say that no public purpose is ever served by the dedication of a post office at Squedunk or the opening of a Federal building at Podunk. My amendment is directed to the proposition that no part of the public funds shall be expended for the traveling expenses of those attending ceremonies of that kind. If my amendment could be adopted, which I know it will not, the saving to the Nation in having public officials at their desks performing their functions might well amount to millions of dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The years and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment on page 9, beginning with line 16, was agreed to be reconsidered. I understand that Senators cast their votes on the amendment I offered to this amendment under a misunderstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I now reoffer my amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 10, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert "$3,600,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, to which I invite the attention of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 91, line 24, after the figures "1935", it is proposed to insert "or any subsequent allotment made or to be made from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 shall be and."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the language of the bill refers to the Industrial Recovery Act of 1933 and the emergency relief appropriation of 1935. The Senator desires to extend the same provisions to the act of 1937?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will take the matter to conference. I can give the Senator no assurance with regard to it, but I will be glad to take it to conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senate adopts the amendment, it will be construed as the act of the Senate, not of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to the text on page 66.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 66, line 6, it is proposed before the period to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That section 2 of the act of Congress approved August 12, 1935, shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether this is the amendment he brought to the attention of the committee and was authorized to offer.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 18, line 3, after the word "marihuana", to insert the word "peyote."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there other amendments to be offered? If not, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6523) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 88, 124, 126, and 134 to the bill, and concurred therein.

REDEFINITION OF JURISDICTION OF SPECIAL MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending the enactment of legislation for the purposes described therein.

The recommendations of the Secretary of State have my approval, and I request the enactment of legislation for the purposes indicated, in order that the difficulty that has arisen in relation to the jurisdiction of the Special Mexican Claims Commission may be overcome.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 28, 1937.

[Enclosure: Report of the Secretary of State.]

DRAFT CONVENTIONS OF TWENTIETH SESSION OF INTERNATIONAL LABOR CONFERENCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

The Congress, by a joint resolution approved June 19, 1934, authorized me to accept membership for the Government of the United States in the International Labor Organization. Pursuant to that authorization, I accepted such membership on behalf of the Government of the United States.

Representatives of this Government and of American employers and American labor attended the twentieth session of the International Labor Conference, held at Geneva June 4 to 24, 1936.

That conference adopted three draft conventions and two recommendations, to wit:

The draft convention (no. 50) concerning the regulation of certain special systems of recruiting workers;

The recommendation (no. 46) concerning the progressive elimination of recruiting;

The draft convention (no. 51) concerning the reduction of hours of work on public works;

The draft convention (no. 52) concerning annual holidays with pay;

The recommendation (no. 47) concerning annual holidays with pay.

In becoming a member of the organization and subscribing to its constitution this Government accepted the following undertaking in regard to such draft conventions and recommendations:

Each of the members undertakes that it will, within the period of 1 year at most from the closing of the session of the conference, or if it is impossible owing to exceptional circumstances to do so within the period of 1 year, then at the earliest practicable moment and in no case later than 18 months from the closing of the session of the conference, bring the recommendation or draft convention before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, for the enactment of legislation or other action. (Art. 19 (405), par. 5, Constitution of the International Labor Organization.)

In the case of a federal state, the power of which to enter into conventions on labor matters is subject to limitations, it shall be in the discretion of that government to treat a draft convention to which such limitations apply as a recommendation only, and the provisions of this article with respect to recommendations shall apply in such case. (Art. 19 (405), par. 9, Constitution of the International Labor Organization.)

In accordance with the foregoing undertaking the above-named three draft conventions and two recommendations are herewith submitted to the Congress with the accompanying report of the Secretary of State, and its enclosures, to which the attention of the Congress is invited.

I wish particularly to call to the attention of the Congress the draft convention (no. 51), concerning the reduction of hours of work on public works, and recommend that action be taken by the Congress on this draft convention at its earliest convenience.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REGULATION OF PRODUCTION AND MARKETING OF SUGAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith an international agreement regarding the regulation of production and marketing of sugar and an annexed protocol concerning transitional measures, signed at London on May 6, 1937, by the delegates of the United States of America and certain other countries, to an international conference held for the purpose of considering the problems of such regulation. The agreement and protocol were signed in respect of the Commonwealth of the Philippines by a delegate representing the Commonwealth in the United States delegation.

The instruments have my approval and I request the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the agreement. The agreement is designed to come into force on September 1, 1937, and it is a matter of great practical importance that the Senate give consideration to it at the present session. After the action that the Senate may take on the agreement, action by the Philippine Assembly will be necessary to implement the commitments made thereunder by the Commonwealth before I shall be in a position to ratify the agreement.

The attention of the Senate is invited to the report of the delegate of the United States to the London Conference, which I transmit with the agreement.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 28, 1937.

[Enclosures: Report of the Secretary of State; International Sugar Agreement; Report of the Delegate of the United States to the Sugar Conference at London.]

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry W. Witters to be State administrator in the Works Progress Administration for Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CONSIDERATION OF TREATIES

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the attention of Senators for a moment.

A large number of treaties are on the Executive Calendar of the Senate. It is not expected that they shall be taken up this afternoon; but I shall make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the first treaty with a view to having it the unfinished business, so that the Senate may take up the treaties tomorrow.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive J, Seventy-first Congress, first session, being the first treaty on the Executive Calendar.

The motion was agree to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive J (75th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty terminating article VIII of the treaty of December 30, 1853, signed by the Secretary of State and the Mexican Ambassador at Washington on April 13, 1937.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Arkansas if it is the purpose to consider the Argentine treaty tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is intended probably to bring that treaty forward, among others.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I now move that, in executive session, the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, it being the intention at that time to give consideration to the various treaties that are on the Executive Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in executive session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 29, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 28, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rt. Rev. Msgr. E. J. Connelly, pastor of St. Peter's Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

We pray Thee, O God of might, wisdom, and justice, through whom authority is rightly administered, laws are enacted, and judgment decreed, assist with Thy Holy Spirit of counsel and fortitude this House of Representatives of the United States of America.

Let the light of Thy divine wisdom direct the deliberations of this honorable legislative body and shine forth in all the proceedings and laws framed for our rule and government so that they may tend to the preservation of peace, the promotion of national happiness, the increase of industry, sobriety, and useful knowledge, and may perpetuate to us the blessings of equal liberty. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, June 24, 1937, was read and approved.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7206. An act to permit the temporary entry into the United States under certain conditions of alien participants and officials of the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts Silver Jubilee Camp to be held in the United States in 1937; and

H. J. Res. 375. Joint resolution to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5394. An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2661. An act granting the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Maine and New Hampshire for the creation of the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority;

S. 2662. An act authorizing the Maine-New Hampshire Interstate Bridge Authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Piscataqua River at or near Portsmouth, State of New Hampshire;

S. 2681. An act to authorize the construction of the Colorado-Big Thompson project as a Federal reclamation project; and

S. J. Res. 164. Joint resolution to amend the joint resolution establishing the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, approved May 23, 1928, as amended.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL MANAGER ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker be authorized to appoint an additional manager on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6692) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Chair appoint an additional manager on the part of the House on the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6692). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] as the additional member of the conference committee, and the Clerk will notify the Senate thereof.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address I delivered on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative business, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes following the previous orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, one of the most shocking incidents that has taken place in some time is the suggestion of the Secretary of Labor to the Governor of Ohio that he use the subpena power of the State to put certain steel industry officials under duress and to close their plants by the State militia and maintain that status until the C. I. O. had extracted from them such contracts as it might desire.

If such an urge had come from any other member of the Cabinet or from any other responsible official of the Government, there would be a dozen resolutions offered here this morning asking for immediate investigation.

While we did not need this statement to know that the Secretary approves of the use of violence under some circumstances, we were not prepared to expect the advocacy of duress and extortion from one standing so high in the service of the Government.

Is it to be understood, Mr. Speaker, that this is an open declaration of war on the constitutional rights of the citizen? Is the Government to join hands with certain lawless labor groups in not only seizing the property of the employer but the person of the employer as well, and holding both until the employer surrenders all rights in having anything to do with the management of his own property? Whence come such doctrines as these? Are they not entirely foreign to our American way of doing things?

Mr. Speaker, this is no time for the suspension of public laws, but it is a time for rigid enforcement if this Government is to survive. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5996) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1938, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. On amendment no. 141: Correcting a total.

On amendment no. 151: Authorizing that credit be allowed in the accounts of the District of Columbia for certain disbursements made from the appropriation "Refund of erroneously paid taxes, District of Columbia."

ROSS A. COLLINS,
MILLARD F. CALDWELL,
JOE STARNES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. RICH. What is the total amount of this bill to date, after the report of the conferees?

Mr. COLLINS. The amount of the bill as agreed to by the conferees is $45,915,641, which is $680,000 below the Budget.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman realizes that is about $700,000 more than the bill carried when it passed the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes; about $700,000.

Mr. RICH. As the bill passed the House it was $45,228,224, and if it carries $45,915,641 now, it shows an increase of about $700,000.

Mr. COLLINS. The Senate increased it $1,513,000, and the House decreased the Senate figures by $689,000.

Mr. RICH. The fact of the matter is that it is an increase over what it was when the bill left the House.

Mr. COLLINS. Yes; it is about a 50-50 division.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States says that we are going to economize on the 1938 Budget. I call the attention of the gentleman and Members of the House to what the status of the Treasury is now and to the appropriations for 1938, to show that they are in excess of what they were for 1937. The receipts up to June 23 this year have been $5,192,836,572, while the expenditures have been $7,967,861,267. Up to June 23 of this year you have spent $2,775,024,694 more than you have received as per Treasury statement. This does not take into effect the revolving funds spent this year not accounted for in the Treasury statement amounting to over $998,000,000, which makes the deficit on the year of over $3,770,000,000. Your appropriations for 1938 are in excess of your appropriations for 1937. If you talk about trying to economize, and if you figure you are going to get a balanced Budget, you are never going to get them and do the things you are now doing.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the Members want to hear this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman refuses to yield further.

Mr. RICH. The House ought to get this information; they need it, and they do not like to hear it because it makes them feel bad; would that they would take it to heart. Where will they get the money?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to agree to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 8, strike out "$136,700, of which $10,000 shall be available immediately for examination of estimates of appropriations, and for other purposes."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "$131,700, of which $5,000 shall be available without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and civil-service requirements for examination of estimates of appropriations and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 21: Page 8, line 21, insert "Minimum Wage Board."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 21, and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 22: Page 8, after line 21, insert: "For personal services in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, $12,170."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 22, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"For personal services, including not to exceed $2,500 for the secretary of the Board, $8,040."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is this an increase in salary for some official of the Government?

Mr. COLLINS. No; the Senate proposed certain salaries in the Minimum Wage Board, including a clerk and stenographer and secretary, and so on. The House conferees insisted that the figures were too high, and they were reduced by about one-half.

Mr. RICH. Did the conferees on the part of the House agree to all proposals that the gentleman is submitting here?

Mr. COLLINS. Every proposal incorporated in this report is the unanimous report of the Senate and House conferees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 23: Page 8, after line 23, insert: "For contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including purchase of equipment, printing and binding, office equipment, telephone rental, postage, and other necessary items, $2,150."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 23 and agree to the same with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 23 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"For equipment, transportation, and other necessary expenses, $575."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 34: Page 13, line 14, insert: "Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the payment of advertising in newspapers published outside of the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the requirement for such advertising provided by existing law."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 34: Page 13, after line 22, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the payment of advertising the delinquent tax list for more than once a week for 2 weeks in the regular issue of one morning or one evening newspaper published in the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the provisions of existing law."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 55: Page 25, after the word "twelve", in line 24, insert "and including $10,000 for health and physical education teachers to supervise play in schools of the central area, bounded by North Capitol Street on the east, Florida Avenue on the north, the Mall on the south, and Twelfth Street on the west."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 56: Page 26, line 5, strike out "$7,157,820" and insert "$7,223,220."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 56, and agree to the same with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLINS moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment no. 56 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$7,165,820."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 76: Page 36, after line 15, insert the following:

"For the erection of a junior high school building on a portion of the site of the existing Banneker Playground, $200,000, of which sum $15,217 shall be available for the preparation of plans, specifications, and administration, and the Commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such building at a cost not to exceed $724,650."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRAY of Indiana and Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

FISHERIES OF ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5860) making further provision for the fisheries of Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this bill is on the Consent Calendar. Why is there any particular reason for it being called up at this time?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, this is an emergency matter, because the fishing season is at hand and the House must pass the bill immediately to do any good this year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Just what does this bill do?

Mr. DIMOND. It is for the benefit of the natives of one part of Alaska. It limits fishing by set nets to the residents of that region and it gives the residents, particularly the Indians and Eskimos, a chance to make a little needed money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved June 6, 1924, entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes" (43 Stat. 464), as amended, is further amended by inserting in said section at the end of the first proviso thereof another proviso to read as follows: "Provided further, That in the area embracing Bristol Bay and the arms and tributaries thereof, no person shall at any time fish for or take salmon with a stake net or set net, for commercial purposes, unless such person shall have theretofore continuously resided for the period of at least 5 years within a radius of 30 miles of the place where such net is staked or set."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, Bristol Bay is a large bay indenting the southwestern side of the Territory of Alaska and opening into Bering Sea. It is the site of what is probably the greatest red-salmon fishery in the world and produces annually approximately 1,200,000 cases of red salmon containing 48 pounds to the case.

As I have heretofore indicated this bill is designed to provide a larger opportunity for the residents of the Bristol Bay region, and particularly for the native residents of that district, to earn a living in the great salmon fishery there carried on.

Two methods of fishing are employed to catch the Bristol Bay salmon: one involves the use of drift nets operated by boats and not attached to the shore; and the other involves the use of stake or set nets, one end of each of which is tied to the shore and thence extends out at right angles to the shore into the shallow tidal waters of the bay but not beyond the low-water mark therein. Under present regulations no stake or set net may be longer than 50 fathoms and stake or set nets may not be set within 450 feet of each other. During the year 1936 approximately 410 stake nets were operated in the Bristol Bay region and they caught about 3½ percent of all of the salmon taken in the district—the remaining 96½ percent having been caught by drift nets. The operation of stake or set nets is a simple one and can readily be performed by elderly people or even by women who are unable to undertake the more laborious and hazardous method of fishing with drift nets. For many of the residents of the region fishing by stake or set nets is the only way for them of making a living.

More than 1,000 fishermen from the United States go to Bristol Bay each year to engage in salmon fishing and they return to the States at the end of the short salmon fishing season. Some of the fishermen from the States, being more aggressive than the natives, have tended in recent years more and more to drive the natives from stake- or set-net fishing. While the income derived from the operation of any stake or set net is very small, the fishermen from the States frequently locate stake or set nets and then hire someone to operate the same while they personally engage in the more lucrative drift-net fishing. The operator of a stake net will probably not earn more than $250 in a season, while the average fisherman using a drift net is likely to earn at least five times that amount.

This legislation is highly desirable for the subsistence of some of the residents of the Bristol Bay region, and particularly for the native residents thereof. Without an opportunity to engage in fishing by stake or set nets some of these people have no method whatever of earning sufficient money to provide themselves with food and clothing. The bill under consideration is in harmony with the policy and purpose of the Government in promoting and aiding in the education, medical relief, and economic well-being of the natives of Alaska and in assisting in the establishment of permanent homes in the Territory.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR THE YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. ROBINSON of Utah, and Mr. CRAWFORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution recently adopted by the United Government employees on the death of our late beloved and distinguished colleague, William P. Connery, Jr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, during the 20 years I have been a Member of this body this is the first time I have ever asked unanimous consent to address the House. I want to break that record this morning and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I am not going to object to my colleague on the Rules Committee speaking this morning, because he makes the request so seldom, but I intend to object to any other similar request this morning, because we have important legislation to consider.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time that I may call to the attention of the Congress and the country, and especially to the notice of the Department of Justice a certain unusual and disgraceful species of racketeering that has been going on recently in Tennessee, and doubtless similar hijacking has been and is being practiced throughout the country.

According to a story printed under bold headlines on the front page of the Nashville Banner, a Democratic newspaper, in its issue of June 17 last, one Col. Lester F. Kimbrell, "blew" into Nashville week before last and proceeded to call to his hotel a number of Nashville businessmen who had furnished material to or had obtained contracts from the W. P. A. or other Government agencies. After being naively reminded of the business they had received from the W. P. A. and other Federal alleged relief agencies, and also significantly informed that there would soon be additional funds for Federal distribution, these businessmen were told that as a representative of the President, Mr. Farley, and the Democratic National Committee, he had been commissioned to contact them, as beneficiaries of Federal relief funds, and take their orders for the "Democratic handbook", to be autographed by no less a personage than the President of the United States, at the "insignificant" price of $250 apiece. These businessmen were informed that their names were on a list which was "on the desk of the President and in the hands of Mr. Farley." Thereupon the suave colonel politely told them that their quota of books was in proportion to the Government business each had enjoyed, ranging from two to eight books, or from $500 to $2,000.

According to the Banner, the urbane colonel told each of those he contacted that if they would sign on the dotted line, he "would be of service to them in the matter of future favor." The Banner also stated that only persons and concerns that had done business with the W. P. A. and other Federal facilities were contacted.

It is not known just how much money the ingenious colonel extracted or, rather, extorted, from Nashville businessmen, but he carried on his nefarious racket in Tennessee's capital city for a week, when he departed for Memphis to shear other innocent lambs.

On his way to Nashville the colonel, or one of his accomplices, stopped over in Knoxville, where the same tactics were employed in an attempt to hijack a number of Knoxville businessmen who had had Government contracts or furnished Federal projects material. I have it on unimpeachable authority that this Knoxville hijacker stopped at the Andrew Johnson Hotel, where he summoned by telephone those whom he was sent there to fleece. His demands in Knoxville ranged from $500 to $1,500 per person. In Knoxville, after the usual reminder of the business he had received through the beneficent instrumentality of W. P. A. and other Federal facilities, and after the tempting picture of future favors were dangled before him, the victim was informed of the amount he was assessed and expected to contribute. To verify his identity and authority, the "colonel" suggested that they could call a certain number in Washington. This was done, I understand, and the Washington "number" promptly replied that "the colonel" was duly and fully authorized.

Mr. Speaker, such dastardly skullduggery as I have described is not only the very essence of villainy but is a clear violation of both the letter and the spirit of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act. Of course, this campaign book pretext is not even a clever subterfuge. A political campaign book at this time would be just about as valuable and interesting as a last year's Barker's Almanac.

Mr. Speaker, I denounce this conduct as downright immoral and utterly reprehensible. It is cold-blooded graft of the purest ray serene. Of course, the so-called colonel is only a tool of the higher-ups who deserve the contempt and execoration of all decent people. Al Capone in his palmiest days would have scorned to condescend to such arrant, cowardly, and contemptible conduct; and Jesse James would have considered it unworthy of his code of ethics and a reflection on his sense of sportsmanship.

Mr. Speaker, if conduct such as this is to go unchallenged, justice becomes a mockery and graft masquerades under the cloak of manly virtue. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the great Democratic Party has not degenerated to so low a state that it finds it necessary to resort to methods of coercion and extortion to raise funds to carry on and meet its financial obligations.

Here and now, I call upon the Department of Justice to investigate this outrageous and scandalous practice; and if requested to do so, I shall be glad to furnish the Attorney General's office with pertinent information bearing on this shameful and unsavory affair. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my own remarks on the same subject on two separate occasions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6523) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5394) entitled "An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. WAGNER, and Mr. NYE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5996) entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes", and agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate nos. 9, 22, 23, 56, 90, 92, 114, 132, 141, and 151 to said bill.

FARM-TENANCY BILL

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 261 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 261

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7562, a bill to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half the time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution is a rule for the consideration of the farm-tenancy bill. It is an open rule, providing for 3 hours of general debate, to be confined to the bill, and providing for amendment. All points of order are waived by the rule.

In the consideration of this bill we are beginning, I believe, the solution of one of the serious problems of our country. This is another bill providing for social security for a class of men and women who live upon our farms. The measure provides for the lending of money to farm tenants, to sharecroppers, and to laborers on farms, preference being given to married people, for the purchase of homes under a 30-year amortization plan at 3-percent interest.

This is another bill looking to the relief of the underprivileged, people who have not had the opportunity many of us believe they should have. The measure provides an authorization for the first year of $10,000,000, for the second year of $25,000,000, and for the third year of $50,000,000. There may be many people who believe we should start at a larger figure, and this amount, of course, is a very small appropriation with which to undertake the solution of such a large problem. However, the committee worked faithfully on this proposed legislation, and believed it proper to start with a modest amount and proceed cautiously and carefully in the program, which, to begin with, is more or less experimental. If at the end of that time we find that relief has been brought to the people on the farms in the purchase of homes, I feel sure we will have started a long-distance program which future Congresses will maintain.

Somewhere I received statistics to the effect that there are 6,288,000 farms in America, with a population of more than 32,000,000 people. Slightly less than one-half the people on these farms live on tenant farms. Every State of the Union has such a problem. Maine has 4½ percent of its farms cultivated by tenants. Mississippi has 72 percent. It is claimed the State of Iowa has the highest percentage of its farm lands in cultivation, yet in Iowa slightly less than one-half, about 49 percent, of the farms are cultivated by tenant farmers, sharecroppers, or hired hands.

This measure is to relieve the problem of farm tenancy, which is Nation-wide. The committee believes, and the idea was conveyed in the message of the President of the United States to Congress, that the problem could not be solved by any single State, but is a national problem. I believe in this proposed legislation we are beginning a long-distance program which will help to build future security for the men and women who live on the farms, by enabling them to own their own homes.

We have, through the Federal land banks, assisted farmers who were in debt and subject to foreclosure to save their farms. We have, through the Home Owners' Corporation, assisted the home owners in the cities and towns to save their homes. This measure goes one step further, and is intended to assist people who have not owned land but have been engaged in cultivating land and in helping to produce the food of the Nation and the raw materials which clothe the Nation. Through this measure we seek to assist the underprivileged people who have not had an opportunity, because of the depression or perhaps for other reasons, to own their farm homes. We want to assist them in this humble way in the beginning, but look to a long-distance program where more of the farms of our Nation can be owned by the men and women who cultivate them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes, I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the amount of money paid by these tenant farmers during the years the bill is in effect be less or greater than the amount they are now paying for the same farms?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I have not figured that out, but if the payments are the same and this contributes to the ownership of the farms by the men and women who cultivate them, I think it is a very helpful proposition.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am in sympathy with the proposition, but my idea is that if the farmers cannot pay the rent now as tenant farmers, how could they pay greater amounts if they owned the farms?

Mr. GREENWOOD. We are not assuming they cannot pay the rent. All sharecroppers have to pay the rent, because the landlord takes his part. Of course, they pay the rent.

In a democracy like this we believe in private ownership of property, which is the opposite of communism and socialism. This measure looks toward a true American democracy and the establishment of a standard of individual home ownership. I believe the future of our Nation and the destiny of our Nation hang on the decision we make here today with respect to the future ownership of farms.

The men and women working on these farms are worthy people. They produce the food and the raw material of our Nation. They create the wealth of the Nation, but they have not always shared in a proper way in the distribution of this wealth. This measure is to assist them in owning the land which they cultivate.

We should begin now to right this wrong and give these faithful working people an opportunity to own their homes. Besides, the fertility of the soil of the Nation is being destroyed by the sharecropper and by following the rental method, because every year they attempt to pull from the soil the largest crop that is possible because next year they do not know whether they will be located there or somewhere else.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. To what extent will this bill provide funds for helping tenant farmers in the various districts; in other words, how many of them will be helped by this measure?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Not very many in the beginning, although I have not figured that out. As I have said, this is a humble or modest beginning. We should proceed cautiously as the program unfolds, with $10,000,000 the first year, $25,000,000 the second year, and $50,000,000 the third year. There can be no limitation on the future, and if Congress finds the program is working out satisfactorily, the amount can be increased from time to time.

Title II of the bill continues the rehabilitation program. Since the President is to allot money from relief funds for the rehabilitation and resettlement program, we may assume that the present program will be continued, and that the present unexpended balances in the fund will be used for the purpose of lending the farmers money to purchase livestock and equipment, to provide family subsistence, and help them compose their debts or refinance their debts, so they may continue to live on the farms and support their families. This title of the bill continues a relief that I believe has been of great advantage to the poorer class of farmers, those who cannot receive credit through regular channels.

Title III provides an authorization of $10,000,000 the first year, $20,000,000 the second year, and $20,000,000 the third year, or $50,000,000 in all, for the purchase and retirement of submarginal land, to take it out of cultivation, to build up a soil-conservation and reforestation program and mitigate floods and help preserve the wildlife, which program is now under way.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. The gentleman has not touched upon what is in my own mind. Does this bill provide for the establishment of a new agency to administer these particular functions?

Mr. GREENWOOD. It does not provide for the establishment of a new agency. This will be under the Secretary of Agriculture, and the allotting of these loans will be done by a local committee, practically without any expense.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It seems to me that, in view of the fact the land-retirement program has been going on or has been set up for the past 3 years, there ought to be a larger amount, at least, appropriated for this purpose in order to get this land out of alleged cultivation as rapidly as possible.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I agree with the gentleman that this is a very important program; but the gentleman from Colorado understands that there are great demands being made upon the administration and the Federal Government, not only along this line but along many others, including one billion and a half dollars for relief; and for this reason these appropriations, I am sure, are not quite as large as some of us would like to see them.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I understand that, and I appreciate all that has been done; but I believe they might get rid of some of their burdens if they would spend more of the money retiring the land from alleged cultivation.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I agree with the gentleman, and I am in sympathy with that program.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. There are already agencies of the Government buying submarginal land. Does this bill supersede those agencies or will this work be done in conjunction with them? I do not quite understand the relationship.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think the work will be done in conjunction with the existing agencies, but the chairman of the committee can give the gentleman that information.

Mr. JONES. The agency referred to is established by Executive order and that order automatically expires on June 30.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. In relation to the question I asked a moment ago, I notice under title IV, the Secretary of Agriculture is to establish in the Department of Agriculture a Farm Security Administration to assist him in the exercise of the powers and the carrying out of the duties imposed by this act. I thought perhaps that was a provision for setting up some new agencies and alloting some administrative expenses to such agencies.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I take it the old agencies that have been administering title II and title III will be merged under the Secretary of Agriculture with any new agency that may be established. I do not contemplate this bill will be any more expensive in the future than it has been in the past.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. I should like to state to the gentleman that the theory of the proposition as laid out in this bill sounds all right to me, but I do not want us to build up some other bureau in order to do the work, because I think we have a sufficient number of such organizations now.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I agree with the gentleman. I want to see as much of the appropriation as possible go to the farm tenants and croppers.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The first four lines of subsection (b), page 2, challenged my attention, because I notice that only aid is to be given to those who recently obtained the major portion of their income from farming operations. I wonder if the Committee took into consideration how recently or how long a person had to be so engaged?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Would the gentleman mind propounding that question to the Chairman of the Committee after we go into Committee of the Whole? He can tell the gentleman how far the Committee considered that matter.

Mr. DONDERO. If the gentleman will permit one further question, was any consideration given to the question of whether a man had been a success or a failure throughout the years of his tenancy?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is to be handled by the local committees set up in each county and passing upon the responsibility and worthiness of each applicant who asks for a loan.

Mr. Speaker, I think this program will appeal to everyone, even in the city, who likes to see the ownership of homes by the people of America. I voted for every one of the measures that would loan money to the home owners to help save their homes from foreclosure. I am very heartily in favor of this legislation which will set up an agency to help more people to own their homes—people who are worthy, passed upon by local committees—to obtain assistance over a long period of time, to help build up and strengthen the security of the home.

The soil is the foundation of this Nation, as it is of every nation, and when the soil is destroyed and the men and women who cultivate the soil reach a stage of peasantry, of peonage, or of servitude, I have never found any precedent in history where that nation is not started on a decline when that situation prevails. Home ownership then makes for the security of our Nation, makes for contentment, for the confidence of the people. Home ownership is the sweetest and most cherished privilege of the human family. The future of our Nation must be built upon our homes.

In conclusion I want to give you a thought that was written by a very distinguished poet a few decades ago. The farmers of England formerly lived in villages and went out and farmed their land. This sweet singer, Oliver Goldsmith, left his old home and went to other parts, and later came back and found that the old homes had been deserted by his old neighbors, friends, and relatives. It touched his heart, and he wrote that magnificent poem called the Deserted Village. He expressed it so beautifully that I want to give you a few lines of that poem:

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.
> Princes and lords may flourish or may fade—
> A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
> But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
> When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will help to preserve the homes on the farms and will help to build a future civilization of home owners, and while it is a modest beginning, I think it is a move in the right direction, and I believe the rule should be adopted and the bill passed. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to myself, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, no one can quarrel with the splendid idealism which prompts the advocacy of this measure. The plight of the tenant farmer cannot fail to arouse the sympathy of anyone genuinely interested in the welfare of the so-called "under dog." No one would like to aid him any more than would I, if there were a real chance to do so.

It is disturbing when you realize there are 2,800,000 tenant farmers in the country, or 42.1 percent of the entire farming population. It is disturbing when you learn the tenant farmers are increasing at the rate of 40,000 every year. Happily, the percentage of tenant farmers in my section, New England, is not so large. In Massachusetts it is only 6.2, the smallest ratio of any State in the Union; in Rhode Island it is 13.8; Maine, 6.9; Connecticut, 7.3; New Hampshire, 7.3; and Vermont, 10.9.

There is a real tenant-farmer problem. That fact cannot be disputed. However, we must be careful not to hold forth a glistening mirage to these unfortunate men and women which cannot become a reality. A disappointment would be cruel and leave permanently behind an embittered population which would be easy prey for the radical agitator.

The question is, Will this legislation eventually bring permanent improvement to these unfortunate people, or will it simply be the bailing out of some farm owners with political pull at the cost of a heavy drain upon the Treasury? Everyone knows the conditions in the agricultural industry; billions of dollars have been expended by the Government to keep the industry alive.

I am wondering if because of this fact we would be doing anyone any good to put him in a business which is as bad off as the agricultural industry without adequate resources. Might it not mean simply the Government being obliged to take over huge tracts of farming land? I hope that phase will be given some consideration in discussing the bill.

That the experiment is to be launched on a modest scale is admitted. The appropriation the first year will be $10,000,000. If the new agency to be created is to be as expensive as the Resettlement Bureau, there is not going to be very much left for the tenant farmer. The bulk will go for political jobs, as I note the civil-service requirement is carefully omitted. Even if by some miracle the administration costs are modest, there is going to be very little available.

There are about 3,000 counties in the country. A little arithmetic reveals, with administration cost held down to 10 percent—almost unbelievable—this would mean $3,000 for each county. Any farm which would provide a decent living for a family would cost $5,000.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The average cost of the farms set up by the Resettlement Administration was between $7,000 and $7,500.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That makes it a little worse, as I have worked out my arithmetic on the basis of $5,000. So at least half the counties in the country must go without if the other counties get one farm each. A $100,000,000 annual appropriation would take care of only 20,000 tenant farmers and you will recall there are 2,800,000.

Frankly, I am wondering if this means any real help; if it means only disappointment to the impoverished tenant farmer, who will be told in glowing language of the great help he is to receive from his Government. The average tenant farmer has as much chance of getting aid as the average purchaser of a ticket to win the English Sweepstakes.

Of course I understand the reason for the small amount to be authorized. The Treasury is in no condition to embark upon new expenditures of billions as this will require before any material good will be done.

The President last April in one of his rare economy moments; that is, when he talks of economy, said: "No expansion of Government activities should be authorized unless the necessity for such expansion has been definitely determined and funds are available to defray the costs." These words of Mr. Roosevelt unquestionably meant it was sound policy to provide the revenue for new expenditures.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. DIES. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to what I consider a very unjust provision in this bill. This permits the Secretary to buy land subject to any reservation, any outstanding estate, any interest, or easement. In my congressional district the Government is buying land and permitting the landowner to reserve all mineral rights. That is all he wants. A few years ago they were willing to give away the surface rights if they could retain the mineral rights and escape taxation. Does not the gentleman believe that when the Government buys land, the Government should have the mineral rights as well as the surface rights?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There is no question about that. The mineral rights should go to the Government, because I think if the gentleman will look up the purchases in his district he will find the Government paid twice as much as originally paid by the lumber company for the land.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield for another question at that point?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Also the Government buys this land and the local taxing units lose the source of revenue necessary to operate their schools and their local government. How are we helping the people when we take away from them the means of taxation to support their schools and their local government?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is stating a problem that is causing a great deal of worry these days, and it will be an increasing problem in the years ahead.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. JONES. On the question of reservation of mineral rights, I should like to call attention to section 44, which stipulates that the Government shall retain not less than one-half of the mineral rights when it disposes of any land.

Mr. DIES. But that is when the Government disposes of the land. What they are doing now is buying the land that people are glad to get rid of and paying three or four dollars an acre, and then the individual retains all the mineral rights; and it is absolutely wrong and it is wrong from the Government's point.

Mr. JONES. That is not the purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If my memory serves me right, the President vetoed the soldiers' bonus-payment bill because the bill did not provide for the revenue to finance the same. However, consistency is not particularly a great virtue and he may decide differently in this instance.

Unquestionably this experiment will eventually cost the taxpayer billions of dollars. Could not the money be better expended in some way which would lift up the entire agricultural industry? Make the industry prosperous and the worth-while tenant farmer will have the opportunity of becoming a landowner. It would appear to me we must first rehabilitate the industry and then we can more easily with reasonable cost devote ourselves to lifting the individual.

In other words, I question if it is practical to spend the money at a time when failure is almost certain. I should like to see this great social experiment attempted, and I am quite sympathetic toward it in due time when there is a reasonable chance for success. I seriously question if this is the propitious time.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLDEN. Does not the gentleman believe that the limitation to only farm tenants and farm laborers and sharecroppers is a discrimination against the man who has left the farm and is now working in industry and would like to go back to the farm?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It might readily be the energetic man who left the farm and went to the city might, if financed, make a much better risk than the man who stays on the farm and has not had the initiative to get ahead in life.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it is admitted that the most recent statistics from the Department of Agriculture show that there has been a tremendous decrease in the farm population during the last 12 or 15 months, caused primarily by increasing production and increasing wages in industry. If this is to continue, there will be few people left who will want to go back to the farm, especially when wages of $10, $15, and $20 a day are now being paid for factory workers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those men who subscribe to any idealistic theory to the effect that farm tenancy can ever be completely abolished, because of fundamental differences in the capabilities of human beings and the physical conditions of the various sections of our Nation. Even though we may not be able to abolish farm tenancy in the United States, this bill is a step in the right direction. Nor am I one of those men who are alarmed about the cost, because, if you will read title I of this bill—and that is the important feature of the bill, in my opinion, as supplemented by the subsequent sections—you will see that if the tenant has that stability of character, that permanency of purpose, that approved integrity that the local committee finds and which are absolutely necessary for any man to possess to be able to own a farm and to conduct a farm successfully, the ultimate cost to the Government will be negligible, because the money loaned will be repaid. The bill does open the door of hope to those who earnestly desire to purchase a home. It is the establishment of a policy of helpfulness to a class of citizens who need help and who will make good if given the chance.

It is true that we are providing only $10,000,000 as an initial expenditure, but may I call attention to the history of Denmark. In 1899 Denmark launched a modest program of farm tenancy, but that nation today has a good comprehensive program that is fast eliminating farm tenancy. We should do likewise; we should feel our way and profit by experience. The President, in his message of February 16, 1937, said:

> It will be wise to start the permanent program on a scale commensurate with our resources and experience, with the purpose of later expanding the program to a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the problem as rapidly as our experience and resources will permit.

Title I of this bill gives to that worthy tenant some ray of hope that the Government is willing to lend its credit to him to help him become a farm owner in this Nation. The fight that is confronting the House today, the fight that is confronting this Nation—and that is the reason why I am in favor of title I—is to prevent the further regimentation of agriculture. [Applause.]

There are those, of course, who believe, and who are conscientious in the belief, that the Government should in the first instance purchase the land, that the Government should exercise some kind of surveillance or some kind of supervision over these tenants, that the Government should place them on probation. I am opposed to such a program. The citizen should be permitted as much freedom as possible. The loan should be given him as a free man and not as an indentured workman. Give him a chance to make good. Let him exercise his own individuality and independence of thought and he will become not only a better citizen but he will meet his obligation and become in fact a home owner. The county committee provided for in the bill will know which man is entitled from the standpoint of character, integrity, ability, and permanency of purpose and desire to be aided. In this way the program can be successfully carried out.

I do not want to see title I amended. Just as far as I can I want to take out of our agricultural program supervision by the bureaucrats of Washington. I am perfectly willing to admit that there has been an increase in farm tenancy in recent years but this increase is not directly caused by inability or the lack of desire on the part of the men to own land, it has been brought about because of depressing times and financial conditions, but pass this bill, establish the principle and continue the legislation giving to the producers of agricultural products a reasonable economic protection under the law, and farm tenancy will decrease as the years go by.

The President further said in his message of February 16, 1937:

> The attack on the problem of farm tenancy and farm security is a logical continuation of the agricultural program this administration has been developing since March 4, 1933. Necessarily, whatever program the Congress devises will have to be closely integrated with existing activities for maintaining farm income and for conserving and improving our agricultural resources.

The landowners have benefited greatly by the agricultural program which the Congress under the leadership of our great President has heretofore enacted, but the benefits received by the tenants have not at all times been commensurate with their real interest or in accord with equitable principles. The launching of this program by our Government, if it can be kept free from speculation in land values and domination by book farmers and theorists residing in Washington and living in musty libraries, will be and does constitute the dawning of a new day for that great class of citizens who have within them the desire to create and own a home.

I realize that this bill differs from the Senate bill, but there is danger in the Senate bill. It will tend to place the man who desires to avail himself of the benefits of the bill under the domination and control of a class of people that have done enough injury to agriculture already. I know many farm tenants in my own district who are more capable of operating a farm successfully than are the bureaucrats. I should like for those tenants to have an opportunity to obtain a loan and to buy a farm and I do not want them to be humiliated by the dictatorial requirements that might be made under a bill such as the Senate bill or under amendments that will be proposed to this bill. The real friend of agriculture and of the farm tenants in this country will vote against any effort or proposed amendment that materially changes title I of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this legislation apparently is a compromise that will do very little good for the farmers except in a few sections of the South. It only carries an authorization for $10,000,000. If we were actually going to do something for the tenant farmers throughout the country it would require anywhere from one billion to fifteen billion dollars. If we were to solve the farm-tenancy problem, it would cost many billions of dollars.

I do not propose to oppose this bill because in principle I think it is correct and it probably makes a small start along the avenue of trial and error and there may be something to it. I want to point out, however, that here we are with this sort of half-baked compromise bill affecting a major problem which has to do with the welfare of two million tenant farmers of America. It seems to me this is a very valid reason why the Members of the Congress should begin to make up their minds that we are approaching the time for the adjournment of the Congress.

If we are to proceed with this kind of legislation, compromise, and half-baked measures, carrying out partially just a few of the promises that were made, we should quit now. It seems to me this applies to all legislation that will come before this Congress in the closing days of the session, whether it is the reorganization bill, the hours-and-wages bill, the compromise Court bill, or other great issues. For one, I believe it is to the interest of the country—in this case the farmers, who want something more than one-tenth of a loaf—and it is of interest to those favoring the enactment of constructive legislation and the Members themselves that we adjourn before we are swamped with partial, inadequate, and badly considered legislation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. If the gentleman were writing the farm-tenancy legislation, will he point out in his remarks just what changes he would make in this bill?

Mr. FISH. I only have 5 minutes, which is not sufficient even to make observations.

Mr. McFARLANE. Anyone can criticize, but it takes brains to make a better article.

Mr. FISH. I want to know from the gentleman whether this bill covers the tenant farmers up in my district in Dutchess County, N. Y. I have a very distinguished absentee landlord who owns a farm at Hyde Park, N. Y., and I should like to know what my farmer constituents in Dutchess County will get out of this bill, because I know what you are going to get out of it in the Southern States. This bill is for the southern tenant farmers. I want to know whether it is going to take care of the tenant farmers in my district, particularly at Hyde Park.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No. I am not going to take up the remaining minutes of my time on that, although I could do it and do it pretty well, if I cared to discuss the farm operations of a certain estate in Hyde Park, N. Y., which is being run at a loss according to the tax returns.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman asked a question. Let me answer it.

Mr. FISH. I want to know, under the provisions of this bill, whether we are going to be taken care of up North and whether the tenant farmers of Dutchess County will receive an equal treatment with those of Arkansas and Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. This bill applies to all sections of the country alike, even to the farm of Franklin D. Roosevelt's mother, to which the gentleman referred in his remarks a few days ago.

Mr. FISH. I also want to know what an absentee landlord is? I want to know whether a man is an absentee landlord if he is away from his farm for 6 months. I see no definition of an absentee owner or absentee landlord in this bill. How can you apply it? The purpose of this bill is to take care of tenant farmers, but I do not see how you can apply any rule unless you define an absentee landlord or absentee owner.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman let me answer that question?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman could not answer it.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think perhaps we better keep the gentleman down here.

Mr. FISH. I might help you on the bill if I was assured that my tenant farmers would also be benefited.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Members have just returned from a revival meeting at Jefferson Island, where they have got religion.

Mr. MILLS. Salvation, the gentleman means.

Mr. FISH. I want to know when the President will permit us to adjourn this Congress and whether we will have to continue to vote on half-baked legislation of this kind, that actually carries out no promises to anybody, before we will be allowed to adjourn.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Or whether we are going to stay here until Labor Day to vote for more compromise and half-baked legislation. Why not adjourn within the next 30 days and put the committees to work next December on reorganization, hours and labor, housing, and other important bills, so that we will have real legislation before us when we meet next January? If this bill is typical of what is coming from now until adjournment, I suggest we adjourn within the next 30 days, or by July 31.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman asked the question as to when we were going to adjourn.

Mr. FISH. That is right.

Mr. WALTER. We will adjourn just as soon as the legislative program that the gentleman is trying so hard to obstruct is enacted into law.

Mr. FISH. Evidently the gentleman is for the Court bill. May I say to the gentleman I should like to have a vote in this House on the Court bill and put some of you Members, like the gentleman who has just spoken, on record as to whether you want to commit political suicide or not. [Applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. What is the gentleman hollering about? He is going to have plenty of opportunity to be put on record.

Mr. FISH. This bill is a sham.

Mr. McFARLANE. In what particular is it a sham?

Mr. FISH. It provides $10,000,000 to solve a problem that would require at least $10,000,000,000 to adequately solve.

Mr. McFARLANE. Point out wherein the bill is a sham.

Mr. FISH. I am going to vote for this sham bill. [Laughter and applause.] I am going to vote for this sham bill because there is no other bill before the House and because of the assurances given by the gentleman from Texas that it will enable the tenant farmers of Dutchess County and Hyde Park to buy the farms they now rent. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]; and may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] to yield the gentleman from Texas 5 minutes?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas 5 minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, after I had asked for this time I found that my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] had given thorough and exhaustive study to this question; so, with the permission of the House, I am going to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not claim to be an expert on the question of farm tenancy, but I have given some study to it, and I thank my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Texas for yielding to me at this moment.

The Committee on Agriculture, which has no superior in the House, is to be congratulated for bringing in a farm-tenancy bill. I have the highest regard for the committee, and my admiration for the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from my home State [Mr. JONES], knows no bounds.

It is difficult to prepare a satisfactory bill on the subject. The members of the committee will not claim that this is a perfect bill, and I agree with them. There is nothing which I favor more strongly than an adequate farm-tenancy bill, and my object in opposing certain features of this bill is to try to improve the plan proposed and make it available to more tenants. In the first place, this bill provides for no limit on the loans which shall be made to any one farmer. The sky is the limit. Under the H. O. L. C. there is a limit; under the system of emergency crop loans there is a limit; and under the Federal land bank commissioner loans there is a limit. This practice, in my judgment, is sound government and financial policy. Therefore, I propose that we amend this bill, and I have drawn up an amendment which provides that no loan to any one applicant under this bill shall be in excess of $6,000.

In the next place, this bill provides that a loan to a tenant or other accepted applicants shall be made to the extent of 100 percent of the value of the land to be purchased. This, I think, is a mistake in beginning this program, as we wish to start out very cautiously in order to insure the success of the program. If we start this program upon an unsound basis, we will do the tenant farmers of this country irreparable injury. If the program under this bill should collapse, we would place a stumbling block in the way of farm-ownership legislation and retard progress along this line for years. I think in this bill we ought to provide that the borrower, in order to take advantage of the aid offered in the bill, must put up at least 5 percent of the purchase price of the farm he buys, which would be $250 on a $5,000 farm. In other words, we would not lend more than 95 percent of the value of the farm. This would not be too restrictive for the tenant and would be better policy for the Government. I believe the tenant would be better satisfied with an initial equity in the farm purchased. It would give him a pride of ownership in his own right. Otherwise, he might feel that he was on a semirelief basis and a client of the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. If the gentleman will pardon me for just a minute, I shall yield later.

The most serious objection I have to the bill in the form in which it is drawn, and it can be corrected by amendment, is that it turns over this great proposed farm-credit program to the Department of Agriculture. I do not mean to imply any lack of admiration for the Department of Agriculture. I mean that the Department of Agriculture is not the proper agency to administer the act. I point out that under the able leadership of the Committee on Agriculture and its chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], the Farm Credit Administration was set up in 1933, and has lent more than $4,360,000,000 on a sound, businesslike basis. Prior to 1933 we had no credit structure which was adapted to the farmer. Ordinary bank credits had not operated so well for the average farmer and the coming of the Farm Credit Administration with its various divisions was a great thing for agriculture. We must realize that we are not able to give farms to tenants. Moreover, the tenant farmer does not want to be given a farm. He wants an opportunity to buy one under such circumstances that he can eventually pay for it. So we must understand at the outset that the tenants are going to buy the farms and are going to pay for them, because we cannot appropriate $12,000,000,000 and give it to the farmers of the Nation to buy farms. This is the amount that would be required to purchase an average-priced farm for the 2,865,000 tenant farmers of the Nation.

Therefore the key to this bill, if it is to be successful, is a good credit structure. The Farm Credit Administration, through the Federal land banks and the Land Bank Commissioner, has already lent on real estate in this country more than $3,000,000,000, and more than $2,800,000,000 is now outstanding. Of the Federal land-bank loans 87 percent are now in good standing. I can see no reason under heaven for turning over the administration of this farm-credit bill—and that is all the measure is, a farm-credit bill for tenants—to the inexperienced hands of the Department of Agriculture, insofar as credit on real estate is concerned, and turning our backs upon the Farm Credit Administration, which in the first 3 months of 1937 lent $5,000,000 to 1,000 tenants who were able to pay at least 25 percent of the value of their farms as an initial payment. If we keep this up the Farm Credit Administration, through the Federal land banks during this year, will lend $20,000,000 to 4,000 tenants for the purpose of assisting them in purchasing farm homes. You will understand that under the present laws and rules and regulations as to the Federal land banks and Land Bank Commissioner an approved applicant is permitted to borrow 75 percent of the value of a farm.

What we need is to supplement, strengthen, and liberalize the loan program now existing with regard to the Farm Credit Administration so that a man who must now put up 25 percent in order to get the benefit of credit on a farm purchase can put up a lesser percentage. This would apply only to applicants covered in this farm tenancy bill. I suggest 5 percent, and I have drawn an amendment to this effect.

I hope the House will agree with me in the opinion that this bill ought to be administered by the Farm Credit Administration, which has been in the farm-saving business, in the business of saving tenant farmers and landowners, for lo, these many years. No Member of the House can estimate how many hundreds of farmers have had their homes saved during the last 4 years by the Farm Credit Administration through the Federal land banks, Land Bank Commissioner, emergency crop loans, drought loans, production-credit loans, all of which operate under the Farm Credit Administration. Without the Farm Credit Administration during the last 4 years farm ownership in many sections would have reached the vanishing point. Three million American farmers during the last 4 years have been financed by this organization, which we are about to forsake in this bill for the Department of Agriculture. The Department is skilled in its field, but it is not skilled in the field of lending money on real estate and farm land. This work is outside the field of the Department of Agriculture. The Department has paid out in A. A. A. benefits nearly $2,000,000,000, but giving away money when it is appropriated is a different problem from lending money on a sound business basis thereby promoting home ownership and protecting the taxpayers of this Nation. [Applause.]

Further, if the administration of this bill is turned over to the Farm Credit Administration, it can start to work tomorrow in all of the 3,059 agricultural counties of the Nation. There will be no delay and there will be no tremendous overhead and great expense in setting up a new organization. There is today a National Farm Loan Association functioning in every agricultural county in the United States. These associations have a secretary-treasurer and at least five directors. These men are elected by the membership of the local farm-loan associations. The democracy of this policy cannot be questioned. But in the bill before the House the local committees in the various counties are to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture in Washington. Wherever possible, I believe in preserving the democratic principle of local responsibility of government.

These officers of the national farm-loan associations know how to appraise lands. They are familiar with local conditions and they know something about farm credit; they know how to cooperate with the Farm Credit Administration and the trained appraisers of the 12 Federal land bank regions. They have made their mistakes and have learned by trial and error. They are doing a grand job within the limitations now surrounding them. If we give them a little more rope, so they can select other borrowers who cannot comply with present regulations, as provided for in the amendment which I propose to offer, then many other deserving farmers can utilize Government credit in buying a home. Then we shall have really written into law a bill for which we shall not have to apologize when we go back home and confront the farmers of our districts.

Perhaps in the administration of this program we must in the beginning limit these loans to tenants who are best able financially to avail themselves of the opportunities offered by this act. As our experience increases and the farm-ownership program improves we can make the benefits of the act available to tenants who are less able financially. Eventually by this program we hope almost to obliterate farm tenancy in America. There are now many thousands of tenant farmers who, with a little assistance and encouragement, could take advantage of such a program and start on the happy, even though arduous, road to home ownership.

The Farm Credit Administration gets its money for financing Land Bank Commissioner loans through the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. In an amendment which I propose to offer I provide that we merely authorize the Farm Credit Administration through the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation to issue bonds to the extent to some $50,000,000 for the first year and a greater sum in following years in order to finance the purpose of this bill. No direct appropriation is necessary. These bonds are guaranteed by the United States Government. By this method we will avoid an appropriation and increase from $10,000,000 to $50,000,000 the amount of money available to promote a farm-ownership program. This is the way we have financed land banks. Why should we not finance this program in the same manner, through the same successful channels as are now being employed by the Farm Credit Administration? Therefore, it seems to me we ought to amend the first title of the bill and say simply that we will turn over the administration of this bill to the Farm Credit Administration, rather than to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I know the gentleman is a member, and a very distinguished member, of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have been a member of the committee for a good many years, and I may state that if the gentleman will talk to Dr. Myers, of the Farm Credit Administration, for 10 or 15 minutes, the gentleman may possibly find out why the administration of this bill has not been turned over to him.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I know about the attitude of Dr. Myers, Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, a distinguished member of this Administration. The fact that he opposes undertaking the administration of this measure is no reason why the great Congress of the United States should not place the responsibility where the responsibility belongs, because often the gentleman and I have to shoulder responsibilities that are not always pleasant. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAHON of Texas. With the unanimous consent of the House I here insert in the RECORD the amendments which I expect to offer when this bill, H. R. 7562, is read for amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1

On page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out the following: "The Secretary of Agriculture hereinafter referred to as the Secretary", and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The Farm Credit Administration."

AMENDMENT NO. 2

On page 2, section 1, line 7, after the word "title" and the comma, strike out all of the remainder of the sentence and insert the following: "No person shall receive a loan in excess of $6,000, nor shall he receive a loan in excess of 95 percent of the normal and reasonable value of the farm acquired by him under this title. The Farm Credit Administration shall give preference in making loans under this title to worthy and thrifty persons who appear to be good credit risks and who are married, or who have dependent families or who are owners of livestock and farming equipment necessary to successfully carry on farming operations. No person shall receive a loan for the purchase of a farm under this title who is able to finance such a purchase through the now existng laws, rules, and regulations of the Federal land bank and Land Bank Commissioner."

I expect to rephrase and to divide into several amendments the provisions of amendment no. 2 rather than offer it as here written.

AMENDMENT NO. 3
